

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

VOLUME 29 recently issued, and the Index-Digest to follow shortly, conclude the First Edition of the AMERICAN AND ENGLISH ENCYCLOPÆIA OF LAW. It is now ten years since the articles contained in Volume 1 were prepared. As the series was nearing completion it became a question as to how the work could best be kept abreast of the courts, and its value and usefulness preserved and, if possible, enhanced. There were but two methods worthy of consideration in which, by any possibility, this end could be attained: the first, by supplemental volumes, the ordinary but cumbrous and altogether unsatisfactory plan employed in continuing digests; the second, by a complete revision, issuing about three volumes annually. After mature deliberation, the latter method was resolved upon as being the more consistent with economy and convenience to the profession, and thoroughness and accuracy in the presentation of the law. It is a source of gratification to know that this course has the unqualified approval of eminent members of the bench and bar throughout the country.

In the work of revision, the plan of the original will be pursued. Each treatise will be accompanied by a logical and orderly synopsis, which will subserve the twofold purpose of indicating the scope of the title and facilitating the examination of any particular branch of the subject treated.

In connection with each treatise there will also be found a carefully prepared table of cross-references. The value and importance of this feature cannot be too highly estimated. By this means the reader is enabled to trace those parts of large and fruitful topics which, being worthy and susceptible of separate discussion, constitute independent titles; also to find other subjects more or less intimately related. It possesses the additional merit of lessening the likelihood of duplication of treatment.

The text will contain in clear and accurate form the principles of law involved, which, in the notes, will be supported by an exhaustive citation of authorities, and exemplified and fortified by concrete instances and apt quotations drawn from the cases. At the same time, theories and lengthy discussions will be studiously avoided.

In both text and notes black-letter headlines will be liberally used. The practical utility of this feature as a means of facilitating reference is patent.

The citations will be grouped by states in their alphabetical order, each list being preceded by the name of the state. This will be of great assistance to the lawyer in his search for the decisions of his own courts in the preparation of briefs. Not only are the cases of this country, both state and Federal, and of England, exhaustively collected and thus arranged, but also the adjudications of the Canadian and other Provincial courts.

It is believed that the scheme of verification in operation is the best yet devised. Every citation is copied on a card and twice compared with the original report by different corps of trained verifiers. This is a tedious and expensive process, but it is one which insures well-nigh absolute accuracy in the references.

The thoroughness which characterizes the revision in the matter of citations may best be shown by a comparison of the treatises of the new edition with the corresponding ones in the old. Thus, the article ABSTRACT OF TITLE in the new contains 269 citations as against 38 in the old; ABDUCTION, 609 as against 87; ACCOUNTS, 1244 as against 591; ACKNOWLEDGMENTS, 4070 as against 1425; ADMISSIONS, 3854 as against 1115. The comparison might be pursued still further with similar results. This is no reflection upon the first series, as every article therein far exceeded in citations any other treatise on the same subject. It shows, rather, that with ten years of experience new and improved methods of discovering authorities have been developed, and, also, that within that period a great body of case law has arisen.

Particular attention is invited to the exhaustive collection of words and phrases. This matter has never received treatment, at the hands of legal writers, commensurate with its importance. Until quite recently, no attempt had been made to index the definitions in the reports or gather them in the digests. The publishers have engaged a large force to search the reports of this country, England, and Canada, page by page, for every word and phrase that has been judicially defined. This search has been conducted under the supervision of Mr. Thomas Johnson Michie, of the Baltimore Bar, compiler of the Index-Digest, and formerly associate editor of the Encyclopædia, who for a number of years has devoted his attention to this branch of legal literature. With this wealth of material at command, it is confidently believed that he will present the most exhaustive collection of judicial definitions extant.

Since a complete revision of the work was determined upon, the whole range of the law has been examined with a view to a more scientific arrangement of the subjects, as well as the subdivision of others for the sake of a more comprehensive and clear presentation. Among the more prominent new titles that will appear in this volume may be mentioned the following: ABANDONMENT AND TOTAL LOSS (IN MARINE INSURANCE); ABATEMENT OF LEGACIES; ABATEMENT OF NUISANCES; ACCOMMODATION PAPER; ADEPTION OF LEGACIES; and ADVICE OF COUNSEL. Others of equal importance will appear in succeeding volumes.

Under the title ABBREVIATIONS will be found a complete list of the abbreviations commonly used to designate the American, British, and

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

Canadian reports, together with those of the classic text-books. It is believed that this will be useful to all, and appreciated, especially, by those who have not reference manuals at hand.

The page of the new edition is much more spacious than that of the original, containing about forty per cent more matter. By this means it is practicable to present a fuller and more complete abstract of the law without increasing the number of volumes.

In a word, no effort has been or will be spared to present in convenient and accessible form a complete text-book on each topic, and, at the same time, a digest of all the law.

Mr. James Cockcroft, the founder of the Encyclopædia, and the presiding genius of its evolution and development, will continue his active supervision of the work.

Mr. Lucius P. McGehee, the author of a number of articles of exceptional merit, will occupy the position of associate editor. In this capacity his efforts will unquestionably be appreciated by the profession.

The reception of the original by the profession generally, and the frequent and favorable citation of the same by the courts of this and other countries, are the most flattering testimonial possible to its true worth. Now, as the result of an experience of ten years on the part of the publishers, and of the efforts of a thoroughly trained and equipped staff of writers, this volume is submitted to the profession, the first of the new edition, which, it is confidently believed, will be at once more useful in assisting them in their labors and more worthy of their commendation than its predecessor.

THE AMERICAN AND ENGLISH ENCYCLOPÆDIA OF LAW.

A.—The article "A" is not necessarily a singular term; it is often used in the sense of "any," and is then applied to more than one individual object.¹

ABANDON. (See also the title ADVERSE POSSESSION.)—To desert, to forsake. Abandonment is the relinquishment or surrender of rights or property by one person to another;² it includes both the intention to abandon and the

1. National Union Bank v. Copeland, 141 Mass. 257. In this case, where a debtor executed an assignment for the benefit of such creditors as should execute the assignment within a given time from the date, or within such further time as the trustees should allow "in and by a writing" indorsed on the instrument, it was held that the term a writing did not limit the trustees to the allowance of only one extension of time.

Frequently a is the equivalent of any; and therefore, where by section 52, English Agricultural Holdings Act 1883 (46 & 47 Vict., c. 61), bailiffs for levying a distress on an agricultural holding are to be appointed in writing "by the judge of a county court," that does not mean "of the county court in the district of which the holding is," but means "of any county court;" so that a bailiff appointed by any county court judge may levy an agricultural distress anywhere. In re Sanders, 54 L. J. Q. B. 331.

Authority to issue a bill of exchange has been construed to authorize the issuance of several bills, the total amount not exceeding the sum specified. Thompson v. Wesleyan Newspaper Assoc., 8 C. B. 849, 65 E. C. L. 849.

A statute abolishing entail provided that "estates shall not be entailed, and when a person dies intestate his or her estate shall be divided equally," etc. It was held that a person was a general term, equivalent to "any person," and therefore included equally persons who were sole tenants and persons who were cotenants. Lowe v. Brooks, 23 Ga. 327.

"A Sea."—After the sailing of a vessel, an agent for insurers inserted in the "live-cattle clause" of a policy issued to cover such vessel, among the dangers insured against, "any loss occasioned by a sea." It was held that this did not limit the insured to a loss occasioned by the force of a single wave, and that where cattle were carried between decks, and were injured by the tossing of the ship by heavy waves, it would render the insurers liable. Snowden v. Guion, 101 N. Y. 458.

"A Distinguished from 'The'—the Definite and the Indefinite Article.—In Sharff v. Com., 2 Binn. (Pa.) 514, upon an indictment for libel, the jury's verdict was: "Guilty of writing and publishing a bill of scandal," etc. The judgment on the verdict was reversed, because the defendant was not found guilty of the offense charged in the indictment. Tilghman, C.J., in his opinion said: "If it had said, guilty of the bill of scandal with which the defendant stands charged, or even guilty of the bill of scandal, without more, we should have been certain that the jury referred to the indictment; and then perhaps it might have been fairly construed 'guilty of the offense charged in the indictment.' But the words are 'guilty of a bill of scandal.' A bill is very different from the bill."

In Graham v. Ewart, 25 L. J. Exch. 47, a grant of a right of sporting on land was held to give only a concurrent right, while a grant of the right was held to give an exclusive right.

Whether Parol Evidence is Admissible to Show that "A" was Used in a Definite Sense.—A written contract to furnish "a room that is improved and suitable" for a certain purpose is fulfilled by furnishing such a room; and parol testimony is not admissible to show that some particular room was intended by the contracting parties. Thompson v. Stewart, 60 Iowa 223.

Used as an Equivalent of "The."—A is sometimes read as the; e.g., an act done "with a view" of giving a creditor a fraudulent preference (English Bankruptcy Act 1869, § 92; and now Bankruptcy Act 1883, 46 & 47 Vict., c. 52, § 48) means with the view—the real, effectual, substantial, dominant view of giving a preference. Ex p. Bird, 23 Ch. Div. 695; Ex p. Taylor, 18 Q. B. Div. 295. Compare In re Mills, 58 L. T. 871, 4 Times Rep. 284.

"A—Abbreviation Equivalent to "At."—A promissory note was worded, "value received, int. a. 6% p. a." It was held that the letter a, when thus used in a note, is known and recognized among commercial and business men as standing for the word at. Atkinson v. Barber, 145 Ill. 418.

"A Year's Rent.—See Wades v. Figgatt, 75 Va. 575.

"A Railroad Leading to M.—See State v. Hastings, 24 Minn. 78; Van Hostrup v. Madison City, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 291.

2. Hickman v. Link, 116 Mo. 123, quoting with approval 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. LAW (1st ed.) 1; Dodge v. Marden, 7 Oregon 460; State v. Seneca County Bank, 5 Ohio St. 177.

"Abandonment is a word that has acquired a technical meaning. It is defined to be the relinquishment of a right—the giving up of something to which we are entitled." Mallett v. Uncle Sam Gold Min. Co., 1 Nev. 204.

Property is said to be abandoned when it is thrown away, or its possession is voluntarily forsaken by the owner. Eads v. Brazelton, 22 Ark. 509.

1. Hickman v. Link, 116 Mo. 123, quoting with approval 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. LAW (1st ed.) 1; Dodge v. Marden, 78 Oregon 460; Livermore v. White, 74 Me. 452; Clark v. Hammerle, 36 Mo. 620; Moon v. Rollins, 36 Cal. 333; Keane v. Connovan, 21 Cal. 293; Wilson v. Daniels, 79 Iowa 132; Duffey v. Willis, 99 Mo. 132; Rowe v. Minneapolis, 49 Minn. 148; Kuschke v. St. Paul, 45 Minn. 225. See also ABANDONMENT AND TOTAL LOSS (IN MARINE INSURANCE), Vol. I., p. 32; HOME-STEAD: LOST PROPERTY.

As where an article is thrown away. M'Goon v. Ankeny, 11 Ill. 558. It may be inferred from mere lapse of time. Brentlinger v. Hutchinson, 1 Watts (Pa.) 46. See Smoot v. Wathen, 8 Mo. 522.

Where the owner of a tannery sold it, but forgot to remove some hides which had been placed in the vats for tanning, and some years afterwards they were found, it was held that they were not abandoned. Livermore v. White, 74 Me. 452, 43 Am. Rep. 600.

To constitute an abandonment there must be the concurrence of the intention to abandon and the actual relinquishment of the property so that it may be appropriated by the next comer. Judson v. Malloy, 40 Cal. 299.

"To constitute an abandonment of a right secured, there must be a clear, unequivocal, and decisive act of the party—an act done which shows a determination in the individual not to have a benefit which is designed for him." Breedlove v. Stump, 3 Verg. (Tenn.) 257, quoted with approval in Dawson v. Daniel, 2 Flipp. (U. S.) 309.

Trademark. (See also the title TRADEMARKS.)—To constitute abandonment of a trademark, an intention to abandon must be shown; mere evidence of nonuser is insufficient. Monson v. Boehm, 26 Ch. Div. 398.

Intent—Questions of Law and Fact.—As intent is the essence of abandonment, the facts of each particular case are for the jury. 2 Washb. Real Prop. (4th ed.) 370, 40 Am. Dec. 464, note; Dyer v. Sanford, 9 Met. (Mass.) 395; Clemmins v. Gottshall, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 330; Miller v. Cresson, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 284; Heath v. Biddle, 9 Pa. St. 273; Wiggins v. McCleary, 49 N. Y. 346; Bell v. Smith, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 98; Wilson v. Pearson, 20 Ill. 81; M'Goon v. Ankeny, 11 Ill. 558; Hazelbaker v. Goodfellow, 64 Ill. 238; Taylor v. Hampton, 4 McCord (S. Car.) 96; Parkins v. Dunham, 3 Strobb. (S. Car.) 224; Banks v. Banks, 77 N. Car. 186; Weill v. Lucerne Min. Co., 11 Nev. 200; Myers v. Spooner, 55 Cal. 257; Marquart v. Bradford, 43 Cal. 526; Smith v. Cushing, 41 Cal. 97; Bell v. Bed Rock Tunnel, etc., Co., 36 Cal. 214; Moon v. Rollins, 36 Cal. 333; Davis v. Perley, 30 Cal. 630; Roberts v. Unger, 30 Cal. 676; Masson v. Anderson, 3 Baxt. (Tenn.) 290; Landes v. Perkins, 12 Mo. 238. See also Sample v. Robb, 16 Pa. St. 305; Atchison v. McCulloch, 5 Watts (Pa.) 13. See also QUESTIONS OF LAW AND FACT.

Abandonment Distinguished from Gift, or Barter, or Surrender.—In Stephens v. Mansfield, 11 Cal. 363, it was held that there could be no such thing as an abandonment of land in favor of a particular individual and for a consideration. The court said: "There can be no such thing as abandonment in favor of a particular individual, or for a consideration. Such act would be a gift or sale. An abandonment is 'the relinquishment of a right, the giving up of something to which we are entitled' (Bouv.). 'Abandonment must be made by the owner, without being pressed by any duty, necessity, or utility to himself, but simply because he desires no longer to possess the thing; and further, it must be made without any desire that any other person shall acquire the same; for if it were made for a consideration it would be a sale or barter, and if without consideration, but with an intention that some other person should become the possessor, it would be a gift.'" And see, to the same effect, Richardson v. McNulty, 24 Cal. 344.

In Hagan v. Gaskill, 42 N. J. Eq. 215, a lease provided that an abandonment of the property should annul the lease. It was held that a surrender to the lessor was not such an abandonment as would defeat the rights of creditors. The court said: "I think there is a great difference between abandon and surrender."

Abandonment of Children. (See also PARENT AND CHILD.)—Abandon, as used in the Michigan statute against the abandonment of children, is used in its ordinary sense; i. e., "to forsake, to leave without the intention to return to; to renounce all care or protection of." Shannon v. People, 5 Mich. 89.

To abandon or expose a child under two years of age, as used in 24 & 25 Vict., c. 100, § 27, "includes a wilful omission to take charge of the child on the part of a person legally bound to do so, and any mode of dealing with it calculated to leave it exposed to risk without protection." Steph. Cr. 196, citing Reg. v. White, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 311; Reg. v. Falkingham, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 222.

In State v. Davis, 70 Mo. 468, the court said: "The abandonment of a child is a statutory offense, and the language of the statute is sufficient, in an indictment, to charge the crime. Abandonment does not mean a mere temporary absence from home, or temporary neglect of parental duty. Bouvier defines abandonment thus: 'The act of a husband, or wife, who leaves his or her consort, wilfully and with an intention of causing perpetual separation.' Webster defines it as 'a total desertion; a state of being forsaken.' Additional words in the indictment would have been but definitions of the term abandonment in words which perhaps would equally require definitions."

Abandonment in the Sense of Desertion. (See also the title DIVORCE.)—"Abandonment may be defined to be the act of wilfully leaving the wife, with the intention of causing a palpable separation between the parties, and implies an actual desertion of the wife by the husband." Stanbrough v. Stanbrough, 60 Ind. 279.

Has abandoned means that the husband has voluntarily left the wife, with an intention to forsake her entirely and never to return to her, and never to resume his marital duties towards her, or to claim his marital rights. Moore v. Stevenson, 27 Conn. 25.

A wife alleged, in an action against her husband for support, that he had abandoned her. The statute under which the action was brought used the word desertion. The complaint was held sufficient, the court saying: "The word deserted, as used in the statute, and the word abandoned, as used in the pleading, convey the same idea; that is, the act of wilfully leaving the wife with the intention of causing a palpable separation—a cessation from cohabitation." Carr v. Carr, 6 Ind. App. 377.

In Levering v. Levering, 16 Md. 218, it is said that failure to support the wife, accompanied by intemperate habits and violence justifying her in leaving her husband, would amount to an abandonment by him.

Personal Property—Sunken Vessels. (See also LOST PROPERTY.)—Property sunk in a steamboat and unclaimed for twenty years was held to be abandoned. Creedy v. Breedlove, 12 La. Ann. 745. See Eads v. Brazelton, 22 Ark. 499; Wyman v. Hurlburt, 12 Ohio 82, 40 Am. Dec. 461.

Abandonment of property divests the owner of his title therein, and the finder who reduces the same to possession after such abandonment is not guilty of conversion. Wyman v. Hurlburt, 12 Ohio 81, 40 Am. Dec. 461.

Manure.—Haslem v. Lockwood, 37 Conn. 503, 9 Am. Rep. 350.

Abandonment of Invention. (See also the title INVENTIONS.)—"Abandonment is a dedication to the public—that is to say, the party has withdrawn himself from the claim of monopoly and exclusive use which he might have had for his invention, and notwithstanding whatever it may be worth, it thenceforth belongs to the public—it is abandoned to the public." U. S. v. Hall, 7 Mackey (D. C.) 19.

Abandon in the Sense of Leave.—In a bill of exceptions the term abandon was held by the court to have been used in the sense of remove. The court said: "What is meant by the expression in the bill of exceptions, that he abandoned his possession to it? The counsel for the plaintiff in error contends that it means that he gave up or yielded the title to all the lots. In our opinion, its fair interpretation is merely that he left it, as we find in the next sentence that the term removed is used as equivalent to the term abandoned, previously employed. The lots were separate and distinct from each other, and so considered by the grantor, as he refers to the plan of the city of Mobile for their boundaries. We cannot, therefore, understand the expression in the bill of exceptions 'that he abandoned it' (the house he had built and occupied) to mean that he relinquished or yielded up his right and title to all the lots." O'Brien v. Doe, 6 Ala. 792.

Abandonment of Land. (See also the titles ADVERSE POSSESSION; OCCUPANCY; REAL PROPERTY; PUBLIC LANDS.)—In Dikes v. Miller, 24 Tex. 424, it was held that land might be abandoned. The court said: "Abandonment is the relinquishment of a right; the giving up of something to which one is entitled. If the owner sees proper to abandon his property, and evidences his intention by an act legally sufficient to vest or divest the ownership, why may he not do so in the case of land as well as of a chattel? It might go to the government, instead of the first occupant, upon the principle upon which land escheated, or become derelict, belongs to the state. But I do not perceive that that would affect the question of power in the owner to abandon the property." Approved in Tiebout v. Millikan, 61 Tex. 517.

To constitute abandonment there must be a concurrence of the act of leaving the premises vacant so that they may be appropriated by the next comer, and the intention of not returning. Judson v. Malloy, 40 Cal. 309.

An abandonment of realty will be presumed where the party leaves no property or improvement to indicate his intention to return and resume the occupancy of the land. Burke v. Hammond, 76 Pa. St. 172.

The payment of taxes by the grantee in a tax deed upon the property for a portion of the time he is in possession, claiming title under the deed, is not by itself, disconnected from other circumstances, evidence that the owner has abandoned the property. Keane v. Cannovan, 21 Cal. 291. See also Davis v. Perley, 30 Cal. 630; Philadelphia v. Riddle, 25 Pa. St. 259.

Abandonment of a Lease.—A provision in a lease provided that the failure to make payment within a certain time after such payment was due should be considered "an abandonment of this lease." The court, in construing the lease, said: "It seems to me that the words 'shall be considered an abandonment,' etc., as employed in the lease, must be considered, in a legal aspect, when applied to this lease, as amounting to no more than, and in fact as being equivalent to, the words 'shall be considered forfeited.'" Bowyer v. Seymour, 13 W. Va. 20.

Abandonment for Torts is the transfer of an animal or slave which has injured a person, in discharge of the owner's liability. Brown Law Dict.; Bouvier Law Dict.; Hynson v. Meuillon, 2 La. Ann. 798; Arnoult v. Deschappelles, 4 La. Ann. 41.

I. DEFINITION.—Abandonment, in the law of marine insurance, is the act of cession, by which, in cases where the loss or destruction of the property, though not absolute, is highly imminent, or its recovery is too expensive to be worth the attempt, the assured, on condition of receiving at once the whole amount of insurance, relinquishes to the underwriters all his property and interest in the thing insured, as far as it is covered by the policy, with all the claims that may ensue from its ownership, and all profits that may arise from its recovery.¹ More briefly, it is the cession by the insured of all his interest in the subject insured to the insurer, in cases of constructive total loss, in order to recover the whole amount of the insurance.²

Applies in Insurance Only.—The doctrine of abandonment is confined to cases of insurance.³

II. REASON OF THE DOCTRINE.—The object of allowing the insured to abandon is to enable him to be promptly reinstated in his capital, and be thereby enabled to engage in some new mercantile adventure.⁴ But as the contract of marine insurance is a contract of indemnity, the insured must not retain any part of the subject-matter insured if he calls on the underwriter to settle with him for a total loss.⁵

3. Where the steamer F. sunk the sloop S. by collision, and the owners of the F. raised and repaired the S. and tendered her to her owners, who refused to receive her, and insisted upon abandoning her to the steamer as a total loss, it was held that the doctrine of abandonment did not apply and would carry no title; that the only claim was for actual damages. Clarke v. Steamer Fashion, 2 Wall. Jr. (C. C.) 339.

III. TOTAL LOSS—1. Divisions of the Subject.—Before considering the principles of abandonment it is necessary to examine the doctrine of total loss. A total loss is a loss on account of which the assured is entitled to recover from the underwriters the total amount of his subscription.¹ It is either actual or constructive. Actual total loss entitles the assured to recover the total amount of his subscription without abandonment; constructive total loss entitles him to recover such total amount only upon condition of making abandonment.²

2. Actual Total Loss—a. DEFINITION.—Actual total loss is when the subject insured is wholly destroyed, or when there is a privation of it and its recovery is hopeless.³

b.* DESTRUCTION OF OBJECT INSURED—(1) General Principles.—Absolute annihilation is not essential;⁴ it is enough that the form and species of the thing is destroyed, although the materials of which it consisted still exist.⁵ This applies equally to ship⁶ and cargo.⁷

Brett, L. J., in Kaltenbach v. Mackenzie, 3 C. P. D. 470. Both these learned judges distinguish between abandonment—fundamental in every contract of indemnity—and the technical notice of abandonment in marine insurance; and Lord Blackburn says that the use of the ambiguous word “abandonment” often leads to confusion.

3. 2 Arnould on Marine Insurance (6th ed.) 951; 2 Parsons Marine Insurance 68; McArthur on Insurance 138; Murray v. Great Western Ins. Co., 72 Hun (N. Y.) 287.

An actual total loss is a destruction of the property insured so that nothing valuable would remain upon abandonment. Walker v. Protection Ins. Co., 29 Me. 317.

4. Absolute Destruction.—But it is of course sufficient. Where there is an absolute destruction of the subject-matter insured, an abandonment is unnecessary to entitle the insured to recover for a total loss. Gordon v. Bowne, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 150.

5. When Subject-matter Loses its Form and Species.—Cambridge v. Anderton, 2 B. & C. 691, 9 E. C. L. 224; Cossmann v. West, L. R. 13 App. Cas. 160; Walker v. Protection Ins. Co., 29 Me. 317; Murray v. Hatch, 6 Mass. 475; Merchants' S. S. Co. v. Commercial Mut. Ins. Co., 51 N. Y. Super. Ct. 444; Burt v. Brewers', etc., Ins. Co., 9 Hun (N. Y.) 383, 78 N. Y. 400.

There is an actual total loss “when the subject-matter insured has, by a peril of the sea, lost its form and species—where a ship, for example, has become a wreck or a mere congeries of planks, and has been bona fide sold in that state for a sum of money.” Lord Abinger, C.B., in Roux v. Salvador, 3 Bing. N. Cas. 266, 7 L. J. Exch. 328.

Where by a peril insured against the owner is disabled from recovering in specie the thing insured at the termination of the risk, there is an absolute total loss. Roux v. Salvador, 3 Bing. N. Cas. 266.

When a vessel is so far destroyed that it ceases to be of any value as a vessel, though some planks and material may remain, the loss is a total one, and no abandonment is necessary. Sherlock v. Globe Ins. Co., 1 Cin. Super. Ct. (Ohio) 193. But compare Sherlock v. Globe Ins. Co., 25 Ohio St. 50.

6. Ship.—In Murray v. Hatch, 6 Mass. 475, Sewall, J., said: “In the technical sense of the words ‘total loss,’ and for every beneficial purpose in which a contract of insurance can be employed, a ship foundered and burnt at sea, or wrecked and broken upon the land, so as to be past relief or repair, is specifically, and as a vessel, totally destroyed; and such an event is a total loss, * * * notwithstanding salvage, and a very considerable salvage, remaining.”

If, by reason of the violence of the winds and waves, a vessel upon the high seas has become a wreck, incapable of being brought into port, she is an actual total loss. Walker v. Protection Ins. Co., 29 Me. 317.

There may be a total loss of a vessel even though after sinking she is raised again, if, after being raised, she is no longer a vessel in specie. Merchants' S. S. Co. v. Commercial Mut. Ins. Co., 51 N. Y. Super. Ct. 444.

In order to constitute “actual,” as distinguished from “constructive,” total loss, the ship must have become a total wreck; it must have perished and ceased to exist as a ship, although fragments of the wreck may remain and may reach the home port. Burt v. Brewers', etc., Ins. Co., 9 Hun (N. Y.) 383. In this case Talcott, J., said: “When the ship, in the course of her voyage, and by the agency of the perils insured against, becomes an absolute wreck; when she has been broken in pieces and dismembered, so that her planks and apparel are scattered on the sea, this is a case of absolute total loss on ship, though the whole or greater part of the fragments may reach the shore as wreck. In such a case it is quite clear that the ship, as a ship, is totally destroyed; the ship has perished, only the wreck remains. 2 Arnould on Insurance 1013.” Affirmed in 78 N. Y. 400.

7. Cargo.—Where a cargo of fruit became damaged by sea water so that it became rotten, and the underwriters forbade its being landed, and it was thrown overboard, it was a total loss. Dyson v. Rowcroft, 3 B. & P. 474; 7 Rev. Rep. 809. And see infra, this title, Memorandum Articles. As to freight, see infra, this title, Freight.

(2) Vessel Missing.—Where a vessel has been missing for a sufficient time, she is presumed to have been destroyed.¹

c. TOTAL LOSS TO INSURED—(1) General Principles.—Total loss of value to the insured is equivalent to a total physical loss, and takes place whenever the thing insured is totally gone from the power of the insured,² or there is

1. Missing Ship—Presumption of Loss.—There is no fixed rule of law as to what period of time will justify this assumption; this depends upon the circumstances of the particular case. Houstman v. Thornton, Holt 242; Marshall v. Parker, 2 Camp. 70; Green v. Brown, 2 Str. 1199; Huggeford v. Ford, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 223; Gordon v. Bowne, 2 Johns. (N. Y.), 150. See also Brown v. Neilson, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 525, and Ruan v. Gardner, 1 Wash. (U. S.) 145, where a vessel was taken by a privateer and never again heard from. In such case it must be proved that when the vessel left the port of outfit she was bound on the voyage insured. Cohen v. Hinckley, 2 Camp. 51; Koster v. Innes, R. & M. 333, 21 E. C. L. 450. See also, as to what evidence should be produced, Koster v. Reed, 6 B. & C. 19, 13 E. C. L. 97; Twemlow v. Oswin, 2 Camp. 85.

If such ship turns up after the underwriters have paid for her as lost, she is considered as abandoned, and belongs to the underwriters. Houstman v. Thornton, Holt 242. As to when interest begins to run in such a case, see Hallet v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 2 Wash. (U. S.) 279.

A vessel insured on a time policy and never heard of after a certain date is presumed to have perished immediately after such date. Reck v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 3 Civ. Pro. Rep. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 376.

2. Illustrations—Wreck.—Where a vessel was wrecked, and the cargo, which was insured, perished in part, but was in part gotten on shore and was afterwards plundered and destroyed, and never reached the owner, it was a total loss. Bondrett v. Hentigg, 1 Holt 149, 3 E. C. L. 66.

Loss of Cargo.—In an action on a marine policy on goods, to establish actual total loss, the insured must prove the physical extinction of the property insured or the extinction of its value arising from the perils insured against. Total loss of value to the insured is equivalent to total physical loss. Young v. Pacific Mut. Ins. Co., 34 N. Y. Super. Ct. 321.

To constitute a total loss it is not necessary that there should be an absolute extinction or destruction of the thing insured, so that nothing of it can be delivered at the point of destination. Where machinery was insured, to wit, the parts of a sugar-packing machine, and no part of the same could be delivered in a condition capable of use, it was held that this was a total loss though more than half the pieces in number and value could be delivered and would have some value as old iron. Great Western Ins. Co. v. Fogarty, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 640. Compare Robertson v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 37 N. Y. Super. Ct. 443.

Loss of Ship.—The mere fact that a vessel remains in specie does not necessarily prevent the insured from claiming a total loss without abandonment. McCall v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 66 N. Y. 506.

Where a ship is sunk beyond hope of recovery there is a total loss. Crosby v. New York Mut. Ins. Co., 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 369. See infra, this title, Stranding and Submersion.

Seizure.—Where goods were seized by the Swedish government, unladen by a military force, and never restored, there was held to be an absolute total loss. Mellish v. Andrews, 15 East 13.

Capture.—If the property insured passes into the possession of captors or salvors, and the owners are thus in fact dispossessed, the loss becomes total, provided the owners cannot in either case recover the possession except by disproportionate exertions, expense, or hazard. Monroe v. British, etc., Marine Ins. Co., 52 Fed. Rep. 777, 3 C. C. A. 280, 5 U. S. App. 179.

Where a cargo of saltpetre was seized by a British ship, condemned, and sold by order of a court of admiralty, it was held an absolute total loss. Mullet v. Shedden, 13 East 304. In this case Lord Ellenborough said: "If, instead of the saltpetre having been taken out of the ship and sold, and the property divested, and the subject-matter lost to the owner, it had remained on board the ship, and been restored at last to the owner, I should have thought that there was much in the argument, that in order to make it a total loss there should have been notice of abandonment, and that such notice should have been given sooner; but here the property itself was wholly lost to the owner, and therefore the necessity of any abandonment was altogether done away."

Where the insured had no notice of a loss until by a subsequent capture, he has nothing to abandon, and may recover without abandonment. Abel v. Potts, 3 Esp. 242, 6 Rev. Rep. 826.

Freight.—If the owner or charterer is wholly prevented from earning the freight insured upon, by the ship being wrecked, or other perils insured against, it is an absolute total loss. 2 Phillips on Insurance 352; Dunning v. Merchants' Mut., etc., Ins. Co., 57 Me. 108 (116). See infra, this title, Freight.

Spes Recuperandi.—Whenever there is a spes recuperandi the insured must abandon in order to recover for a total loss. Barney v. Maryland Ins. Co., 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 139. But it seems that where the spes recuperandi is very vague it does not render abandonment necessary. Gracie v. New York Ins. Co., 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 237.

The spes recuperandi in case of a total loss by capture without abandonment may be considered and valued by the jury in adjusting nothing which on abandonment could pass to be of value to the underwriter.¹

(2) Sale by Necessity.—A sale by the master by reason of necessity constitutes a total loss, since the property having passed to another, there is nothing to abandon.²

(3) Cost of Repairs Exceeding Value.—In estimating an absolute total loss, the test has been laid down that, where the cost of repairs of a vessel exceeds the value when repaired, or, in cargo, when the cost of repairing the damaged condition exceeds the value of the cargo as repaired, or when the cost of transshipping exceeds the worth of the goods shipped, the loss is absolutely total.³

Justifiable Sale—Per se Total Loss.—If, after encountering a sea peril, a ship is for that reason justifiably sold by the master, the insured may claim a total loss; accounting to the insurer for the proceeds of the sale as salvage received for his benefit. The title is, by such a sale, irrevocably gone from the owner, and cannot be transferred to the insurer by abandonment. McCall v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 66 N. Y. 515. See also Williams v. Suffolk Ins. Co., 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 5, 10.

In Cossman v. West, L. R. 13 App. Cas. 160, the effect of a sale by the master was much discussed. Sir Barnes Peacock in delivering the opinion in this case said: "It was admitted that no formal notice of abandonment was given, and it is unnecessary, in the view which their lordships take, to determine whether what took place between the owner and the underwriters substantially amounted to such a notice. Their lordships are of opinion that after the sale under the decree of the court of admiralty there was an actual total loss. By that sale, the property in the vessel and cargo was transferred to the purchaser, and the vessel and cargo ceased to be the property of and were wholly lost to the original owners thereof. To constitute a total loss, within the meaning of a policy of marine insurance, it is not necessary that a ship should be actually annihilated or destroyed. It may, as in the case of capture and sale upon condemnation, remain in its original state and condition; it may be capable of being repaired if damaged; it may be actually repaired by the purchaser; or it may not even require repairs. If it is lost to the owner by an adverse valid and legal transfer of his right of property and possession to a purchaser by a sale under a decree of a court of competent jurisdiction, in consequence of a peril insured against, it is as much a total loss as if it had been totally annihilated."

In Howland v. India Ins. Co., 131 Mass., 253, Gray, C. J., said: "Notwithstanding the dicta in Smith v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 7 Met. (Mass.) 448, and in Graves v. Washington Marine Ins. Co., 12 Allen (Mass.) 391, it appears to be settled by authority, in accordance with the plainest principles of justice, that, when a vessel has been so injured by perils insured against as to become a constructive total loss, and has been lawfully sold by the master, so as to leave nothing in the assured to abandon, no abandonment is needful to perfect his right to recover a total loss from the underwriters. But the difficulty in this case is, that there was no sufficient proof of such necessity as would justify a sale by the master without notice to the underwriters. * * * An abandonment was therefore necessary to enable the plaintiff to recover for a constructive total loss."

If the sale by the master was necessary, and warranted by the rules of law, it would, even without an abandonment, constitute a technical total loss. Fuller v. Kennebec Mut. Ins. Co., 31 Me. 325.

Stagg v. United Ins. Co., 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 34, was a case where damage to ship could only be repaired at an expense exceeding her worth when repaired, but there was an abandonment.

In Globe Ins. Co. v. Sherlock, 25 Ohio St. 50, it is laid down broadly that there can be no case of actual total loss if the vessel remains in specie and is susceptible of being repaired at any cost.

Actual Total Loss Necessary.—In Hugg v. Augusta Ins., etc., Co., 7 How. (U. S.) 595, Nelson, J., said: "In the case of memorandum articles the exception of particular average excludes a constructive total loss. * * * There must be an actual total loss of the goods. The object of the clause is to protect the underwriter from any partial loss on articles of a perishable nature which are liable to inherent decay and damage, independently of the damage occasioned by the perils insured against; and where it would be difficult, if not impossible, to distinguish between them. In case of a total loss consequent upon the happening of one of the perils, the whole damage is presumed to have arisen from that cause, and thus all dispute is avoided."

"The memorandum prevents the loss from being total, unless the article be burnt, sunk, captured, or otherwise completely destroyed." Per Kent, J., in Magrath v. Church, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 196, 2 Am. Dec. 173. But it is admitted that if the "voyage be lost" by reason of some cause not arising from the condition of the articles in the memorandum, there would be a total loss.

A loss of over one half is only partial in case of memorandum articles. Wain v. Thompson, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 120, 11 Am. Dec. 675. But it has been held that the saving of a very small proportion of the articles in the memorandum clause will not prevent a total loss. Bryan v. New York Ins. Co., 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 617.

Contra.—The principle that an absolute total loss is necessary in the case of memorandum articles has been denied, however. In Delaware Ins. Co. v. Winter, 38 Pa. St. 176, Thompson, J., said: "'In all cases, in fact,' says Arnould, 'except those of partial loss, the goods comprised in the memorandum stand on the same footing as other goods. If the question turn on a totality of the loss, there is no difference between them and other perishable articles. Whether the loss be total or partial in its nature must depend on general principles. The memorandum does not vary the rules upon which a loss is partial or total. It does no more than preclude indemnity for an ascertained partial loss.' Poole v. Protection Ins. Co., 14 Conn. 47. In Marean v. U. S. Ins. Co., 3 Wash. (U. S.) 256, the doctrine is stated thus: 'If the question turn on the totality of loss unconnected with the subject of loss by deterioration of the cargo in value or reduction in quantity, there is no difference between memorandum and other articles. If the loss be total in fact, or is such as the insured is permitted to treat as such, he is entitled to abandon and to recover as for a total loss, in the case of memorandum articles; but always with this exception, that he is not permitted to turn a partial into a total loss.' The rule, therefore, deducible from these and many other authorities, is that wherever the cargo may, on account of injuries from perils insured against, be abandoned as for a total loss, memorandum articles stand upon the same footing as others. There is much diversity on the subject of deterioration of this class of articles and the effect of a total change of their character, although they remain nominally in specie the same, as incurring liability on part of the insurers. But, as that question does not properly arise here, we express no opinion on the subject."

In Poole v. Protection Ins. Co., 14 Conn. 47, there was an abandonment, and Storrs, J., declared that it was, therefore, unnecessary to determine whether the loss was absolutely or constructively total. It was determined, in this case, that to render the insurers liable for the loss of goods specified in the memorandum clause it was not necessary that there should be either an actual destruction of every part of the goods insured, so as no longer physically to exist in specie, nor that there should be a total extinction of their value; but that it was sufficient if, by reason of a peril insured against, the voyage was arrested and the goods neither came to the hands of the owners nor reached their port of destination nor were capable of being forwarded.

tests for determining whether a loss is actually total are, in general, the same as those already stated.¹ There is this limitation, however—in the case of memorandum articles there can never be a total loss provided the articles insured reach the port of destination in specie, however great the damage by a peril insured against may be.² It results that, no matter how extensive the damage at any intermediate port, it is the duty of the master to forward the goods, if this is possible, and by his failure to do so he cannot throw the loss upon the insurer.³ But where, though the goods still remain in specie at an intermediate port, the delivery of any portion of them at the port of destination becomes impossible by reason of a peril insured against, the loss becomes absolutely total and the obligation to forward ceases.⁴

Massachusetts.—In Massachusetts it seems to be unsettled whether there can be a constructive total loss of memorandum articles. In Mayo v. India Mut. Ins. Co., 152 Mass. 172, W. Allen, J., said: "Whether, in this commonwealth, there can be a total loss of a memorandum article if any part of it arrives at the port of discharge in specie, or whether a special rule will apply to such articles, and there may be a constructive total loss and abandonment of them—if, as may have been the fact in the case at bar, the damage is such that the expense of landing and restoring the goods will equal or exceed their actual value, or whether the general rule in regard to other cargo will apply, and damage to the cargo of one half of the insured value with abandonment will constitute a total loss, we express no opinion."

New York.—It is well settled in New York that where goods are insured free of particular average, the insured may recover for a constructive total loss. Wallerstein v. Columbian Ins. Co., 44 N. Y. 204, 4 Am. Rep. 664; Chadsey v. Guion, 97 N. Y. 333, affirming 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 118. But it is to be noted that, in these cases, a constructive total loss is defined as a destruction of all value to the owner. It is perhaps doubtful whether the English decisions noticed by the court in Wallerstein v. Columbian Ins. Co., 44 N. Y. 204, 4 Am. Rep. 664, show anything more than that the requirements for an actual total loss have received a more liberal construction with the advance of insurance law, and whether they have any bearing on the question of the sufficiency of a constructive total loss in the case before the court. Compare the definition of actual total loss in Carr v. Security Ins. Co., 109 N. Y. 504.

(b) Perishable Articles.—The rules as to memorandum articles apply to other things of a perishable nature, though not enumerated in the memorandum.¹

(c) Freight.—An actual total loss of freight arises only where the circumstances are such as to render the ultimate earning of freight absolutely impossible or practically hopeless; as where the cargo is lost, or there are no means of forwarding it.² The loss of the vessel short of the port of destination does not of itself constitute a total loss of freight, but the question in such cases is, whether there was a chance of being able to earn the freight by forwarding the cargo;³ and it is always the duty of the insured to repair and complete the cases the circumstance of their existing in specie at that forced termination of the risk is of no importance. The loss is, in its nature, total to him who has no means of recovering his goods, whether his inability arises from their annihilation or from any other insuperable obstacle."

When Actual Total Loss of Freight.—In Rankin v. Potter, L. R. 6 H. L. 99, Brett, L.J., said: "There may be an actual total loss of freight under a general policy on freight, if there be an actual total loss of ship, or an actual total loss of the whole cargo. An actual total loss of ship will occasion an actual total loss of freight, unless when the ship is lost, cargo is on board, and the whole or a part of such cargo is saved, and might be sent on in a substituted ship so as to earn freight. An actual total loss of the whole cargo will occasion an actual total loss of freight, unless such loss should so happen as to leave the ship capable, as to time, place, and condition, of earning an equal or some freight by carrying other cargo on the voyage insured." He added that there would be an absolute total loss of freight when the ship was so damaged as to be a constructive total loss, were it insured, although there was no loss, or only an average loss of cargo, without means of sending it on; and under a policy on "chartered freight" absolute total loss might occur if the ship was actually or possibly constructively totally lost before any goods were shipped.

If the goods cannot be forwarded so as to retain some value, there is such a total loss of cargo as produces a total loss of freight. In Lord v. Neptune Ins. Co., 10 Gray (Mass.) 109, Shaw, C.J., after citing Roux v. Salvador, 3 Bing. N. Cas. 266, said: "The case is a strong authority to this point, that if goods on board ship are damaged by one of the perils insured against, and upon being brought into a port other than that of their destination the damage is there found to be of such a nature and extent that, taking into consideration their actual condition, the distance of the port of destination and the time necessary for their transportation to such port, and the nature of the commodities, it can be shown that they must totally perish and cease to exist before they can arrive, then they are in effect totally destroyed by the first direct action of the sea peril; they cannot be carried and delivered to the consignee, so as to enable the shipowner to earn his freight of the ship. They are as effectually and completely destroyed by such peril as if, instead of sea damage, they had been struck with lightning and consumed. And in this respect it seems to us immaterial whether the goods are memorandum articles, or goods perishable in their nature, or not; they are as effectually annihilated by the direct action of the peril insured against, and so totally destroyed by such peril, for all purposes of earning freight by their carriage, in the one case as in the other. In both cases the shipowner is entirely deprived of obtaining his freight by a peril insured against; the loss of that freight is a total loss to him without abandonment."

But where the goods could have arrived in specie at the port of destination, and there has been no total loss of ship, the insurers on freight are not liable for a total loss, though the ship has been compelled to put back to the port of departure, and the goods, damaged to the extent of half their value, have been sold. Lord v. Neptune Ins. Co., 10 Gray (Mass.) 109.

Where a ship is obliged to put back, and the damage she has sustained is of such a nature that she cannot pursue her voyage, and no other ship can be procured to take the cargo, there is a total loss of freight. Manning v. Newnham, 2 Camp. 624, note, 12 Rev. Rep. 761.

When Loss of Vessel is Loss of Freight.—If no freight pro rata has been earned, or if the expense of reshipping in another vessel exceeds or is equal to the whole amount agreed upon by the charter party, there is an absolute total loss of freight. American Ins. Co. v. Center, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 53, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 564; Robertson v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 68 N. Y. 192; Hubbell v. Great Western Ins. Co., 74 N. Y. 252.

In M'Gaw v. Ocean Ins. Co., 23 Pick. (Mass.) 410, Shaw, C.J., said: "In case of actual total loss of vessel the freight is, of course, lost." See also Parsons v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 16 Gray (Mass.) 468. But, voyage, or if this is impossible, to transship by another vessel.¹

(d) Total Loss Only.—A constructive total loss is sufficient under a policy against "total loss only."²

d. TOTAL LOSS WITH BENEFIT OF SALVAGE.—Salvage in marine insurance is the part, or remnant, of the thing insured which survives a total loss;³ and upon principles of indemnity it becomes the property of the underwriters without abandonment.⁴ Where the ship has become a wreck, or where goods have become a total loss, but something has survived, which, although it has lost its specific character, is yet of some value, this rule applies.⁵ Where there has been a sale of the thing insured, and the master has received the money, he must hold it to the use of the underwriters; and if it comes to the hands of the insured it may be deducted from the loss as so much paid.⁶

as pointed out by Rapallo, J., in Hubbell v. Great Western Ins. Co., 74 N. Y. 254, such expressions must refer to a constructive total loss of freight.

In Willard v. Millers', etc., Ins. Co., 24 Mo. 561, there was an insurance on freight "against total loss only." The freight would have amounted to $3000. Upon the voyage the ship was so damaged by disaster as to be rendered totally unable to transport the cargo, and it could not have been sent forward for any less rate of freight than that originally agreed on. Freight pro rata had been earned to the amount of $467. It was held that there was an absolute total loss of freight, and that the freight received was only to be considered in adjusting the loss.

Co.*, 152 Mass. 172; Kettell v. Alliance Ins. Co., 10 Gray (Mass.) 144. And see Forwood v. North Wales Mut. Marine Ins. Co., 5 Q. B. Div. 57, where a policy against "absolute damage caused by the perils insured against" was held not to exclude constructive total loss.

Contra—New York—Missouri.—There are, however, decisions holding otherwise. Thus, in a case of insurance on freight "against total loss only," it has been held that there must be an actual total loss. Buchanan v. Ocean Ins. Co., 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 318; Willard v. Millers', etc., Co., 24 Mo. 561.

5. See instances put by Brett, L. J., in Kaltenbach v. Mackenzie, 3 C. P. Div. 467. The whole passage is instructive. The learned judge said: "I agree that there is a distinction between abandonment and notice of abandonment, and I concur in what has been said by Lord Blackburn, that abandonment is not peculiar to policies of marine insurance; abandonment is part of every contract of indemnity. Whenever, therefore, there is a contract of indemnity, and a claim under it for an absolute indemnity, there must be an abandonment, on the part of the person claiming indemnity, of all his right in respect of that for which he receives indemnity. The doctrine of abandonment in cases of marine insurance arises where the assured claims for a total loss. There are two kinds of total loss; one which is called an actual total loss, another which in legal language is called a constructive total loss. But in both the assured claims as for a total loss. Abandonment, however, is applicable to the claim, whether it be for an actual total loss or for a constructive total loss. If there is anything to abandon, abandonment must take place; as, for instance, when the loss is an actual total loss, and that which remains of a ship is what has been called a congeries of planks, there must be an abandonment of the wreck. Or where goods have been totally lost, as in the case of Roux v. Salvador, 3 Bing. N. Cas. 266, but something has been produced by the loss which would not be the goods themselves, if it were of any value at all, it must be abandoned. But that abandonment takes place at the time of the settlement of the claim; it need not take place before." See also Stewart v. Greenock Marine Ins. Co., 2 H. L. Cas. 159.

6. Salvage Passes without Abandonment.—In Gordon v. Massachusetts F., etc., Ins. Co., 2 Pick. (Mass.) 249, Parker, C. J., said:

3. Constructive Total Loss—a. DEFINITION.—A constructive total loss is when the damage, though not actually total, is of such a character that the insured is entitled, if he thinks fit, to treat it as total by an abandonment, i.e., by giving notice of an abandonment to the underwriters.¹

b. CRITERIA—(1) In General.—The character of a loss as constructively total depends upon the conduct of a prudent uninsured owner as measured, first, by the quantum of damage to the thing insured under the circumstances (English rule), or by an artificial one half loss standard (United States rule); second, by the imminence of actual peril; or third, by the loss of his adventure, or the lack of means to repair.

(2) Quantum of Damage—(a) English Rule.—If the outlay required to repair the damage be greater than the value of the thing when repaired, the loss is constructively total.²

(b) American Rule.—If the vessel or goods insured are damaged to more than half their value, or if more than half the freight is lost, the insured may abandon as for a total loss.³

"The money arising from the sale in such case must be held by the master to the use of the underwriters; it is their property without any abandonment; and if it comes to the hands of the insured, it may be deducted from the loss as so much paid, this being what is called a loss with benefit of salvage."

In the case of Pringle v. Hartley, 3 Atk. 195, the earliest reported case in England on abandonment, according to Chief Justice Tindal, there are dicta of Lord Hardwicke to the same effect; but in that case the ship had been sold under an order of court to pay salvage to recaptors, and the remnant had been paid into court for the benefit of those who might claim as owners.

In case of sale by necessity by the master, the salvage belongs to the insurer; and the insured is entitled to recover the full amount of his claim irrespective of the amount of salvage received by the insurer. Stephenson v. Piscataqua F., etc., Ins. Co., 54 Me. 55. See also Portsmouth Ins. Co. v. Brazee, 16 Ohio 81.

In Smith v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 7 Met. (Mass.) 453, Shaw, C. J., said: "If this were considered a total loss, with benefit of salvage, it is still, in effect, only a partial loss. The master being the agent of the assured, and they having made no abandonment, the money for the salvage, in his hands, is their money, and he being their agent, they were responsible for it, whether paid over or not. Then what is the loss? There is no difference between adjustment as a partial loss, and adjustment of a total loss with benefit of salvage. See Gordon v. Massachusetts F. & M. Ins. Co., 2 Pick. (Mass.) 261. If the vessel, being entire, were sunk and gone, the whole valuation is the measure of the indemnity to the assured. But if any boats or materials have been saved and sold, the money is that of the assured, and renders his loss so much less; so that it only remains to put down the valuation on one side, and deduct the money thus received, and the balance is the actual indemnity. The salvage, then, is not a set-off, not something belonging to the defendants, to be used to balance the plaintiff's total demand; but it is a sum belonging to the plaintiff, in his own hands, which diminishes his demand pro tanto, and to the same extent diminishes the amount he is entitled to recover."

A constructive total loss is where part of the property survives the peril, without a total destruction of the thing insured, or where rights or claims remain to the insured or owner. Walker v. Protection Ins. Co., 29 Me. 317.

When a vessel is not destroyed, but its destruction is made highly probable, and its recovery, though not hopeless, is yet exceedingly doubtful, or too expensive, then it is a constructive total loss; and it is so in the United States when the cost to repair would exceed half the value of the vessel, and an abandonment is necessary. Sherlock v. Globe Ins. Co., 1 Cinc. Super. Ct. Rep. (Ohio) 193; but compare Globe Ins. Co. v. Sherlock, 25 Ohio St. 50.

2. Ship.—In Rankin v. Potter, L. R. 6 H. L. 83, Martin, B., said that the definition of constructive total loss as to ships generally adopted is as follows: "Where the damage to the ship is so great from the perils insured against that the owner cannot put it in a state of repair necessary for pursuing the voyage insured, except at an expense greater than the value of the ship (when repaired), he is not bound to incur the expense, but he is at liberty to abandon and treat the loss as a total loss and recover the whole amount."

Cargo.—If the damage to cargo, though reparable, cannot be repaired without laying out more money than the thing is worth, the reparation is impracticable from a business point of view, and the loss is constructively total. Rosetto v. Gurney, 11 C. B. 176, 73 E. C. L. 176. See also Irving v. Manning, 1 H. L. Cas. 289; Young v. Turing, 2 Scott N. K. 752, 2 M. & G. 593; *Allen v. This decision was put upon the ground that the chariot as a chariot was destroyed. Quare, whether under the rule laid down in later cases this would not be an absolute total loss.

Cost of Repairs.—As to whether, when an abandonment has been made because the cost of reparation would in all probability exceed fifty per cent, the actual cost of repair when afterward made is conclusive, see notes infra, this title, Imminence of Peril.

1. Test of the Prudent Owner.—In Bradlie v. Maryland Ins. Co., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 378, Story, J., said: "In cases where the abandonment is founded upon a supposed technical total loss, by a damage or injury exceeding one half the value of the vessel, although the fact of such damage or injury must exist at the time, yet it is necessarily open to proofs, to be derived from subsequent events. Thus, for example, if the repairs, when subsequently made, clearly exceed the half value, it is plain that this affords one of the best proofs of the actual damage or injury. On the other hand, if the subsequent repairs are far below the half value, this, so far as it goes, affords an inference the other way. But it is not, and in many cases cannot be, decisive of the right to abandon. In many cases of stranding, the state of the vessel at the time may be such, from the imminency of the peril, and the apparent extent of expenditures required to deliver her from it, as to justify an abandonment; although, by some fortunate occurrence, she may be delivered from her peril, without an actual expenditure of one half of her value after she is in safety. Under such circumstances, if, in all human probability, the expenditures which must be incurred to deliver her from her peril are at the time, so far as any reasonable calculations can be made, in the highest degree of probability, beyond half value, and if her distress and peril be such as would induce a considerate owner, uninsured, and upon the spot, to withhold any attempt to get the vessel off, because of such apparently great expenditures, the abandonment would doubtless be good. It was to such a case that Lord Ellenborough alluded, in Anderson v. Wallis, 2 M. and S. 240, when he said: 'There is not any case, nor principle, which authorizes an abandonment, unless where the loss has been actually a total loss, or in the highest degree probable at the time of the abandonment.' Mr. Chancellor Kent, in his learned Commentaries (Vol. 3, 321), has laid down the true results of the doctrine of law on this subject. 'The right of abandonment,' says he, 'does not depend upon the certainty, but upon the high probability, of a total loss, either of the property, or of the voyage, or both. The insured is to act, not upon certainties, but upon probabilities; and if the facts present a case of extreme hazard, and of probable expense, exceeding half the value of the ship, the insured may abandon; though it should happen that she was afterwards recovered at a less expense.' We have no difficulty, therefore, in acceding to the argument of the counsel for the plaintiffs in error on this point." See also Fulton Ins. Co. v. Goodman, 32 Ala. 127; Cincinnati Ins. Co. v. Bakewell, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 541.

In the great case of Roux v. Salvador, 3 Bing. N. Cas. 266, 32 E. C. L. 110, Lord Abinger states the law as follows: "If in the progress of the voyage it [the object of assurance] becomes totally destroyed or annihilated, or if it be placed, by reason of the perils against which he [the underwriter] insures, in such a position that it is wholly out of the power of the assured or of the underwriter to procure its arrival, he is bound by the very letter of his contract to pay the sum insured. But there are intermediate cases—there may be a capture, which, though prima facie a total loss, may be followed by a recapture, which would revert the property in the assured. There may be a forcible detention, which may speedily terminate, or may last so long as to end in the impossibility of bringing the ship or the goods to their destination. There may be some other peril which renders the ship unnavigable, without any reasonable hope of repair, or by which the goods are partly lost, or so damaged that they are not worth the expense of bringing them, or what remains of them, to their destination. In all these or any similar cases, if a prudent man not insured would decline any further expense in prosecuting an adventure the termination of which will probably never be successfully accomplished, a party insured may, for his own benefit as well as that of the underwriter, treat the case as one of a total loss, and demand the full sum insured. * * * In all these cases not only the thing assured, or part of it, is supposed to exist in specie, but there is a possibility, however remote, of its arriving at its destination, or at least of its value being in some way affected by the measures that may be adopted for the recovery or preservation of it."

In Kaltenbach v. Mackenzie, 3 C. P. Div. 476, Brett, L. J., said: "It was argued before us that this was an actual total loss. I do not stop to enter into that; it is clear that the ship was not an actual total loss; but I think we are bound to take it that she was a constructive total loss—that is, she was in imminent danger of becoming a total loss to her owner. She may become a total loss to her owner either by perishing, although she has not yet perished, or she may become a total loss by reason of the cost of the repairs being greater than the value of the ship when repaired; in either case she becomes a total loss to her owner. I think we must take it that the circumstances were such that the owner had a right to consider that in all probability the cost of repairing that ship would be greater than her value when repaired, and that she would become a total loss. Therefore he was justified in assuming there was imminent danger of her becoming a total loss; and he would, according to the rule I have enunciated, the moment he received information which would lead any reasonable man to come to that conclusion, be bound to give notice of abandonment, unless he was excused."

In Meagher v. Aetna Ins. Co., 20 U. C. Q. B. 607, Robinson, C. J., said: "The test [of a total loss] by the law of England clearly is whether a prudent man would think it worth his while to attempt to save and repair the vessel; and it is assumed that he would not do it unless he had the prospect of gaining something by the attempt; in other words, that he would not make the attempt unless it appeared probable that the vessel, when got off and restored to the state she was in before the accident, would be worth as much as the operation would cost him. The English authorities have, as we conceive, at last fully established that as the criterion of a total loss."

Result of Peril not Conclusive.—In Hall v. Ocean Ins. Co., 37 Fed. Rep. 371, Carpenter, J., said: "The peril of the ship cannot be measured by the ultimate result of the efforts to save her. I am to look at the danger in which she was, rather than to the damage which she received." See also Wallace v. Thames Ins. Co., 22 Fed. Rep. 66; Orient Mut. Ins. Co. v. Adams, 123 U. S. 67; Thompson v. Mississippi Marine, etc., Ins. Co., 2 La. 239, 22 Am. Dec. 129. Though the actual injury proves less than the half value this is not conclusive. Fulton Ins. Co. v. Goodman, 32 Ala. 108; Peele v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 3 Mason (U. S.) 27; Bradlie v. Maryland Ins. Co., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 378; Norton v. Lexington F., etc., Ins. Co., 16 Ill. 235; American Ins. Co. v. Ogden, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 532; 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 287; Mordecai v. Fireman's Ins. Co., 12 Rich. (S. Car.) 512.

(4) Loss of Adventure—Inability to Repair.—When there is not a total loss by reason of the quantum of damage, or immediate imminence of total loss, yet, if the undertaking insured is broken up, or there is a lack of the means of repairing the injury sustained at the port of distress, an abandonment is justified.¹

c. COMPUTATION—(1) Value of Vessel.—The value of a vessel, within the rule as to one half loss, is the half of the general market value of the vessel at the time and place of the disaster, not its value for any particular voyage or purpose.²

doctrine has been laid down in Ohio. Notice by the assured, of abandonment because the cost will exceed fifty per cent, does not conclude the parties, but both are bound at last by the test of the actual cost of raising and repairing. Peabody Ins. Co. v. Packet Co., 5 Am. L. Rec. (Ohio) 499. Compare also Hall v. Franklin Ins. Co., 9 Pick. (Mass.) 466, where it was held that imminent danger of a total loss is no ground for an abandonment. Thus, if a ship, being damaged, is abandoned on her way to a port of repair, the abandonment will be void if the vessel arrives and is repaired for less than one half value. See also Peele v. Suffolk Ins. Co., 7 Pick. (Mass.) 254, 19 Am. Dec. 286; Sewall v. U. S. Ins. Co., 11 Pick. (Mass.) 90; Reynolds v. Ocean Ins. Co., 22 Pick. (Mass.) 191; Marmaud v. Melledge, 123 Mass. 173. This is, of course, the logical consequence of the doctrine of the insurer's right to repair. See infra, this title, Right of Insurer to Repair. As to what danger justifies abandonment in cases of stranding, see infra, this title, Stranding and Submersion, notes.

Limitations of Test of Prudent Owner.—The remarks of Chancellor Walworth, in American Ins. Co. v. Ogden, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 287, are instructive as to the difference of the English and American rules, and the limitations of the test of the prudent owner in America. He said: "The rule of permitting the assured to abandon when the vessel has been injured to more than half the value does not exist in England. * * * As this principle of adopting an arbitrary rule of proportion between the value of the vessel and the expense of repairing her at the port of distress, for the purpose of ascertaining the right of the assured to abandon as for a total loss, was substituted for the more uncertain rule which exists in England, of leaving it to the jury to determine as a matter of fact, in all cases, whether the situation of the vessel was such as to make it a justifiable case of abandonment, or of a sale of the ship for the benefit of all parties, the courts of this country should be cautious how they depart from the established rule, or they will find the underwriters and the assured again involved in the ruinous litigation which the adoption of a fixed and certain rule was intended to obviate. I agree that there may be cases—where the vessel is stranded, with partial wreck, or is rendered otherwise unnavigable at a distance from any regular port, and where the means of repair or the necessary funds for that purpose could not have been procured, even if the master was furnished with the ordinary powers to obtain them—in which, from the necessity of the case, there must be an abandonment or sale of the wreck of the ship. Pardessus admits that such cases may exist even under the present Commercial Code of France, the 390th article of which declares that an abandonment on the ground of incapacity to navigate cannot be made if the vessel stranded (echoue) may be gotten off, repaired, and put in a state to continue her course to her place of destination. (Pardessus Du Droit Com., part 3, tit. 5. c. 3, § 4, note 842. Tome 3, p. 370.) * * * The principle of submitting it to a jury in each case, to decide what a prudent owner would do, for the purpose of determining the right of the assured to abandon, would necessarily lead to ruinous litigation, and would deprive both the insurers and the assured of all the benefits intended to be secured to them by the adoption of the rule as to the extent of the repairs exceeding half the value of the vessel. It appears to me to be wholly inconsistent with reason and justice to permit both rules to stand together. The question as to what a prudent owner would do may be a very proper rule of decision in a case of stranding, and before it is known whether the vessel can be gotten off, or what injury she has sustained or may sustain in her then situation; and the other rule cannot be applied to such a case. But the adoption of such a principle in other cases, where the vessel is safely moored in a regular port, would probably have the effect here, as it has already had in England, of compelling underwriters to insert a stipulation in the policy that there shall be no abandonment except in case of capture, or detention, or where the vessel is stranded."

1. This test evidently shades into those already given, but is placed here for the sake of distinctness. See infra, this title, Particular Cases, and especially thereunder Loss or Retardation of Voyage; Sale by Necessity.

In Peele v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 3 Mason (U. S.) 27, Story, J., said: "If there be any general principle that pervades and governs [the cases on abandonment], it seems to be this, that the right to abandon exists whenever, from the circumstances of the case, the ship, for all the useful purposes of a ship for the voyage, is, for the present, gone from the control of the owner, and the time when she will be restored to him in a state to resume the voyage is uncertain or unreasonably distant, or the risk and expense are disproportioned to the expected benefit and objects of the voyage." See also American Ins. Co. v. Ogden, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 532.

2. Center v. American Ins. Co., 7 Cow.

(2) Expense of Repairs and Transshipment.—The expense of repairs is usually the main element in computing total loss.¹ Costs of repairs are to be estimated at the port of distress.² Where there is a total loss of cargo the expenses of transshipment and sale are to be deducted from the gross receipts of sale in computing a total loss.³ In computing a total loss on freight, no deduction is to be made for expenses of wages and provisions.⁴

(3) One Third New for Old.—Whether, in estimating the quantum of loss to determine total loss or not, the deduction of one third from the cost of repairs in favor of the insurer for the value of the new materials is to be made, as in cases of partial loss, is a question upon which the decisions are conflicting.⁵

Vessels Built for Particular Trade.—As to peculiar vessels built with a view to a particular trade, it was suggested by Wood, V. C., in African Steamship Co. v. Swanzy, 2 Kay & J. 664, that the proper criterion would be the price given for the vessel and the subsequent deterioration. See also Grainger v. Martin, 31 L. J. Q. B. 186.

3. In Portsmouth Ins. Co. v. Brazee, 16 Ohio 82, there was a valued policy on cargo consisting of flour. The flour was sunk by a collision, and afterward raised and forwarded to New Orleans, the port of destination. In consequence of its damaged condition an immediate sale was necessary. It was held that the broker's charges of commission for making the sale and the expense of transshipment from the place of the disaster were properly estimated in favor of the insured in computing a total loss.

For expenses of forwarding cargo, see Farnworth v. Hyde, 18 C. B., N. S. 835.

4. Stevens v. Columbian Ins. Co., 3 Cai. (N. Y.) 43, 2 Am. Dec. 247.

The wages and provisions of the officers and crew while a ship is being repaired are not to be included in constructive total loss; but a reasonable allowance should be made for the custody of the vessel, if necessary during such repairs, and for superintendence, which allowance should be charged to the account of labor, the usual deduction of one third new for old being made. Hall v. Ocean Ins. Co., 21 Pick. (Mass.) 472.

Premium for Further Insurance.—The premiums which would be required to insure against the risks of plunder and weather during transportation of goods insured from place of wreck to place of destination are not to be included in estimating fifty per cent loss. Bryant v. Com. Ins. Co., 13 Pick. (Mass.) 543.

(4) Salvage, General Average, and Jettison.—The salvage contribution of the party claiming a total loss is to be taken into account in his favor, to determine whether his loss reaches the proportion required for a total loss.¹ It is proper to take into account goods jettisoned to make up a constructive total loss.² Items proper to be included in estimating general average are not so taken into account.³

(5) Under Valued Policies.—In computing a constructive total loss under a valued policy the rule in England, and that which obtains in some of the courts in the United States, is that the actual facts alone are to be considered, as in cases of partial loss. Thus a ship is a constructive total loss in the courts of the United States where this rule prevails, if it costs more than one half the actual value of the ship to repair.⁴

In some of the states, on the other hand, the valuation in the policy is conclusive—the damage must exceed one half the valuation therein stated.⁵

General Average Charges Due to Insured.—Where a vessel is damaged, and vessel, cargo, and freight all belong to one person, the owner cannot recover for a total loss against the insurer, where the general average contributions due the vessel from freight and cargo would bring the loss below one half. Pezant v. National Ins. Co., 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 453.

The reason given is that a contrary rule would lead to a multiplicity of suits, but this evil would not result where the owners of vessel, cargo, and freight were different persons, and the insured entitled to contribution need not diminish his loss by the general average due to him. Pezant v. National Ins.

Co., 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 453; Maggrath v. Church, 1 Cal. (N. Y.) 215, 2 Am. Dec. 173; Forbes v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 1 Gray (Mass.) 371. See also Dickenson v. Jardine, L. R. 3 C. P. 639; Lord v. Neptune Ins. Co., 10 Gray (Mass.) 126; Potter v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 4 Mason (U. S.) 298. But it has been held that in any case the insured must deduct the general average due to him in making up the fifty per cent loss. Lapsley v. Pleasants, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 502.

4. In Irving v. Manning, 6 C. B. 391, it was held that the question of loss, whether total or not, is to be determined as if there were no policy at all; that the nature of the loss being thus determined, the quantum of compensation is then to be fixed by the valuation in the policy. This case was erroneously cited to the opposite doctrine in Murray v. Great Western Ins. Co., 72 Hun (N. Y.) 282. See also Peele v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 3 Mason (U. S.) 27; Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Southgate, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 604; Bradlie v. Maryland Ins. Co., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 378; Fulton Ins. Co. v. Goodman, 32 Ala. 108; Peabody Ins. Co. v. Packet Co., 5 Am. L. Rec. (Ohio) 499.

Valued Policy on Freight.—The actual freight and not the valuation in the policy is decisive. Boardman v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 146 Mass. 442. See also Dumas v. U. S. Ins. Co., 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 437.

5. Winn v. Columbian Ins. Co., 12 Pick. (Mass.) 279; Deblois v. Ocean Ins. Co., 16 Pick. (Mass.) 303, 28 Am. Dec. 245; Orrok v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., 21 Pick. (Mass.) 456, 32 Am. This rule, said Holmes, J., in Boardman v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 146 Mass. 442, should not be extended, in view of the state of decisions elsewhere, and is not to be applied to valued policies on freight.

The valuation of a ship in the policy prevails over the valuation made by order of a prize court in determining constructive total loss in case of capture. Loving v. Mercantile Marine Ins. Co., 12 Pick. (Mass.) 348.

Under a valued policy on freight for successive voyages the valuation is distributive, and the earnings on one voyage are not to be offset against the loss happening on another, unless circumstances show that the valuation is applicable to the aggregate amount of successive freights.¹

IV. RIGHT OF ABANDONMENT—1. Election to Abandon.—The insured is never obliged to abandon; he may always elect to retain the property and recover for a partial loss.² But if he wishes to claim for a total loss, he must abandon if the loss is merely constructively total.³

2. Limitations of the Right—a. DUTY OF INSURED TO REPAIR OR TRANSSHIP.—The assured impliedly warrants that he will guard with reasonable diligence against the risks covered by the policy, so that a loss shall not happen through his own default or negligence.⁴ It is the duty of the insured to repair, if it be possible; or, if this is impossible, to transship by another vessel.⁵ It results that a partial loss cannot be made total by the neglect of the master to repair or transship, or by an unjustifiable sale on his part.⁶

The rule that the valuation is decisive may be fixed by the policy. Bullard v. Roger Williams Ins. Co., 1 Curt. (U. S.) 148; Copeland v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 1 Woolw. (U. S.) 278.

Premium.—Where the premium is made a part of the amount insured, the loss must exceed one half the whole valuation, including premium to authorize abandonment. Orrok v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., 21 Pick. (Mass.) 456, 32 Am. Dec. 271; Hall v. Ocean Ins. Co., 21 Pick. (Mass.) 472.

1. Under a policy of insurance on freight from Boston to San Francisco, and thence to port or ports in the East Indies and to a port of discharge in the United States, with liberty to return with a cargo of guano from the Chincha Islands instead of the East Indies, freight earned on the outward voyage is not to be deducted from the valuation in the policy in computing a constructive total loss of freight on the passage from the Chincha Islands home. Thwing v. Washington Ins. Co., 10 Gray (Mass.) 443.

2. Pitman v. Universal Marine Ins. Co., 45 L. T., N. S. 46; Murray v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co., 2 Wash. (U. S.) 186; Marean v. U. S. Ins. Co., 3 Wash. (U. S.) 256; Rugely v. Sun Ins. Co., 7 La. Although, when the loss is constructively total, the insured elects to treat it as partial, yet he may recover for a total loss if a change of facts makes the loss absolutely total. *Stringer v. On a policy of reinsurance no notice of abandonment is necessary. Uzielli v. Boston Mar. Ins. Co., 15 Q. D. Div. 11.

Where the insurer makes a claim upon the underwriter for an absolute total loss, and the latter refuses to pay unconditionally, the right to an abandonment is waived. Sherlock v. Globe Ins. Co., 1 Cinc. Super. Ct. Rep. (Ohio) 193.

When the insured seeks to recover on the ground of loss of voyage, he must, in general, show that another vessel could not be procured. Schieffelin v. New York Ins. Co., 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 21.

result of the negligence of the insured. But such want of diligence does not discharge the insurer from any other risk or loss covered by the policy, and not caused or increased by the defect resulting from the negligence. American Ins. Co. v. Ogden, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 287.

And under the rule causa proxima non remota spectatur, if the direct cause of loss is a risk covered by the policy, it does not bar recovery that the loss was occasioned remotely by the negligence of the insured's servants. *Williams v. Voluntary Surrender of Cargo, Free of Freight.

—Under a contract for the insurance of freight, the owners or master of the vessel cannot voluntarily surrender or abandon the cargo to the shipper or underwriter, free of freight, upon the occurrence of any injury short of a technical loss, or inability to deliver the goods in specie at the port of destination. If the owner demands the goods at the port of detention, the master should make payment of full freight a condition to the delivery. Having surrendered them without payment, he cannot hold the insurer liable. Allen v. Mercantile Mut. Ins. Co., 44 N. Y. 437, 4 Am. Rep. 700. See also Hughes v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 100 N. Y. 58.

Withholding Means of Repair.—An owner cannot convert a partial loss into a total loss by withholding the means of repair, where the cost would not exceed fifty per cent of the value. Dunning v. Merchants' Mut., etc., Ins. Co., 57 Me. 108; Greely v. Tremont Ins. Co., 9 Cush. (Mass.) 415; Orrok v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., 21 Pick. (Mass.) 456, 32 Am. Dec. 271; *Hall v. Ocean Ins. If there are no reasonable means of repairing at the place where the vessel is injured, and she can be safely navigated to a port where repairs may be made for less than half her value, the master must proceed to such port. Hall v. Franklin Ins. Co., 9 Pick. (Mass.) 466; Orrok v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., 21 Pick. (Mass.) 456, 32 Am. Dec. 271; Ruckman v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co., 5 Duer (N. Y.) 343; *American Ins. Allowing Unnecessary Sale.—If the owners allow a sale to be made when it is in their power to prevent it, the loss is not total.

Neglect to Tranship.—If the vessel is so damaged that the owner is entitled to abandon, he cannot be required to repair in order to carry on the cargo; but he can be required to ship by another vessel. American Ins. Co. v. Center, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 45. See also Dunning v. Merchants' Mut., etc., Ins. Co., 57 Me. 108.

Insurers are not liable for total loss on goods where the master might have transhipped for less than fifty per cent of their value, but instead of doing so sold them. Bryant v. Com. Ins. Co., 13 Pick. (Mass.) 543.

Damage which might be repaired in twelve days, in a safe harbor, does not justify transshipment; and such transshipment discharges the insurers. Salisbury v. Marine Ins. Co., 23 Mo. 553, 66 Am. Dec. 687.

River Craft.—But it has been held that the duty to repair before transshipment does not apply so strictly, in the case of river craft, as in that of vessels navigating the high seas, since river voyages are short; and shippers have the right to expect and require that in the case of detention from accident their goods shall not be detained to await lengthy repairs, but shall be forwarded promptly to their destination. *Roe v. Illustrations.—Where loss by capture was excepted by the policy from the risks assumed, and the ship, by perils of the sea, was damaged to more than half its value, but before abandonment was captured and sold by a foreign government, it was held that the antecedent partial loss merged in the subsequent capture, by which the subject-matter was wholly lost, and that there could be no recovery. Rice v. Homer, 12 Mass. 230.

Where a vessel was arrested by a belligerent power, and the master illegally rescued it, and the ship was recaptured and condemned as prize, the loss happened from a cause not within the policy, and there could not be a recovery. Robinson v. Jones, 8 Mass. 536, 5 Am. Dec. 114. Compare M'Lellan v. Maine F., etc., Ins. Co., 12 Mass. 246.

The insertion of the words "not liable for any repairs made in California," in a policy of insurance on a vessel, does not prevent the assured from making an abandonment and claiming a constructive total loss if the vessel is stranded in California and cannot be thoroughly repaired there at a cost less than

c. DEPENDS ON STATE OF FACTS.—The right to abandon depends on the facts as to the loss existing at the time of the abandonment, not on the information of the person abandoning.¹ In the United States, the right to abandon, once vested, can never divest by reason of a subsequent change of circumstances.² In England it is otherwise, and unless the facts justifying abandonment continue up to suit brought, the abandonment is futile.³

3. Hamilton v. Mendes, 2 Burr. 1198; Bainbridge v. Neilson, 10 East 329.

In Hamilton v. Mendes, 2 Burr. 1198, Lord Mansfield decided that abandonment was not effectual unless the facts constituting total loss existed at the time of abandonment; but he expressly left as an open question what would be the effect of recovery between the time of the abandonment and action brought. In Bainbridge v. Neilson, 10 East 329, the latter question was not necessarily involved, but the opinion of the judges shows that in their view the loss must continue total till action brought.

In McCarthy v. Abel, 5 East 388, 7 Rev. Rep. 711, it was held that an abandonment well made at the time may be divested by subsequent events. See also Patterson v. Ritchie, 4 M. & S. 393; Wilson v. Forster, 6 Taunt. 25; Brotherston v. Barber, 5 M. & S. 418; Naylor v. Taylor, 9 B. & C. 718; Taylor v. Smith, 1 Han. c. ABANDONMENT MUST BE ENTIRE.—The abandonment must be of the whole interest of the insured in the property abandoned, so far as that interest is covered by the policy.¹

Dicta to the same effect are to be found in King v. Middletown Ins. Co., 1 Conn. 201, and King v. Hartford Ins. Co., 1 Conn. 425.

In Wood v. Lincoln, etc., Ins. Co., 6 Mass. 479, 4 Am. Dec. 163, the ship stranded, and the owner offered to abandon; the underwriters refused the offer and undertook to recover the vessel, succeeded in the attempt, carried her to the termination of the voyage, repaired her, and offered her to the owner. As there was no proof as to what degree of injury was sustained by the stranding, it was held that there was only a partial loss. Parsons, C.J., said: "Where the stranding is under such circumstances that the attempt to recover and repair the ship in a reasonable time for the prosecution of the voyage may be hazardous, but not hopeless—if the underwriter will engage to pay all the expenses, whatever may be the event, the owner cannot abandon until he has used such reasonable endeavors to recover his ship, and has eventually failed. And a fortiori, if the underwriter will himself undertake, at his own expense, for the owner, the recovery of his ship, and shall succeed, and offer to restore her to him, so that he may seasonably prosecute his voyage, the owner cannot abandon, for neither the ship nor the voyage is lost."

In Peele v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 3 Mason (U. S.) 27, this right of the insurer to repair is learnedly and exhaustively discussed by Judge Story. After the ship insured had been cast on rocks and was in a desperate situation, the owners abandoned. There was no acceptance or refusal of the abandonment, but the underwriters took exclusive possession of the ship, and by extraordinary good fortune and good weather got her to Portsmouth, repaired her in three months, and offered to return her to the insured. The latter refused to accept her, and never authorized the repairs in any manner. It was held that the underwriters had no right to take possession of the ship, either to remove or repair her, without the owners' consent, and that their acts amounted in law to an acceptance of the abandonment. Judge Story commented upon and disapproved the broad doctrines of Wood v. Lincoln, etc., Ins. Co., 6 Mass. 479, 4 Am. Dec. 163; Hart v. Delaware Ins. Co., 2 Wash. (U. S.) 346; and Ritchie v. U. S. Ins. Co., 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 509. He said: "If the meaning [of Parsons, C.J., as quoted supra] be that in a doubtful case, where the expense of repairs must be great, though not with certainty one half; or where, by the stranding, and delay consequent thereon, the voyage may be, but not in all probability must be, lost; if the underwriters offer to bear all the expenses of the experiment, the owner cannot abandon, there seems much reason for admitting such an offer as a material ingredient in considering whether the owner has a right to abandon. * * * But the offer itself has never been relied on to defeat an indisputably vested right of abandonment."

In Richelieu, etc., Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408, the Supreme Court of the United States touches on, but expresses no opinion as to, the insurer's right to repair; but if the insurer makes no offer to repair until after abandonment, that court has held that it has no effect on the abandonment. Columbian Ins. Co. v. Ashby, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 145. See also Cincinnati Ins. Co. v. Bakewell, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 541; Marine Dock, etc., Ins. Co. v. Goodman, 4 Am. L. Reg. 481; Fulton Ins. Co. v. Goodman, 32 Ala. 108.

In Younger v. Gloucester Marine Ins. Co., Sprague (U. S.) 236, Sprague, D.J., says: "This doctrine is peculiar to Massachusetts. I believe it is not to be found anywhere else, either in the decisions of the federal courts or in the courts of any other state, or in the law of England, or of the continent of Europe." The doctrine has met with a wider approval since this decision. For other cases throwing light on this question, see infra, this title, Acceptance.

The whole question depends largely upon the wording and construction of the "sue and labor" clause of the policy. Norton v. Lexington F., etc., Ins. Co., 16 Ill. 235; Northwestern Transp. Co. v. Thames, etc., Ins. Co., 59 Mich. 214; Schuyler v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 56 Hun (N. Y.) 493.

In Massachusetts the clause in question specifies the right. See cases cited, supra, in the notes to this paragraph.

The Restoration must be in a Reasonable Time.—Copelin v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 46 Mo. 211, 2 Am. Rep. 504.

In Peele v. Suffolk Ins. Co., 7 Pick. (Mass.) 254, 19 Am. Dec. 286, it was held that, unless the insurer, after taking possession of the vessel to repair, do so, and restore her in a reasonable time, he forfeits his right to return her. In announcing the general principle in the case, Parker, C.J., said that the insurer might restore the vessel if he had repaired her at less than half her value. This seems to be the received form of the rule. Marmand v. Melledge, 123 Mass. 173.

Repairs must be Sufficient.—Unless the repairs are sufficient the owner need not accept the offer to return, Reynolds v. Ocean Ins. Co., 22 Pick. (Mass.) 191, 33 Am. Dec. 727; Copelin v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 46 Mo. 211, 2 Am. Rep. 504; but he must object to the sufficiency of the repairs. Marmand v. Melledge, 123 Mass. 173.

insured to abandon, there must be a total loss, either real or constructive, at some period of the voyage.¹ This loss must happen before the termination of the risk.² A loss merely partial cannot be made total by an offer of abandonment;³ but when a person insures only part of his interest he may abandon that part only.⁴ Abandonment is not favored.⁵

b. PARTICULAR CASES—(1) Capture, Embargo, and Blockade—(a) In General.—Capture, embargo, and blockade may operate as an actual or constructive total loss, according to the course of subsequent events.⁶ Each is for the time a Co.*, 15 La. Ann. 201; Copelin v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 46 Mo. 211, 2 Am. Rep. 504. See supra, this title, Election to Abandon.

Even when loss is actual, it is probable that abandonment is usual. Callender v. North America Ins. Co., 5 Binn. (Pa.) 525.

2. Thus if the loss happens after the vessel has been twenty-four hours in port, where the policy is limited to the voyage and the ship's being moored twenty-four hours in safety, the insurer is not liable. Lockyer v. Offley, 1 T. R. 252. See also Allen v. Commercial Ins. Co., 1 Gray (Mass.) 154; Chadsey v. Guion, 97 N. Y. 333; Parage v. Dale, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 156; Pezant v. National Ins. Co., 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 453; Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co. v. New Orleans Mut. Ins. Co., 24 La. Ann. 305; Ferguson v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 5 Binn. (Pa.) 544.

If, however, the ship receives her death-wound during the voyage, and, greatly damaged, and with only a part of her cargo, reaches the port of destination, the loss is total. Stagg v. United Ins. Co., 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 34; Ralston v. Union Ins. Co., 4 Binn. (Pa.) 386; Peters v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 25; Dorr v. New England Ins. Co., 11 Mass. 1; Shawe v. Folton, 2 East 109, 6 Rev. Rep. 394.

After any considerable portion of the goods, though less than one-half, has arrived at the port of destination and been landed in a perfect state, the assured cannot abandon and recover for the total loss. Forbes v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 1 Gray (Mass.) 371.

Lien for Repairs.—But though damage to an amount exceeding fifty per cent has been sustained, if repairs are actually made, and the vessel completes her voyage and arrives in safety, the right to abandon is gone, and the lien upon the vessel for repairs does not continue the loss total. Humphreys v. Union Ins. Co., 3 Mason (U. S.) 429.

But the lien is held, by Savage, C. J., in Dickey v. New York Ins. Co., 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 232, to continue the loss, so as to keep the right of abandonment in existence. The case was decided, however, upon a different question.

In Allen v. Commercial Ins. Co., 1 Gray (Mass.) 154, it is doubted whether the insured could make a valid abandonment before discharging such a lien.

Blockade.—Blockade is good ground for abandonment where a vessel attempting to come out is boarded and turned back, or if, in attempting to enter the blockaded port, she is turned back. In either case the force is directly applied. Olivera v. U. S. Ins. Co., 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 183; Craig v. United Ins. Co., 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 226, 5 Am. Dec. 222; Symonds v. Union Ins. Co., 4 Dall. United Marine, etc., Ins. Co.*, 12 Mass. 288.

But warning and notification of a blockade do not justify abandonment. King v. Delaware Ins. Co., 2 Wash. (U. S.) 300.

In Schmidt v. United Ins. Co., 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 249, 3 Am. Dec. 319, a vessel was notified that the port of destination was blockaded, and thereupon proceeded to the port nearest thereto. It was held that an abandonment was justified. This case has been criticised as countenancing abandonment quia timet, because, non constitit, had the vessel proceeded she would have found the blockade raised. See King v. Delaware Ins. Co., 2 Wash. (U. S.) 300.

Special Provisions in Policy.—The right to abandon for capture may be suspended, by reason of the provision in the policy, until condemnation, or until the expiration of a certain time after the capture or detention, and due notice thereof to the underwriters. Dorr v. Union Ins. Co., 8 Mass. 502; Delano v. Bedford Marine Ins. Co., 10 Mass. 347, 6 Am. Dec. 132; Law v. Goddard, 12 Mass. 112.

2. The redelivery of a captured vessel upon bail, by order of the prize court, is no determination of the hostile detention. Lovering v. Mercantile Marine Ins. Co., 12 Pick. (Mass.) 348; Mey v. Tunno, 2 Bay (S. Car.) 307. See also M'Iver v. Henderson, 4 M. & S. 576, 16 Rev. Rep. 550.

But if the abandonment is valid when made, a subsequent restoration does not defeat the abandonment. Lovering v. Mercantile Marine Ins. Co., 12 Pick. (Mass.) 348; Lee v. Boardman, 3 Mass. 238, 3 Am. Dec. 134; Munson v. New England Marine Ins. Co., 4 Mass. 88; Smith v. Robertson, 2 Dowl. 474. See also Hudson v. Harrison, 3 B. & B. 97.

Where a vessel is prevented from completing her voyage by a blockade, and the cargo is delivered by consent at another port near the port of discharge, there can be no abandonment, the whole purpose of the voyage having been answered by the previous delivery of the cargo. Shapley v. Tappan, 9 Mass. 20.

Where, before abandonment for capture, the vessel is illegally rescued by the master, and is afterwards retaken and condemned for the rescue, the insured is not entitled to abandon. Robinson v. Jones, 8 Mass. 536, 5 Am. Dec. 114. But it is otherwise if the rescue is legal and the vessel is retaken and lost. M'Lellan v. Maine F., etc., Ins. Co., 12 Mass. 246.

Restoration, after a capture, takes away the insured's right to abandon, though unknown to the insured. Hallett v. Peyton, 1 Cai. Cas. (N. Y.) 28; Church v. Bedient, 1 Cai. Cas. (N. If there is an illegal seizure, and the insured regains possession by purchase, the title is not changed, and he cannot recover for a total loss. Wilson v. Forster, 6 Taunt. 25, 1 Marsh. 425, 16 Rev. Rep. 560.

If recapture be made with a view to salvage, and the whole loss is not fifty per cent, and there is only a temporary interruption of the voyage, the insured cannot abandon. Queen v. Union Ins. Co., 2 Wash. (U. S.) 331.

In cases of recapture the particular circumstances of the case determine whether the loss is partial or total. Marine Ins. Co. v. Tucker, 3 Cranch (U. S.) 357.

(2) Loss and Retardation of Voyage.—If the insurance be on a ship for a voyage the undertaking is that the voyage shall not be destroyed by the fault of the ship, by reason of the happening to her of any of the perils insured against.¹ Consequently, the loss of the cargo for the voyage is not a cause for an abandonment;² and if the ship is damaged, the question under such a policy is her seaworthiness with respect to the voyage insured.³ Where there is an insurance on goods for a voyage, if, by reason of perils insured against, the cargo is permanently prevented from arriving at the port of destination, there is a total loss.⁴ And the loss of defense becomes impossible, has been held sufficient ground for abandonment. Mesonier v. Union Ins. Co., 1 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 155. And see Savage v. Pleasants, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 403, 6 Am. Dec. 424. So also where it appears with moral certainty that a law of the country to which the ship is bound applies to the vessel, and that under such law she will be confiscated if she should arrive. *Craig v. Investure of the Port where the insured vessel is, by an enemy, is a good cause for an abandonment; and such an abandonment is quia timet. Saltus v. United Ins. Co., 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 523.

Massachusetts Rule.—The rule seems to be more strict in Massachusetts. Richardson v. Maine F., etc., Ins. Co., 6 Mass. 102, 4 Am. Dec. 92; Brewer v. Union Ins. Co., 12 Mass. 170, 7 Am. Dec. 53.

It has been declared that the owner may abandon if the voyage is lost, defeated, or broken up. Hamilton v. Mendez, 2 Burr. 1198. And see Cazalet v. St. Barbe, 1 T. R. 187. In Alexander v. Baltimore Ins. Co., 4 Cranch (U. S.) 370, Chief Justice Marshall examined these and other old English cases, and arrived at the doctrine stated in the text.

In Snow v. Union Mut. Marine Ins. Co., 119 Mass. 592, 20 Am. Rep. 349, the "Helen Snow" was insured for a whaling voyage, and, being jammed fast in the ice of the Arctic Ocean, so that it was impossible to extricate her, she was deserted by her officers and crew. Afterward the ice became loosened, and the vessel was brought out by the master and crew of another vessel and held for salvage; but the master of the "Helen Snow," whose crew had become scattered, was unable to obtain a crew, or to regain possession of the vessel so as to pursue the voyage for which she was insured, and she was brought by the salvors to San Francisco, and before her arrival at that port was abandoned by the owners to the underwriters. It was held that there was a constructive total loss and that the abandonment was good. In delivering the opinion of the court, Gray, C. J., said: "It is true that a loss of the voyage is not necessarily a loss of the ship, within the meaning of a policy of insurance upon her. But if the ship herself is once totally lost by a peril insured against, and the master, using due diligence, is unable to regain possession of her in such a condition and under such circumstances as to enable her to pursue the voyage for which she was insured, the right to abandon and to recover for a constructive total loss still remains, without regard to the question whether at some future time, over which the master has no control, he might be able to regain possession of her on payment of salvage, and without regard to the proportion between the amount of the salvage and the value of the vessel."

3. Abbott v. Broome, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 292, 2 Am. Dec. 187. In this case Radcliff, J., said: "The question in such cases is not whether the vessel is to be in a capacity, or in a situation to be repaired, so as to prosecute her voyage with a half or any other portion of her cargo, but whether she is capable of proceeding, or of being refitted to proceed, and carry the whole. A vessel is not seaworthy unless she be in a condition to carry a full cargo." It was held, further, that if the vessel could not carry her cargo, the fact that she could carry a more buoyant one was of no importance. See also the remarks of Swift, C. J., in King v. Hartford Ins. Co., 1 Conn. 427.

Where the ship is so damaged that she has to put back to her starting-point and cannot pursue her voyage, there is a total loss, because the voyage in contemplation is lost. Manning v. Newnham, Camp. 624, 12 Rev. Rep. 761; Fuller v. M'Call, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 464, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 219, 1 Am. Dec. 312.

4. Insurance on Cargo for Voyage.—Manning v. Newnham, 2 Camp. 624, 12 Rev. Rep. 761; Gilfert v. Hallet, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 296.

In a case of insurance on goods for voyage, it was held that if the voyage was broken up by an event over which the assured had no control (a capture) the assured might abandon. Savage v. Pleasants, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 403, 6 Am. Dec. 424.

In Robinson v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 220, Story, J., said: "If the vessel during the voyage is injured by the perils of the seas to the extent of half her value, and no other vessel can be procured to carry on the cargo to the port of destination; or if the vessel, though repairable, cannot be repaired within a reasonable time, and before the cargo, being of a perishable nature will be irretrievably destroyed by the delay to repair; in such a case the insured is entitled to abandon, and recover for a total loss."

voyage by necessary sale at an intermediate port justifies an abandonment.¹

But mere retardation of a voyage by a peril insured against is no ground for abandonment.²

(3) Stranding and Submersion.—Stranding or submersion may or may not be a total loss, according to the circumstances of the case.³

1. Columbian Ins. Co. v. Catlett, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 383; Akin v. Mississippi Marine, etc., Ins. Co., 4 Martin, N. S. (La.) 661. This may sometimes be an actual total loss. See infra, this title, Sale by Necessity.

2. Mere Retardation no Ground for Abandonment.—Thus, where a ship is not damaged to an extent which permanently disables her to perform the voyage, the mere retardation is no ground for abandonment. Falkner v. Ritchie, 2 M. & S. 290, 15 Rev. Rep. 253. And see Ruckman v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co., 5 Duer (N. Y.) 342.

In Bradlie v. Maryland Ins. Co., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 378, the authorities were examined by Story, J., who said: "The mere retardation of the voyage by any of the perils insured against, not amounting to or producing a total incapacity of the ship eventually to perform the voyage, cannot, upon principles well established, be admitted to constitute a technical total loss which will authorize an abandonment. A retardation for the purpose of repairing damages from the perils insured against, that damage not exceeding one moiety of the value of the ship, falls directly within this doctrine."

The Principle Applies also to Freight and Cargo.—The same principle (that retardation is not loss) applies to freight, Everth v. Smith, 2 M. & S. 278, 15 Rev. Rep. 246; Mayo v. Maine F., etc., Ins. Co., 4 Mass. 374; Murray v. Etna Ins. Co., 4 Biss. (U. S.) 417; Jordan v. Warren Ins. Co., 1 Story (U. S.) 342; and to cargo, where the detention is caused by damage to the ship which is repairable, Anderson v. Wallis, 2 M. & S. 240, 14 Rev. Rep. 642; Hunt v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co., 5 M. & S. 47.

Detention by Admiralty Proceedings.—Detention by admiralty proceedings is no more a cause of abandonment than detention from any other cause. Bradlie v. Maryland Ins. Co., 12 Pet. (U. S.) 378.

3. Stranding is not Ipso Facto a Total Loss.—Church v. Marine Ins. Co., 1 Mason (U. S.) 341; Howland v. Marine Ins. Co., 2 Cranch (U. S.) 474; Peele v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 3 Mason (U. S.) 27; King v. Middletown Ins. Co., 1 Conn. 201; King v. Hartford Ins. Co., 1 Conn. 422; Wood v. Lincoln, etc., Ins. Co., 6 Mass. 479, 4 Am. Dec. 163; Sewall U. S. Ins. Co., 11 Pick. (Mass.) 90; Peele v. Suffolk Ins. Co., 7 Pick. (Mass.) 254, 19 Am. Dec. 286; Lincoln v. Hope Ins. Co., 8 Gray (Mass.) 22; Ludlow v. Columbian Ins. Co., 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 335; Patrick v. Commercial Ins. Co., 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 9; Allen v. Mercantile Mut. Ins. Co., 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 642; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. McGhee, 18 Can. Supreme Ct. Rep. 61.

To justify an abandonment in case of stranding, the vessel must be in extreme hazard; that is, her situation must be such that there is imminent danger of her being lost, notwithstanding all the means that can be applied to get her off, all the means within the power of the crew to use, and the assistance within the power of the master to obtain. King v. Hartford Ins. Co., 1 Conn. 422.

In Ludlow v. Columbian Ins. Co., 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 335, it is held that to justify an abandonment on stranding, the goods must be deteriorated to half their value. But see supra, this title, Imminence of Peril.

Stranding Followed by Shipwreck.—Stranding may become an absolute total loss if it is followed by shipwreck. Patrick v. Commercial Ins. Co., 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 9.

When a Vessel is Sunk and there is no hope of recovery, the loss is total. Shawe v. Felton, 6 R. R. 394, 2 East 109; Crosby v. New York Mut. Ins. Co., 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 369.

Ship Recovered after Stranding.—If the ship is stranded and in such extreme peril as to justify abandonment, and abandonment is actually made, the fact that the ship was afterward gotten off is immaterial, and does not affect the abandonment, King v. Middletown Ins. Co., 1 Conn. 201; unless where the right of the insurers to refuse the abandonment is recognized, and they do refuse, get the vessel off, and restore her to the insured, People v. Suffolk Ins. Co., 7 Pick. (Mass.) 264, 19 Am. Dec. 286. See supra, this title, Right of Insurer to Repair.

Submerged Vessel Raised.—In Sewell v. U. S. Ins. Co., 11 Pick. (Mass.) 90, submersion where the vessel was raised after about six weeks, and repaired, was held not to create a total loss. Shaw, C. J., said: "Some authorities say, we are aware, that a submersion de facto amounts to a total loss, but we think it would be difficult to maintain this position. For instance, a vessel might sink whilst repairing, and when her masts are out, so as to be wholly out of sight, and yet be under the control of the owner, so that when raised and pumped out she will be as valuable as before. It will be admitted that where a vessel is sunk in the sea it affords strong prima facie evidence of total loss, because it would in general preclude all hope of recovering her. We think, therefore, it comes to this, that submersion, like stranding or other serious disaster, is to be taken in connection with other circumstances in determining whether the loss is or is not total. * * * The ultimate question is, can she be raised and repaired at a reasonable expense of time and money; as, in case of stranding, the question is, can she be got off and repaired at a reasonable expense. And the question in either case must depend upon all the circumstances affecting it." See also Kemp v. Halliday, L. R. 1 Q. B. 520; Anderson v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co., 7 East 38; Doyle v. Dallas, 1 M. & R. 48.

(4) Sale by Necessity.—A sale by the master at a port of distress justifies an abandonment;¹ but the sale must have been justifiable.² Where the sale is justified, not by the constructive total loss of the article insured, but by reason of the impossibility of obtaining means of repair at the port of distress, it appears that an abandonment is necessary.³

(5) Freight.—Where the ship is disabled, and the circumstances are such as to render the total loss of freight, though not inevitable, yet highly imminent, or when more than one half the freight must necessarily be lost, or there is an actual or constructive total loss of the vessel, the insured may (subject to the stipulations of his policy) claim as for a total loss by giving due notice of the abandonment of freight to the insurer.⁴

1. In American Ins. Co. v. Francia, 9 Pa. St. 390, Gibson, C. J., said: "It seems to be settled by a decisive weight of authority that in every case of insurance on the ship or cargo, though perhaps not on freight, when the master has sold the thing insured there must be an abandonment, to avoid the conclusion that the assured has elected to go for a partial loss." See also Delaware Ins. Co. v. Winter, 38 Pa. St. 176; Columbian Ins. Co. v. Catlett, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 383; Akin v. Mississippi Marine, etc., Ins. Co., 4 Martin, N. S. (La.) 661.

A sale by the master from necessity justifies an abandonment. Mordecai v. Fireman's Ins. Co., 12 Rich. (S. Car.) 512.

It is not necessary to introduce proof that the damage amounted to fifty per cent, if the vessel was surveyed, condemned as unseaworthy and not worth repairing, and sold. Delaware Ins. Co. v. Winter, 38 Pa. St. 176.

Co.*, 2 Wash. (U. S.) 375; Currie v. Bombay Native Ins. Co., L. R. 3 C. P. 72; Gallagher v. Taylor, 5 Can. Supreme Ct. Rep. 368; Providence Washington Ins. Co. v. Corbett, 9 Can. Supreme Ct. Rep. 256; Morton v. Patillo, 9 Nova Scotia 17.

Sale not Warranted—Partial Loss.—But the insured, after an unjustifiable sale by the master, may still claim for a partial loss. Rugely v. Sun Ins. Co., 7 La. Ann. 279, 56 Am. Dec. 603; Cort v. Delaware Ins. Co., 2 Wash. (U. S.) 375.

Sale under Decree not in Consequence of Peril Insured.—Where the seizure and sale under a decree of an admiralty court are not the natural and necessary consequences of the peril insured against, there is no total loss. De Mattos v. Saunders, L. R. 7 C. P. 570. See also Meyer v. Ralli, 1 C. P. Div. 358.

The cases collected under the section Sale by Necessity, supra, this title, show that by the weight of authority an abandonment is in such case unnecessary. Of course an abandonment, even in case of actual total loss, does no harm, and the cases where an abandonment was actually made out of abundant care on the part of the insured, are not authorities to reduce sale by necessity to constructive total loss. Where no abandonment is made, the salvage, if any, goes to the insurer. See supra, this title, Total Loss with Benefit of Salvage.

3. In Allen v. Commercial Ins. Co., 1 Gray (Mass.) 154, Thomas, J., said: "But the right to abandon and claim for a total loss existing in cases of injury to an amount greater than half the value of the ship, is not restricted to them. If this vessel had been in a port of necessity in the condition described in the report, and the master had found it impossible to obtain the requisite funds for her repair, by bottomry or otherwise, or to consult the owners, a sale might have been justified; and, upon abandonment, no lien or incumbrance having been created to deprive the underwriters of the rights which it is the object of an abandonment to secure, a total loss might have been claimed (upon sale under the circumstances by the master), though the cost of repair would have been less than fifty per cent." See also Ruckman v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co., 5 Duer (N. Y.) 342.

In Moses v. Columbian Ins. Co., 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 219, there was an insurance on three hundred barrels of flour. In a storm one hundred and twenty-three barrels were jettisoned, and thirty others were so damaged that an immediate sale at the port of distress was necessary. The ship was repaired, and one hundred and forty-seven barrels arrived at the port of destination, and, crediting the sale of thirty barrels (estimating on the prime cost of the flour), the total loss was less than one half. It was held that the insured might abandon for a total loss. But compare Anchor Marine Ins. Co. v. Keith, 9 Can. Supreme Ct. Rep. 483.

4. Hubbell v. Great Western Ins. Co., 74 N. Y. 246.

Cost of Forwarding.—There is a total loss of freight, if it will cost as much to forward as the freight agreed on. Driscoll v. Millville Marine Ins. Co., 23 New Bruns. 160. See also Rankin v. Potter, L. R. 6 H. L. 83; Michael v. Gillespy, 2 C. B. N. S. 627.

Fifty per Cent Rule.—American authorities apply the fifty per cent rule. Williams v. Kennebec Mut. Ins. Co., 31 Me. 455; Whitney v. New York Firemen's Ins. Co., 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 208; American Ins. Co. v. Center, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 45; 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 564; Thwing v. Washington Ins. Co., 10 Gray (Mass.) 443; Rogers v. Nashville Marine, etc., Ins. Co., 9 La. Ann. 537. See also Callender v. North America Ins. Co., 5 Binn. (Pa.) 525. Some American cases seem to recognize the English rule. Willard v. Millers', etc., Ins. Co., 30 Mo. 35.

Transshipment.—The effect of transshipment

(6) Profits.—When the insurance is on profits, the loss of cargo is a loss of

by the master as bearing on the insured's claim for total loss of freight, is lucidly examined in Thwing v. Washington Ins. Co., 10 Gray (Mass.) 443, by Bigelow, J. He concludes that where transshipment will cost less than a moiety of the stipulated freight, the insured must forward, and cannot, by failing to do so, throw loss on the insurers. If, however, the cost of forwarding will be as great or greater than the stipulated freight, there is no duty to forward, since nothing can accrue to him or the underwriters by so doing; but if transshipment is made in such a case, it does not deprive the owner of his claim for a total loss of freight. The master, in making such transshipment, does not act for the benefit of the owner and does not bind him, unless perhaps the owner adopts and ratifies his act. In no case is the right of the owner to abandon his vessel for a constructive total loss, and thereby to lose the power of earning freight, taken away by the existence of policies on cargo and freight. See also Dunning v. Merchants' Mut. Ins. Co., 57 Me. 108.

Constructive Total Loss of Ship.—There being separate insurance under valued policies on ship and freight, and the ship, by reason of damage to an amount over one half, having become a constructive total loss, the insured on both policies abandoned; the insurers accepted the ship and refused the freight, and, having repaired, completed the voyage, and complete freight was earned. It was held that there was a total loss of freight. Coolidge v. Gloucester Marine Ins. Co., 15 Mass. 341. See also Troop v. Merchants' Marine Ins. Co., 13 Can. Supreme Court Rep. 506; Dunning v. Merchants' Mut., etc., Ins. Co., 57 Me. 108.

Vessel Disabled—Cargo Delivered.—If the vessel is disabled, but is not a constructive total loss, and the cargo is actually delivered, there is no loss of freight. Fiedler v. New York Ins. Co., 6 Duer (N. Y.) 282.

Where Ship may be Repaired and Goods Delivered in Specie.—But if the vessel, though injured, can be repaired, and the goods, however badly damaged, may yet be delivered in specie, it is the duty of the insured to take the risk and try to earn his freight; and he cannot in such case abandon and claim for a total loss. Murray v. Etna Ins. Co., 4 Biss. (U. S.) 417; Saltus v. Ocean Ins. Co., 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 138; Griswold v. New York Ins. Co., 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 205, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 321, 3 Am. Dec. 490; Allen v. Mercantile Mut. Ins. Co., 44 N. Y. 437, 4 Am. Rep. 700; Hughes v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 100 N. Y. 58; Clark v. Massachusetts F., etc., Ins. Co., 2 Pick. (Mass.) 104; Parsons v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 16 Gray (Mass.) 463; Lord v. Neptune Ins. Co., 10 Gray (Mass.) 109. See also Moss v. Smith, 9 C. B. 94; Philpott v. Swann, 11 C. B., N. S. 270; Patch v. Pitman, 19 Nova Scotia 298.

Ship Stranded and Abandoned, but Afterward Repaired.—Where there was an insurance on a vessel and freight, and the vessel was stranded and abandoned, but was gotten off by the underwriters, repaired at less than half her value, and tendered to the owner, who refused to receive her, and wrote to the charterer that the vessel was a wreck and that he could not proceed as per charter party, it was held that, there being no total loss of the vessel, and the owner having voluntarily abandoned the charter party, he was not entitled to recover the insurance on freight. Marmaud v. Melledge, 123 Mass. 173.

Loss of Cargo.—Where, in case of insurance on freight, the cargo is destroyed in specie by a peril of the sea which causes the vessel to put into a port of distress, so that such cargo loses its original character at the port of distress, or where the damage to it is such that, if reshipped, a total destruction of it in specie will be inevitable before it can arrive at its port of destination, there is a total loss of freight, and the underwriters are liable. Ridyard v. Phillips, 4 Blatchf. (U. S.) 443. See also Whitney v. New York Firemen's Ins. Co., 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 208; Parsons v. Manufacturers' Ins. Co., 16 Gray (Mass.) 463; Williams v. Kennebec Mut. Ins. Co., 31 Me. 455.

Where there is a constructive total loss of cargo, by reason of a loss of more than half the cargo (coal) in specie, the assured on freight may abandon and recover for a total loss. Boardman v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 146 Mass. 442.

English Rule as to Abandonment in Case of Freight.—The English cases hold that in case of freight, abandonment is, in general, unnecessary. Green v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co., 6 Taunt. 68; Idle v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co., 8 Taunt. 755; Mount v. Harrison, 4 Bing. 388; Rankin v. Potter, L. R. 6 H. L. 83. In this last case the English authorities are discussed exhaustively. There was no notice of abandonment, and it was held that, there being nothing to abandon, it was not necessary. In reply to the suggestion in behalf of the insurers, that if the underwriters on freight had had timely notice they might have made such an arrangement with the underwriters on ship as would have saved a total loss accruing, Lord Hatherley said: "I apprehend, my lords, that that is much too remote a contingency to render it necessary for the insured to give the insurers notice of abandonment, upon the principle which I have before referred to, namely, of their being able to save something out of the wreck. It is not necessary to illustrate that, but it might be shown in a variety of ways how such a doctrine as that would carry the necessity of notice to the remotest extent in respect of bargains which might be made by persons who might or might not be interested at the moment in the ship, such as persons who might purchase the damaged vessel, or the wreck, or the like. Numerous arrangements might be made, of that kind, which would create, I apprehend, far too remote an interest to be considered upon a question as to the law requiring notice of abandonment to be given." In the same case, Brett, L.J., touching on the question whether there can be a constructive total profits.¹ And abandonment by the insured is in some instances necessary.²

(7) Outfits.—The constructive total loss of a whaling vessel at a port where whaling outfits are obtainable, and where the outfits are in safety, is not a constructive total loss of the outfits, though there are no means of forwarding them within a reasonable time.³

(8) Total Loss of Part of Cargo.—The question has sometimes arisen in connection with articles free from average unless general, whether there could be a total loss of a portion of the cargo. Where the memorandum articles consist of distinct species, there may be a total loss of the whole of a particular species.⁴ But where the articles are of the same species, and, if in separate packages, are not expressed, by distinct valuation or otherwise, in the policy to be separately insured, there can be no loss of a portion.⁵

loss of freight, said: "If, for instance, the ship should be damaged as described, but cargo which was on board has been saved, under circumstances which leave it doubtful whether such cargo might or might not be forwarded in a substituted ship, or if the original cargo should be lost, and the ship may or may not probably earn some freight by carrying other goods on the voyage insured, it may be, and I think the rule is, that in order to make certain his right to recover as for a total loss on the policy on freight, the assured should give notice of abandonment of the chance of earning such substituted freight."

1. In Mumford v. Hallett, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 439. Livingston, J., said: "It does not follow that a profit will be made if the cargo arrives, yet its loss would give a right to recover on such an insurance." See also Barclay v. Cousins, 2 East 544; Hendricksen v. Margetson, cited in 2 East 549; Fosdick v. Norwich Marine Ins. Co., 3 Day (Conn.) 108; Abbott v. Sebor, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 39, 2 Am. Dec. 139; Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 222; French v. Hope Ins. Co., 16 Pick. (Mass.) 397.

In Abbott v. Sebor, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 39, 2 Am. Dec. 139, Kent, J., suggested that the rule to ascertain whether there was a total or partial loss of the profits was to determine whether more or less than one half in value of the subject had been lost.

In Hodgson v. Glover, 6 East 316, it was intimated that the insured must show that there would have been an actual profit if the goods had reached a market. See also Eyre v. Glover, 16 East 218.

In Loomis v. Shaw, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 36, there was an average loss of three eighths of the cargo, and the insured abandoned and sought to recover as for a total loss on the profits. It was held that they were entitled to average loss only.

In Hendricksen v. Margetson, cited in 2 East 549, the policy was held to be on profits by the ship in which the cargo was laden, and, therefore, when there was a technical total loss, and the goods were forwarded by different ships, there might still be a total loss of profits.

Where the profits are insured under a valued policy, free from average unless general, if part of the goods arrived in good condition and are sold at a profit, though part were destroyed, and there was a loss on the whole adventure of more than fifty per cent., there is not a total loss. There must be actual total loss. Waln v. Thompson, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 115, 11 Am. Dec. 675.

2. When Abandonment Necessary.—If profits only are insured, an abandonment is necessary when there has been no insurance on the cargo; and in such case it must be made early, that the insurer may elect either to pay only his loss, or to pay that and the price of the goods at first cost, and charges. Tom v. Smith, 3 Cai. (N. Y.) 245. But it has been held generally that in case of total loss of insurance on profits no abandonment is necessary. Fosdick v. Norwich Marine Ins. Co., 3 Day (Conn.) 108.

It would seem, that, on the well-settled principle that where nothing of value can pass, no abandonment is necessary (see supra, this title, Total Loss to Insured, General Principles), there need never be an abandonment where the cargo on which the profits are to arise has been abandoned. See infra, this title, Effect of Abandonment.

If the different sorts of goods whereof the cargo is made up are specified and separately valued in the same policy, the insured may abandon any one sort of article, in case of loss, and retain the rest, in the same manner as if the different articles were insured by different policies. Deidericks v. Commercial Ins. Co., 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 234.

Where a vessel during the voyage had been condemned for unseaworthiness, and her cargo properly transhipped in two other vessels, one of which was totally lost, the insured were held liable on the policy for the goods lost, though the other vessel arrived in safety. *Pierce v. The case of Davy v. Milford, 15 East 559, decided in 1812, held that there might be a total loss of a part of a cargo. This case was never received with favor, Thompson v. Royal Exch. Ins. Co., 16 East 214; Hedberg v. Pearson, 7 Taunt. 154; and was expressly overruled in Ralli v. Janson, 6 El. & Bl. 422. The U. S. Supreme Court declared, in Biays v. Chesapeake Ins. Co., 7 Cranch (U. S.) 415, as early as 1813, the doctrine that there can be no total loss of a part of memorandum articles of one species; and Judge Story said, in Humphreys v. Union Ins. Co., 3 Mason (U. S.) 429, that this case and that of Morean v. U. S. Ins. Co., 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 219, settled the law of the Federal courts definitely against the doctrine of Davy v. Milford, 15 East 559. In Wadsworth v. Pacific Ins. Co., 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 33, the American cases were followed.

In Duff v. Mackenzie, 3 C. B., N. S. 16, it was held that there might be a total loss of part of "master's effects," valued in lump, free from all average. In Wilkinson v. Hyde, 3 C. B., N. S. 30, where goods were insured against total loss only, and valued at one entire sum, but were packed in separate packages and of different species, it was held that the insurer was liable for each separate package lost.

Sale before Abandonment.—If, before abandonment, the master has made an invalid sale, the title is not changed, and the owner may abandon. Fuller v. Kennebec Mut. Ins. Co., 31 Me. 325.

If a valid but unnecessary sale has been made before abandonment, the insured has nothing to abandon, and his right is gone. Badger v. Ocean Ins. Co., 23 Pick. (Mass.) 347.

An absolute bill of sale made by the owner of a vessel insured, though intended as a security for debts, divests such owner of the right to abandon. Gordon v. Massachusetts F., etc., Ins. Co., 2 Pick. (Mass.) 260.

Two Policies.—Where an abandonment under one policy has been made and accepted, the owner has no legal title left to transfer, and he cannot abandon under another policy. Higginson v. Dall, 13 Mass. 96. And see Locke v. North American Ins. Co., 13 Mass. 61; Rice v. Homer, 12 Mass. 229.

Profits.—Where cargo and profits are separately insured, the abandonment to the insurer on cargo takes with it all right to profits, but the insured may subsequently abandon to the insurer on profits and recover as for a total loss as to profits insured. Mumford v. Hallett, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 433.

By Master.—The master has no authority as such to bind the owner by an abandonment, and the act must be ratified by the owner within a reasonable time. What is reasonable time for such ratification must be determined on the same principles as reasonable time for an original abandonment. Younger v. Gloucester Marine Ins. Co., Sprague (U. S.) 236; affirmed in 2 Curt. (U. S.) 322.

By Agent.—The general agent of the insurer may make a valid abandonment, though the agency is created by parol. Parker v. Towers, 2 P. A. Browne App. (Pa.) 80.

It is presumed, nothing else appearing, that the agent who has authority to effect the insurance has authority to make a valid abandonment. Chesapeake Ins. Co. v. Stark, 6 Cranch (U. S.) 268; Mellon v. Louisiana State Ins. Co., 5 Martin, N. S. (La.) 564; Merchants' Marine Ins. Co. v. Barss, 15 Can. Supreme Ct. Rep. 185.

Mortgaged Vessel.—Where the insured vessel is mortgaged and the insurance was procured by the owner, and made payable by indorsement to the mortgagee, the owners may make a valid abandonment upon which the mortgagee may recover. Murray v. Great Western Ins. Co., 72 Hun (N. Y.) 282. And see Fulton Ins. Co. v. Goodman, 32 Ala. 108.

Legal and Equitable Owners.—In Millidge v. Stymest, 6 Allen (New Bruns.) 164, it was held that the abandonment must be by the legal, not the equitable, owner.

President of Corporation.—Where the vessel is owned by a corporation, the president may give notice of abandonment. North Western Transp. Co. v. Thames, etc., Ins. Co., 59 Mich. 214.

Joint Owners.—One joint owner who effects the insurance may make a legal abandonment for all the joint owners. Hunt v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co., 5 M. & S. 47. See also Reynolds v. Ocean Ins. Co., 22 Pick. (Mass.) 191, 33 Am. Dec. 727.

But a part owner having sold the vessel cannot abandon for himself, nor after ratifying such sale can the other part owners abandon. Peirce v. Ocean Ins. Co., 18 Pick. (Mass.) 83, 29 Am. Dec. 567.

Depository of Policy.—The deposit of a policy does not invest the depository with the authority to give notice of abandonment. Jardine v. Leathley, 3 B. & S. 700.

2. Notice to Agent.—Abandonment to the agent is an abandonment to the insurers. Fosdick v. Norwich Marine Ins. Co., 3 Day (Conn.) 108.

Abandonment to a broker, who is agent for both parties, is sufficient. Crousillat v. Ball, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 375, 4 Dall. (Pa.) 294, 2 Am. Dec. 375.

Where the owner of a vessel gives due notice of its abandonment, to the president of the company insuring it, and also notifies him, as agent of another company which has insured "advances," that the "vessel insured under your policy" (stating the number of the policy), is abandoned, this is a sufficient abandonment as to the latter company. Burnham v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 139 Mass. 399.

c. FORM AND SUFFICIENCY.—No particular form of notice is essential; but it is sufficient if expressions are used which inform the underwriters that it is the intention of the insured to give up to them the property insured, upon the ground of its having been totally lost.¹ The notice, at least in the United States, must also specify the cause on account of which the loss is claimed, and the insured is restricted to the cause of loss stated in the notice.²

1. Form of Notice.—In Thwing v. Washington Ins. Co., 10 Gray (Mass.) 443, Bigelow, J., said: "No particular form is necessary to constitute a valid abandonment; nor need it be in writing. It is sufficient if the assured claims a total loss of the insureds under circumstances from which an intent to abandon may be fairly inferred. Nor is it requisite that the cause of the loss should be distinctly stated, if the assured, in making the abandonment, refers to the intelligence in his possession as the ground of his claim, puts it within the reach of the underwriter, and the latter omits to inquire into the circumstances or to ask for further information."

Must be Absolute and Explicit.—No particular form is necessary, but it must in substance be positive and absolute, and import an actual present relinquishment. Peirce v. Ocean Ins. Co., 18 Pick. (Mass.) 93, 29 Am. Dec. 567.

The notice must be explicit, and the abandonment must not be left as a matter in inference from equivocal facts. Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Southgate, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 604; Parmeter v. Todhunter, 1 Camp. 541.

The notice must be unconditional. Fuller v. McCall, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 464; 2 Dall. (Pa.) 219, 1 Am. Dec. 312.

Parol.—Parol abandonment is sufficient. Fulton Ins. Co. v. Goodman, 32 Ala. 108; Parmeter v. Todhunter, 1 Camp. 541. See also Read v. Bonham, 3 B. & B. 147.

Word "Abandon" not Necessary.—It is not necessary to use the technical word "abandon." Any equivalent expression which informs the underwriters that it is the intention of the insured to give up to them the property insured, upon the ground of its having been totally lost, is sufficient. Currie v. Bombay Native Ins. Co., L. R. 3 C. P. 72.

Claim for Total Loss.—A claim for total loss is not per se an abandonment. Peirce v. Ocean Ins. Co., 18 Pick. (Mass.) 93, 29 Am. Dec. 567. Compare, however, Mellon v. Louisiana State Ins. Co., 5 Martin, N. S. (La.) 564; Babbitt v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 23 La. Ann. 315; yet, joined with other circumstances, it may be sufficient. Silloway v. Neptune Ins. Co., 12 Gray (Mass.) 73.

Master Consulting Insurer.—When the vessel is stranded the master's going to the insurers and consulting them as to getting her off is not an abandonment. Firemen's Ins. Co. v. Powell, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 311.

Question for Jury.—In Singleton v. Phenix Ins. Co., 132 N. Y. 298, the defendant's agent who issued the policy was notified of the loss the day after it happened. He examined the wreck, received a verified statement of the circumstances of the loss, and mailed it to the defendant, together with a full statement of his own as to the condition of the wreck. These documents were retained by the defendant. Thereafter the defendant's adjuster wrote to the agent that he had examined the boat and would raise her. The plaintiffs verified formal proofs of loss and executed an assignment of all their interest to defendant, which was delivered to and retained by the agent. It was held that under the circumstances it was error for the court to hold as a matter of law that there had been no abandonment and acceptance, and that there was evidence sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that the boat had been abandoned as a total loss and accepted by the defendant. In McConochie v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 26 N. Y. 480, Balcom, J., after examining the authorities, said: "The rule to be deduced from the above-mentioned authorities is that the notice of abandonment, to enable the assured to recover for a total loss where it is less, must truly state, not only the grounds for the abandonment, but with such particularity as

d. TIME OF NOTICE.—Notice must be given within a reasonable time;² and what is a reasonable time depends upon the circumstances of the case.³ The insured is entitled to a sufficient interval, to determine fairly whether he is entitled to abandon.⁴ Particular provisions in the policy may con-to enable the underwriter to determine whether he is bound to accept the offer or not; and if it does not further state in terms that the ship or goods insured are damaged to more than half the value, its language must be such as to render the inference therefrom clear that the damages exceed half the value of the ship or cargo. In other words, the grounds of abandonment set forth in the notice must be such, admitting them to be true, that the right of the assured to recover for a total loss is a necessary consequence. If the notice comes short of this it is insufficient."

If the assured in the notice of abandonment states a sufficient cause of abandonment he need not state additional causes, although known to him, if the underwriter refuses to accept. Dederer v. Delaware Ins. Co., 2 Wash. (U. S.) 61.

But the insured cannot wait, after hearing of the loss, in order to take advantage of trol; ¹ and by agreement of both parties the right may be kept in suspense.²

c. WAIVER AND REVOCATION.—Notice may be waived by acts of the assured inconsistent with an abandonment,³ or may be withdrawn by consent of both parties.⁴

Abandoned Vessel Bought by Master.—The decisions as to the effect of a purchase by the master or by the owner upon the sale of a vessel after abandonment are not easily reconciled.⁵ Where, after abandonment, the owner or master later circumstances, to place the loss on the underwriters. Hurtin v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 1 Wash. (U. S.) 400; Smith v. Newburyport Marine Ins. Co., 4 Mass. 668; Anderson v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co., 7 East 38.

One need not give notice before he is entitled to abandon. Cohen v. Charleston F. & Ins. Co., Dudley (S. Car.) 147; Hedley v. Nashville Ins. Co., 6 Rich. (S. Car.) 130.

1. Thus the policy may provide that abandonment is not to be made for a certain time after notice of capture or detention. Ogden v. Columbian Ins. Co., 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 273; Lovering v. Mercantile Marine Ins. Co., 12 Pick. (Mass.) 348; Law v. Goddard, 12 Mass. 112; Dorr v. Union Ins. Co., 8 Mass. 502; Delano v. Bedford Ins. Co., 10 Mass. 347. See also Ritchie v. U. S. Ins. Co., 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 501.

2. Livingston v. Maryland Ins. Co., 6 Cranch (U. S.) 274.

3. Waiver—Delivery on Bail.—The delivery of a captured vessel on bail to an agent appointed by the master after capture is no waiver of abandonment, for if the abandonment was valid such agent was the agent of the underwriters. Lovering v. Mercantile Marine Ins. Co., 12 Pick. (Mass.) 348.

Insured Retaining Control.—If, after giving notice of abandonment, the owner retains control of the vessel abandoned, repairs, claims, and uses it, the abandonment is waived. Louisville Underwriters v. Pence (Ky.), 1892, 19 S. W. Rep. 10; Sherlock v. Globe Ins. Co., 1 Cinc. L. Bull. (Ohio) 26.

Insured Receiving and Disposing of Vessel and Cargo.—Receiving and disposing of a vessel and the proceeds of the cargo by the insured or a person whom he has put in as ostensible owner, in order to claim in case of capture, will be a waiver of a previous abandonment. Martin v. Salem Marine Ins. Co., 2 Mass. 420; Smith v. Touro, 14 Mass. 112.

Question for Court or Jury.—Whether an abandonment has been waived is a question for the jury, under the circumstances of the case. Curcier v. Philadelphia Ins. Co., 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 113; Columbian Ins. Co. v. Ashby, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 139.

5. Right of Master or Owner to Purchase Considered.—The law is thus explained by Dorsey, J., for the court in Maryland Ins. Co. v. Bathurst, 5 Gill & J. (Md.) 230: "If, after capture and abandonment, but before condemnation, a ship be ransomed by the captain, or retaken by the crew, or be recovered and delivered to the owners, who claim and use her as their own, they possess her under no new title or right of property; their acts are the assertion of their original ownership, and therefore inconsistent with the abandonment, which, if sustained, casts the right of property on the insurers. Both cannot therefore stand together. The necessary inference is that the insured, by the resumption of their ownership, surrendered their rights under the abandonment. But where a condemnation has taken place, the assured, apart from all statutory regulation on the subject, is divested of all property in the ship, and in it, if purchased by themselves, or their agents, they acquire a new and independent title to which their subsequent acts of ownership are imputable, and not to their original proprietary rights. An intention to waive the abandonment is not the natural inference from their conduct. There is no inconsistency in their claiming for a total loss under the abandonment, and asserting the right of property under the newly acquired title. As against all the world, save the underwriters, the assured, as purchasers, have an incontrovertible title. And it is conclusive even against them, if they consented to its acquisition, or have waived the right to impeach it. We are aware that this question has been apparently otherwise decided in some of the United States, and especially in New York, where, in the honest zeal for the protection of insurers, it is respectfully suggested, they have stretched their doctrine upon this subject to an unjust invasion of the rights of the insured, and gone beyond what the policy or analogies of the law would sanction. The principle contended for in the argument as fairly deducible from the New York cases, is, that the acceptance by the insured for his own benefit, of a purchase of the thing insured, made by the captain for account of his owner, is per se a waiver of the abandonment, and converts the otherwise total into a partial loss. To this universal and unqualified proposition we cannot assent. Whilst we admit that the law has wisely erected around insurers an impenetrable barrier to fraud and injustice on the part of the insured, we insist that in doing so it has gone no further than the necessity of the occasion demanded, and that it has not been unmindful of providing a like protection for the insured against practices of a similar character emanating from the insurers; that whilst uberrima fides is exacted of the insured, a like course of conduct must be practised by insurers; that to neither party is it permitted to do acts, the natural tendency of which is injustice, and imposition on the other. We freely concede that neither the insured in person, nor through the instrumentality of others, either before or sells the vessel bona fide for the benefit of all concerned, it is no waiver.¹

5. Acceptance—a. EFFECT.—Acceptance is in no case necessary;² but an after the condemnation of the thing insured, possesses, where an abandonment has been made, an unqualified right to become its purchaser, for his own benefit. Such purchases, after condemnation, where a total loss is claimed, are ever subject to this qualification, that the insurers have the right or privilege, if they see fit, to exercise it within a reasonable time after a knowledge of the purchase, to elect to become themselves the purchasers; and if the insured refuse to surrender the bargain, the total is converted into a partial loss. * * * By an abandonment the rights of the underwriters relate back to the date of the disaster, not of the abandonment. All intermediate acts of the captain and agents of the insured inure to the benefit of the insurer. Any purchase, therefore, made by such captain or agents, no matter for whose account, if in due season adopted by the underwriters, becomes their own."

The subject was extensively considered in King v. Middletown Ins. Co., 1 Conn. 184. There the ship was stranded while going through Hell Gate and abandoned, and afterward it was taken to New York and sold at public auction, and purchased by a brother of the insured, and transferred by him to the insured. It was held that whether or not the insured authorized the purchase, it was no waiver; that the abandonment transferred the property to the insurers, and made the master his agent; that the sale, being by the master, was the insurers' sale; and that, the property being so transferred, it could not be divested out of them by the act of the insured. Reeves, C.J., declared that if after abandonment the insured himself sells, he does so as trustee for the insurer, and cannot purchase at the sale or hold the property purchased against the will of the insurer, and if in such case the insurer does nothing to annul the sale it is a waiver of the abandonment by both parties. See also Bourke v. Granberry, Gilm. (Va.) 16, 9 Am. Dec. 589.

Waiver by Purchase.—By Insured.—The assured, when he abandons and claims a total loss, and is reduced to the necessity of a sale, cannot himself purchase without waiving the abandonment. Ogden v. New York F. Ins. Co., 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 177, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 25; Robertson v. Western Marine, etc., Ins. Co., 19 La. 227, 36 Am. Dec. 673.

By Master; Ratified by Insured.—If the master sells without his knowledge, and he ratifies the act, adopts it, and avails himself thereof, it is a waiver. Saidler v. Church (N. Y. Supreme Ct., July, 1799), stated in 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 292 et seq., and in 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 290; Abbott v. Sebor, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 39, 2 Am. Dec. 139.

By Master; not Ratified.—Yet, if abandonment be refused, and the master purchases at a sale under decree for the benefit of all concerned, and the owner does nothing to ratify the purchase, but makes resale as trustee for the insurer, it is no waiver. Abbott v. Broome, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 292, 2 Am. Dec. 187. See also Sawyer v. Maine F., etc., Ins. Co., 12 Mass. 291; Walden v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 310, 4 Am. Dec. 359.

But where the sale is at the instance of the master, and he purchases and restores the vessel to her former owners, and they receive her, they waive abandonment, and can only recover for a partial loss. Oliver v. Newburyport Ins. Co., 3 Mass. 37.

Generally, after a valid abandonment, the master becomes agent for the insurer, and a sale made by him cannot affect the insured. Jumel v. Marine Ins. Co., 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 412, 5 Am. Dec. 283; and see infra, this title, Effect of Abandonment. This doctrine will explain some of the older cases to which it was not applied.

Sale under Decree.—Where a sale was under a decree, and the vessel was bought by the master and delivered by him to her former owners, it was held that the property was changed, and there was a total loss. Storer v. Gray, 2 Mass. 565 (explained in Oliver v. Ins. Co., 3 Mass. 53). See also Welman v. Gray (Mass., 1799), cited in 3 Mass. 37, and apparently misreported in 2 Dane Abr. 99.

Insured acting as Agent.—The insured may, however, act as agent for another at such sale, and his so acting cannot be regarded as such an interference or act of ownership as will be a waiver of abandonment. Vaughan v. Western Marine, etc., Ins. Co., 19 La. 54; see also Prince v. Ocean Ins. Co., 40 Me. 481, 63 Am. Dec. 676.

Purchase before Abandonment.—If the purchase is made before abandonment, the right to abandon, of course, ceases. McMasters v. Shoolbred, 1 Esp. 237 (5 Rev. Rep. 735); Church v. Marine Ins. Co., 1 Mason (U. S.) 341.

1. If the insurer refuses to accept an abandonment, and afterward the goods arrive at the port of destination and are tendered to the abandonnee, and he refuses to accept them, a sale by the insured in good faith, as trustee of the abandonnee and for his benefit, is not a waiver. Livingston v. Hastic, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 293. And see Mowry v. Charleston Ins. Co., 6 Rich. (S. Car.) 146, 60 Am. Dec. 122; Prince v. Ocean Ins. Co., 40 Me. 481, 63 Am. Dec. 676; Fuller v. Kennebec Mut. Ins. Co., 31 Me. 325. See also Martin v. Salem Marine Ins. Co., 2 Mass. 420; Smith v. Touro, 14 Mass. 112; Cobb v. New England Mut. Marine Ins. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 192.

2. Acceptance Unnecessary.—Acceptance is in no case necessary if the abandonment was properly made. See remarks of Reeves, C.J., in King v. Middletown Ins. Co., 1 Conn. 183 (203); Norton v. Lexington F., etc., Ins. Co., 16 Ill. 235; Mellon v. Bucks, 5 Martin, etc., N. S. (La.) 374; Clamageran v. Banks, 6 Martin, N. S. (La.) 553; Hooper v. Whitney, 19 La. 267; Gould v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 13 Mo. 524. But the absence of acceptance leaves acceptance of the abandonment on the part of the underwriter puts at rest every question as to the seasonableness or sufficiency of the notice.¹

b. WHAT AMOUNTS TO ACCEPTANCE.—The acceptance may be either an actual acceptance, or may be implied from the exercise, by the insurer, of acts of ownership,² or even from a failure, for a sufficient length of time, to refuse the underwriters free to dispute the rightfulness of the abandonment. Child v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 76; McBride v. Marine Ins. Co., 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 431.

1. Consequence of Acceptance.—Smith v. Robertson, 2 Dow. 474; Provincial Ins. Co. v. Leduc, L. R. 6 P. C. 224; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Copelin, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 461; Fulton Ins. Co. v. Goodman, 32 Ala. 108; Cincinnati Ins. Co. v. Bakewell, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 541; Reynolds v. Ocean Ins. Co., 22 Pick. (Mass.) 199, 33 Am. Dec. 727; Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Glasgow, 9 Mo. 411; Buffalo City Bank v. North Western Ins. Co., 30 N. Y. 251; Child v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 76; Watson v. North America Ins. Co., 1 Binn. (Pa.) 47.

2. Question of Fact.—The question of acceptance is one of fact for the jury. Shepherd v. Henderson, 7 App. Cas. 49; Provincial Ins. Co. v. Leduc, L. R. 6 P. C. 239; Bell v. Smith, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 98; Singleton v. Phenix Ins. Co., 132 N. Y. 298. But circumstances may justify the court in telling the jury that, if they believe that certain acts have been done by the insurers consistent only with the acceptance, they must find that the abandonment has been accepted. Shepherd v. Henderson, 7 App. Cas. 49; Provincial Ins. Co. v. Leduc, L. R. 6 P. C. 239.

General Test.—The correct principle seems to be, that an act of the insurers in connection with the abandoned property, which can only be justified under a right derived from an abandonment, is decisive evidence of acceptance. Shepherd v. Henderson, 7 App. Cas. 63; Peele v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 3 Mason (U. S.) 27; Richelieu, etc., Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408.

When Evidence Sufficient.—Where, on a claim being made for a total loss by capture, the insurers, with full knowledge of the facts, came to the conclusion that they were bound to pay as for a total loss, and made an adjustment accordingly, and some payments thereon, it was held that the jury might infer an abandonment, or a waiver of the right to it. M'Lellan v. Maine F., etc., Ins. Co., 12 Mass. 246. See also Houstman v. Thorton, Holt N. P. 242.

Where there was evidence that the insurers, upon a request for assistance from the master of an injured vessel, sent a wrecking expedition to rescue it, which reached the vessel the day before the notice of abandonment was telegraphed to the insurer, and the vessel was towed by the wrecking party to a dock and repaired, but the evidence was conflicting as to who ordered such repairs, it was held that, under the provisions of the sue and labor clause of the policy, the question whether there was a constructive acceptance by the defendant of the abandonment was for the jury. Richelieu, etc., Nav. Co. v. Boston Marine Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 408.

Intent Immaterial.—Provided the act of the insurer amounts to an acceptance, his intent is immaterial. Reynolds v. Ocean Ins. Co., 22 Pick. (Mass.) 191, 33 Am. Dec. 727; Badger v. Ocean Ins. Co., 23 Pick. (Mass.) 355; Peele v. Suffolk Ins. Co., 7 Pick. (Mass.) 254, 19 Am. Dec. 286; Copelin v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 46 Mo. 211, 2 Am. Rep. 504.

Repairing.—If the underwriter takes possession, repairs, and offers to return, it is an acceptance by operation of law. Peele v. Merchants' Ins. Co., 3 Mason (U. S.) 27; Younger v. Gloucester Marine Ins. Co., Sprague (U. S.) 236, 2 Curt. (U. S.) 322. Norton v. Lexington F., etc., Ins. Co., 16 Ill. 235. But see supra, this title, Right of Insurer to Repair.

Repairing under an agreement with the insured is not an acceptance. Webb v. Protection Ins. Co., 6 Ohio 456.

Purchase.—A purchase by the insurers from a third party, who has acquired a good title from the insured, is not an acceptance. Badger v. Ocean Ins. Co., 23 Pick. (Mass.) 347.

Taking Possession.—Where an insurer, upon notification of an abandonment of a vessel, gets it off, brings it to port, repairs it at an expense of more than fifty per cent, and does not offer to return it, the abandonment is thereby accepted, and the company cannot depend on the ground that it is not liable, but must pay the full amount of the policy, as it should have investigated the cause of the loss before accepting the abandonment. Richelieu, etc., Nav. Co. v. Thames, etc., Ins. Co., 72 Mich. 571.

If the insurers refuse an unjustifiable abandonment of a stranded vessel, but take possession of her under a clause in the policy to deliver her from peril, and allow her to be sold to satisfy the salvage expenses agreed on with a wrecking company employed by them to get her off, they are liable for a total loss. Carr v. Security Ins. Co., 109 N. Y. 504.

Whether the right to repair is admitted or not, it was held in Cincinnati Ins. Co. v. Bakewell, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 541, that insurers taking possession of a boat abandoned by the insured, without any designation as to the objects, will be presumed to have done so as insurers only, and their acts constitute an acceptance.

Superintending Sale, etc.—Where the insurers refused the abandonment of a ship, but assented to its conveyance to another port, paid the extra expense for carriage, and superintended the sale in the owner's interest, it was held that their action was an implied acceptance. Wheaton v. China Mut. Ins. Co., 39 Fed. Rep. 879.

Raising Vessel.—Raising a stranded vessel after abandonment and tendering her back the abandonment, but silence not amounting to estoppel is insufficient.¹

6. WHO MAY ACCEPT.—The acceptance must be by one who has power to bind the insurer.²

d. TIME OF TAKING EFFECT.—Acceptance when made relates to the time of the loss.³

6. Effect of Abandonment—a. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.—An abandonment divests the property of the thing abandoned out of the insured, and vests it in the insurer,⁴ together with all the rights of property and rights of without repair, is an acceptance of the abandonment. Northwestern Transp. Co. v. Continental Ins. Co., 24 Fed. Rep. 171.

Question of Construction.—The wording of the "sue and labor" clause may be decisive of the whole question. Schuyler v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 56 Hun (N. Y.) 493. See also North Western Transp. Co. v. Thames, etc., Ins. Co., 59 Mich. 214; Peele v. Suffolk Ins. Co., 7 Pick. (Mass.) 254, 19 Am. Dec. 286; Com. Ins. Co. v. Chase, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 142; Reynolds v. Ocean Ins. Co., 22 Pick. 1. Silence.—The better doctrine seems to be that mere silence does not amount to an acceptance. Provincial Ins. Co. v. Leduc, L. R. 6 P. C. 224. The court in this case denied that Hudson v. Harrison, 3 B. & B. 97, was authority for such a proposition.

Estoppel.—The insurer may be estopped to deny an acceptance, where he has led the insured to believe in an acceptance, and their position has been thereby altered for the worse. Shepherd v. Henderson, 7 App. Cas. 62; Hudson v. Harrison, 3 Moore 288, 3 B. & B. 97. See The Natchez, 42 Fed. Rep. 169; New Orleans, etc., Packet, etc., Co. v. Louisville Underwriters, 45 Fed. Rep. 370.

In Fulton Ins. Co. v. Goodman, 32 Ala. 131, Rice, C. J., said: "Mere silence may not amount to an acceptance; but the silence of a party whose duty it is to speak may amount to a waiver. When his silence, however innocent in its origin, would operate ultimately as a fraud, he will be estopped."

2. Where the act incorporating an insurance company provides that no losses shall be settled or paid without the approbation of at least four of the directors, with the president or assistants, or a plurality of them, the acceptance of an abandonment by the president and assistants alone will not be binding on the company. Beatty v. Marine Ins. Co., 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 109, 3 Am. Dec. 401.

3. If the insurer refuses to accept the abandonment when made, yet if he does afterwards accept it, the acceptance relates back to the time of the loss to which the abandonment refers, and the rights of the parties are settled from that event. The Brig Sarah Ann, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 206. See infra, this title, Effect of Abandonment.

The Absence of a Formal Instrument of abandonment is not material. The law gives to the act of abandonment, when accepted, all the effects which the most accurately drawn assignment would accomplish. Comegys v. Vass, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 193, 213; Northwestern Transp. Co. v. Thames Ins., etc., Co., 50 Mich. 214.

Upon Payment by the Underwriters in a policy of insurance upon goods on board of a ship, as for a total loss, they are entitled to be subrogated to all the rights of the insured. They are entitled to the property remaining and also to recover for the loss from any other source; and a release by the insured of any such right will exonerate the underwriters pro tanto. Atlantic Ins. Co. v. Storrow, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 285; Home Ins. Co. v. Western Transp. Co., 4 Robt. (N. Y.) 257.

But the Underwriters Cannot Demand an abandonment of more than is insured; and such demand does not affect the insured's rights to abandon to the extent of the sum insured and recover for a total loss. Havelock v. Rockwood, 8 T. R. 277.

Compromise.—Where the insurers reject the abandonment offered by the assured, refuse action incident thereto,¹ and all the burdens and liabilities in respect to pay for a total loss, and effect a compromise, they do not succeed to the rights of the assured. New York Ins. Co. v. Roulet, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 505; Brooks v. MacDonnell, 1 Y. & C. 502.

Unauthorized Abandonment.—But an unauthorized and unaccepted abandonment has no effect. Thompson v. Royal Exch. Assur. Co., 16 East 214; Rugely v. Sun Ins. Co., 7 La. Ann. 279, 56 Am. Dec. 603; Hanau v. Louisiana Mut. Ins. Co., 15 La. Ann. 201; Orrok v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., 21 Pick. (Mass.) 456, 32 Am. Dec. 271; Bryant v. Commonwealth Ins. Co., 13 Pick. St. 176; The Ship Packet, 3 Mason (U. S.) 255; Ward v. Peck, 18 How. (U. S.) 267.

And where only a partial loss is claimed the insurer has no right to an abandonment. Murray v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co., 2 Wash. (U. S.) 186.

1. Rights to which Insurer Succeeds—Proceeds and Profits.—If, after abandonment for capture and acceptance, agents of the assured purchase the thing insured, and resell, the insurer may affirm their purchase, and he is entitled to the proceeds thereof and to whatever has been purchased therewith, and may maintain trover therefor. Robinson v. United Ins. Co., 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 592; Union Ins. Co. v. Burrell, Anth. N. P. (N. Y.) 128. The insurers are entitled also to the profits arising from the thing purchased with the proceeds of such sale. Simonds v. Union Ins. Co., 1 Wash. (U. S.) 443.

Spes Recuperandi.—An abandonment rightfully made transfers as well the spes recuperandi as the interest to the insured in the vessel lost, although the loss has not been actually paid by the insurer. Rogers v. Hosack, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 319.

Compensation from Foreign Government.—The insurer who has paid the loss is entitled, in cases of seizure of a vessel by a foreign government, to compensation obtained under letters of a marque and reprisal. Randal v. Cockran, 1 Ves. 98; Blasuwpot v. De Costa, 1 Eden 130; or under the award of commissioners appointed by treaty, Comegys v. Vasse, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 193; Rogers v. Hosack, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 319 (see Mercantile Marine Ins. Co. v. Corcoran, 1 Gray (Mass.) 75); but not to a sum granted by the legislature of such foreign country as a pure gift expressly to cover the part of the loss which the valuation of the policy did not cover, and which the insurers had not paid. Burnand v. Rodocanachi, 7 App. Cas. 335, affirming 6 Q. B. Div. 633, which reversed 5 C. P. Div. 424.

Compensation from Tort Feasor.—The insurer is entitled to any compensation recovered from one who is responsible for the injury for which the insurer has paid. North of England Ins. Assoc. v. Armstrong, L. R. 5 Q. B. 244; Yates v. Whyte, 4 Bing. N. Cas. 272, 33 E. C. L. 349; Mercantile Marine Ins. Co. v. Clark, 118 Mass. 288.

General Average Contribution.—Sturgess v. Cary, 2 Curt. (U. S.) 59; Potter v. Providence Washington Ins. Co., 4 Mason (U. S.) 298.

Rights of Action.—Insurers succeed, upon abandonment, to all rights of action of the insured against third parties for injury to the property covered by the policy. Atlantic Ins. Co. v. Storrow, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 285; Home Ins. Co. v. Western Transp. Co., 4 Robt. (N. Y.) 257, 33 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 102, 51 N. Y. 93; Clark v. Wilson, 103 Mass. 219, 4 Am. Rep. 532; *Globe Ins. Co. v. But the insurers succeed only to such claim for damages as the insured himself could have made. Simpson v. Thompson, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 279; Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Calebs, 20 N. Y. 174; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Erie, etc., Transp. Co., 117 U. S. 312; The Bristol, 29 Fed. Rep. 867. See also The Potomac, 105 U. S. 630; Liverpool, etc., Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397.

Where the loss of the insured ship was caused by collision with another ship belonging to the insured, the underwriter, upon payment, has no cause of action against the ship which caused the injury, since the insured had no right of action against himself; and the underwriter succeeds to no greater rights. Simpson v. Thompson, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 279.

Where the carrier has limited his liability by agreement with the insured, the limitation is binding upon the abandonee, and the latter becomes subject to all agreements and equities between the insured and the carrier. Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Calebs, 20 N. Y. 174; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Erie, etc., Transp. Co., 117 U. S. 312.

In Phoenix Co. v. Erie, etc., Transp. Co., 117 U. S. 321, which is another case upon the same point, Gray, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "From the very nature of the contract of insurance, as a contract of indemnity, the insurer, when he has paid to the assured the amount of the indemnity agreed on between them, is entitled, by way of salvage, to the benefit of anything that may be received either from the remnants of the goods or from damages paid by third persons for the same loss. But the insurer stands in no relation of contract or of privity with such persons. His title arises out of the contract of insurance, and is derived from the assured alone, and can only be enforced in the right of the latter. In a court of common law it can only be asserted in his name, and even in a court of equity or of admiralty it can only be asserted in his right. In any form of remedy the insurer can take nothing by subrogation but the rights of the assured. * * * The right of action against another person, the equitable interest in which passes to the insurer, being only that which the as-thereof,¹ from the moment of the casualty to which the abandonment refers.² But the abandonment operates as a transfer only to the extent of the insured's sured has, it follows that if the assured has no such right of action none passes to the insurer; and that if the assured's right of action is limited or restricted by lawful contract between him and the person sought to be made responsible for the loss, a suit by the insurer, in the right of the assured, is subject to like limitations or restrictions."

The underwriter may enforce his right in his own name in the United States courts. Monticello v. Mollison, 17 How. (U. S.) 153; Commercial Ins. Co. v. The C. D., Jr., 1 Woods (U. S.) 72; The Sydney, 27 Fed. Rep. 119.

In England he must sue in the name of the insured. Simpson v. Thompson, 3 App. Cas. 279; Wilson v. Raffalovich, 7 Q. B. Div. 553.

1. Insurers' Liabilities—Wages.—The insurers on ship are liable for the wages of seamen earned subsequent to an abandonment. Hammond v. Essex F., etc., Ins. Co., 4 Mason (U. S.) 196; McBride v. Marine Ins. Co., 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 431. See Frothingham v. Prince, 3 Mass. 563. But the abandonee takes free from any lien for wages earned before the casualty. Daniels v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 24 N. Y. 447; Sharp v. Gladstone, 7 East 24.

As between the shipowner and insurer on freight, it has been held that, in case of an abandonment, the wages are a charge on the ship and owner in exoneration of freight, and are not chargeable against the insurer. Daniels v. Atlantic Ins. Co., 24 N. Y. 447. The same rule applies between the insured on cargo and the insurer. Daniels v. Atlantic Ins. Co., 24 N. Y. 447; Columbian Ins. Co. v. Catlett, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 383.

Freight.—The insurer on goods is liable to the shipowner for freight, and the question arises, Does the abandonee take the salvage subject to the claim for freight? The U. S. Supreme Court has held that the claim against the abandonee could not be supported, and that the charge ought to fall on the insured. Columbian Ins. Co. v. Catlett, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 383.

Mr. Phillips and Mr. Arnould are of opinion that the loss ought to fall on the insurers, but that where such charges would exceed the salvage the insurer may decline taking the salvage and settle for a total loss. 2 Arnould on Marine Insurance (6th ed.) 977; 2 Phillips on Insurance, §§ 1718, 1726.

Expenses for Saving Property.—All the expenses and charges in saving the property abandoned after the abandonment are chargeable against the insurer. Daniels v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 24 N. Y. 451; Sharp v. Gladstone, 7 East 24; Barclay v. Stirling, 5 M. & S. 6; Barker v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 8 Johns (N. Y.) 307; 5 Am. Dec. 339; Jumel v. Marine Ins. Co., 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 412, 5 Am. Dec. 283.

After capture and abandonment the insurer is liable for expenses incurred in prosecuting an appeal from the prize court. Lawrence v. Van Horne, 1 Cai. (N. Y.) 276.

But where the interests of others are benefited, as well as those of the insurer, the principles of general average are to be considered. Jumel v. Marine Ins. Co., 7 Johns. (N. Y.), 412, 5 Am. Dec. 283.

Repairs.—Insurers are liable for the expenses of repairing the vessel subsequent to abandonment. United Ins. Co. v. Scott, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 106.

Co-insurer's Liability.—The liability of separate underwriters, in case of an abandonment accepted by them, for repairs, etc., subsequent to the casualty occasioning the loss, is separate, and not as of partners, each being liable for a sum bearing the same ratio to the expenditure as the sum underwritten by him bears to the whole sum underwritten. United Ins. Co. v. Scott, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 106.

Injuries Caused by Property Abandoned.—The abandonee of a vessel which has been sunk in a navigable river is bound to use proper care to prevent accidents to other vessels so long as he has the possession, control, and management of the vessel; that is, so long as by due care and exertion he can easily remove, or so far shift, its position as to prevent such injury; but by abandoning the wreck he may put an end to his liability. White v. Crisp, 26 Eng. L. & Eq. 532; Taylor v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 37 N. Y. 275.

2. Cammell v. Sewell, 3 H. & N. 617; The Brig Sarah Ann, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 206; Dederer v. Delaware Ins. Co., 2 Wash. (U. S.) 61; Kenedy v. Baltimore Ins. Co., 3 Har. & J. (Md.) 367, 6 Am. (La.) 553; Hooper v. Whitney, 19 La. 267; Clarkson v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 1; Saurez v. Sun Mut. Ins. Co., 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 482; Marquette First Nat. Bank v. Stewart, 26 Mich. 83; Natchez Ins. Co. v. Buckner, 4 How. (Miss.) 63.

A ratification of an abandonment dates back to the act ratified. Graham v. Ledda, 17 La. Ann. 47.

Insurer Takes Free from Pre-existing Charges.

—The insurer takes the thing abandoned, whether ship, freight, or cargo, free from all charges or incumbrances created by act of the master or owner before the casualty. Daniels v. Atlantic Mut. Ins. Co., 24 N. Y. 447. See also Barclay v. Stirling, 5 M. & S. 6; Sharp v. Gladstone, 7 East 24.

Bottomry Bond.—If an insurer accepts the abandonment of a ship upon which a bottomry bond has been given, he takes it cum onere, and the holder of the bond has the first right to the salvage. Delaware Mut. Safety Ins. Co. v. Gossler, 96 U. S. 645. In delivering the opinion Clifford, J., said: "By an abandonment the insurer is placed in the situation of the insured whom he represents, and can have no greater right than the insured would have had. Unlike that, the lender on bottomry loses his remedy only when the ship or other property hypoth-interest.¹ The master of the ship and agents of the insured thereupon become agents of the insurer, and the insured is not bound by their subsequent acts unless he adopts them.²

ecated is wholly lost; and, where parts are preserved, such parts are esteemed his proper goods, being presumed to be the product of his money; and he therefore takes preference of the owner or insurer." See Jumel v. Marine Ins. Co., 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 425, 5 Am. Dec. 283.

Mortgage.—Where A, who holds a mortgage on the whole of a vessel, insures her, and B holds a prior mortgage on one half the vessel; upon loss of the vessel, abandonment, and payment to A as for a total loss, the insurers take only one half the salvage, while the other half goes to A. Rice v. Cobb, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 302. In this case Bigelow, J., said: "So far as the rights of the parties to this case are concerned, at the time of the abandonment each was the owner of the half of the wreck of the brig; the plaintiff by virtue of his prior mortgage on one half, the defendant by virtue of the abandonment."

1. Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Southgate, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 622.

Thus, if only an aliquot part of the interest of the insured in the subject of the policy is covered thereby, an abandonment transfers only such insured part. The Manitoba, 30 Fed. Rep. 129. See also Kirby v. Thames Ins. Co., 27 Fed. Rep. 221.

But this rule does not apply where the insurance reaches every part of the thing insured. The Manitoba, 30 Fed. Rep. 129.

Thus, where a vessel valued at $13,500 is insured for $11,000, an abandonment carries the whole vessel of the insured to the insurer, and not merely 11,000/13,500, i.e., 22/27 thereof. The Mary E. Perew, 15 Blatchf. (U. S.) 58. See also Cincinnati Ins. Co. v. Bakewell, 4 B. Mon. (Ky.) 541; Mutual Safety Ins. v. Cargo, Oic. Adm. 89.

Contra.—Merchants', etc., Ins. Co. v. Duffield, 2 Handy (Ohio) 122; Cincinnati Ins. Co. v. Duffield, 6 Ohio St. 200, 67 Am. Dec. 339; Phillips v. St. Louis Ins. Co., 11 La. Ann. 459; Natchez, etc., Packet, etc., Co. v. Louisville Underwriters, 44 La. Ann. 714; White v. Steam Tug Mary Ann, 6 Cal. 462, 65 Am. Dec. 523. In these cases it is held that where the owner of the entire property insures for less than its expressed value, an abandonment carries to the insurer only such proportionate part of the thing insured as is represented by the ratio between the actual insurance and the valuation in the policy.

Pennsylvania.—The question is an open one in Pennsylvania. But it is held there that, conceding the view that the insured retains his uninsured interest after abandonment, the underwriters are not bound to look after the interests of the insured, and, when they receive nothing from the wreck, are not liable for any part of its value. Alleghany Ins. Co. v. Ransom, 69 Pa. St. 496.

Salvage Received by Insured.—If the underwriters, in case of a total loss, wish to reduce the verdict by salvage received by the insured, they must raise the issue by pleading that such salvage has been received by the insured. Gulf of California Nav., etc., Co. v. State Invest., etc., Co., 70 Cal. 586. See supra, this title, Total Loss with Benefit of Salvage.

Freight Due from Insured.—In Dumas v. U. S. Ins. Co., 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 437, there was an insurance on freight valued at $7500. Two thirds of the goods shipped belonged to the shipowner and insured; one third belonged to other shippers. The vessel was captured, abandoned, and the insurers paid for a total loss, i.e., $7500. Afterwards the vessel and part of the cargo was restored and the voyage completed. By the abandonment the insurer became entitled to the freight earned. They received that from the other shippers, and the question was whether, under the valuation in the policy, the freight to which the insurer was entitled from the owner and insured was the difference between the freight actually received from the other shippers and the valuation in the policy, or was to be taken as such a proportional part of the valuation in the policy as his own goods were of the entire cargo, i.e., two thirds of the valuation. It was held that the insured was accountable for only two thirds of the valuation.

2. Jumel v. Marine Ins. Co., 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 412, 5 Am. Dec. 283; Schmidt v. United Ins. Co., 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 249, 3 Am. Dec. 319; Gardere v. Columbian Ins. Co., 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 514; Gardner v. Smith, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 141; Miller v. De Peyster, 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 302; The Brig Sarah Ann, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 206. See also the cases cited in the first note to this section.

Supercargo.—Where the voyage is broken up before the arrival of the vessel at the port, and the cargo is abandoned, and the master delivers it to the supercargo, contrary to instructions, this makes the supercargo agent of the master, and so agent of the insurers after abandonment; and the insurers are responsible for his actions. Catlett v. Pacific Ins. Co., 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 561.

A reasonable compromise made by a supercargo to free a vessel from detention after capture is binding on the insurer. Welles v. Gray, 10 Mass. 42.

Insured Agents for Beneficial Purposes.—The insured become agents for the underwriters for all beneficial purposes relative to the interest of the underwriters in the property. Columbian Ins. Co. v. Ashby, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 139; Robertson v. Western Marine Ins. Co., 19 La. 227, 36 Am. Dec. 673.

After an abandonment which is not accepted by the insurer the assured remains the quasi agent or trustee of the insurer, and must do what he thinks most for the interest of the parties concerned; and if he acts with fidelity, and sells the vessel and property insured at public auction, in the usual manner, without a view to his own benefit, it is no waiver of

b. APPORTIONMENT OF FREIGHT.—In England this doctrine as to the effect of abandonment is construed, in the case of the abandonment of a ship, to carry, as an incident to the ship, the right to the whole freight pending at the time of the abandonment and subsequently earned, to the abandonee.¹ The the abandonment, nor will it prejudice his claim against the insurer for a total loss. Walden v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 310, 4 Am. Dec. 359. See also Curcier v. Philadelphia Ins. Co., 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 113.

But see Mellon v. Bucks, 5 Martin N. S. (La.) 371. The insured on goods in this case, after abandonment to the underwriters, brought suit against the owners and master of the ship by which he had shipped the goods, for the value thereof, alleging that the goods had been lost through their misconduct. The defendants were insured on ship and freight in the same insurance company, and the plaintiff attached the debt which might become due to the defendants from the company on the policies on ship and freight. The plaintiff claimed a right to bring the action as agent for the insurance company by reason of his abandonment. It was held that the agency created by abandonment extended only to beneficial purposes connected with the interest of the insurers in the property abandoned, and that his claim to act as agent, under the circumstances, was unfounded. See also Peirce v. Ocean Ins. Co., 18 Pick. (Mass.) 83, 29 Am. Dec. 567.

Agency Relates to Time of Abandonment.—The master's service for the insurer relates to the time of the loss to which the abandonment refers. In The Brig Sarah Ann, 2 Sumn. (U. S.) 206, Judge Story said: "Then, it is said, that as the sale was made before the abandonment was accepted, it was a sale made by the master as agent of the owners, and that, by implication, the abandonment admits the necessity of the sale and adopts and justifies it. But here, again, I cannot admit the entire correctness of the argument. When a loss takes place for which an abandonment may be made, the master is not exclusively the agent of the original owners of the ship, but he is the agent of those who retroactively become owners of the ship in consequence of that event, if an abandonment is made and is justifiable. The common doctrine is that the master is the agent of all concerned in the voyage; and that he becomes, by relation, the agent of the underwriters, whenever an abandonment has been accepted, from the time of the loss to which that abandonment refers, although the abandonment may not have been offered or accepted until months after the event. So that in the present case, if the libellants have finally accepted the abandonment, and it was persisted in by the owners and never withdrawn by them, but was a continuing abandonment on their side, the act of the master in the sale is to be treated as his act, as agent of the libellants, and not of the original owners."

Where the master purchases the insured property at a sale after abandonment and the insurer confirms his acts, he takes the property cum onere, Lawrence v. New Bedford Commercial Ins. Co., 2 Story (U. S.) 471; Jumel v. Marine Ins. Co., 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 412, 5 Am. Dec. 283; but the insurer may disclaim his acts and refuse to take the advantages of the purchase and settle with the insured for a total loss, Jumel v. Marine Ins. Co., 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 412, 5 Am. Dec. 283; or he may receive the property, reserving all rights and waiving no objections; and he is entitled to take the proceeds without any charges if the property does not yield a profit beyond the fair value of it when shipped. *Lawrence v. S.) 61, it was held that upon abandonment, though the property vests in the insurer by relation from the time of the loss, the master continues the agent of the insured until abandonment.

Insured Retaining Interest.—Where the owner has only a part interest insured, he remains his own insurer as to the remainder; and, although he abandons, is still bound by the master's acts. Natchez, etc., Packet, etc., Co. v. Louisville Underwriters, 44 La. Ann. 714.

1. English Rule as to Freight.—Case v. Davidson, 5 M. & S. 79; Davidson v. Case, 8 Price 542; M'Carthy v. Abel, 5 East 388; Stewart v. Greenock Marine Ins. Co., 2 H. L. Cas. 159; Scottish Marine Ins. Co. v. Turner, 1 Macq. Cas. 334; Miller v. Woodfall, 8 El. & Bl. 493, 92 E. C. L. 493; Hickie v. Rodocanachi, 4 H. & N. 455; Barclay v. Stirling, 5 M. & S. 6; Thompson v. Rowcroft, 4 East 34.

In Miller v. Woodfall, 8 El. & Bl. 493, the English rule and the contrasted American rule are thus stated by Lord Campbell: "The abandonees are considered as purchasers of the ship at the moment of the casualty to which the abandonment refers, and, although the contract of a shipowner does not run with the ship, it is well settled that, as incident to the ship, the right to the whole freight, pending at the time of the sale and subsequently earned, belongs to the purchaser of the ship. The American courts, presuming that ship and freight are always separately insured, and taking into consideration the respective right and equities of the different sets of underwriters, where the loss is finally adjusted among all parties, assured and assurers, make an apportionment of the freight earned partly before and partly after the casualty for which the abandonment on ship is made, so that the freight earned previous to the casualty may go for the benefit of the underwriters on freight to whom there has been an abandonment, and only the freight earned after the casualty vests in the abandonee on ship. (See the authorities collected, Arnould, § rule in the United States as to freight is different, and the freight is apportioned; that earned previous to the abandonment going to the insured, and that afterward earned belonging to the abandonee.¹

ABATEMENT.—"Abatement" is a generic term derived from the French abattre, and signifies the quashing, beating down, removing, or destroying of a thing.²

404.) But (as in the present case), in adjusting the rights of assured and assurer on ship, we do not look beyond those parties; and the abandonee of the ship, like the purchaser, has a right to the whole of the freight pending at the casualty although he could not claim freight paid or completely earned in a prior part of the voyage. Stewart v. Greenock Marine Ins. Co., 2 H. L. Cas. 159, 1 Macq. Cas. 382; Scottish Marine Ins. Co. v. Turner, 1 Macq. Cas. 334." In this case it was held that where the ship and goods belong to the same person, and there is consequently no contract of affreightment, the abandonee succeeds to no right to freight for the whole voyage, or anything in the nature thereof, with respect to the part of the voyage performed before abandonment; but he is entitled to compensation for the part of the voyage performed after the accident.

Hickie v. Rodocanichi, 4 H. & N. 455, goes far to bring the effect of the English law in accord with the American doctrine as to apportionment pro rata itineris. Here a ship having been chartered to carry troops to Calcutta was insured under a valued policy. After performing a part of the voyage she was injured by fire, and put into a port of distress, where, being found to be greatly damaged, she was abandoned to the underwriters as totally lost, and the abandonment was accepted, the captain having chartered another ship and forwarded the troops to Calcutta. The freight was received by the shipowner's agent. It was held that in forwarding the troops the captain acted as agent for the owner, and not for the underwriters, to whom the ship had been abandoned, and was not entitled to any benefit from the freight so received.

Where ship and freight were insured in separate companies, and both became a total loss by reason of a collision during the voyage, and the insured afterward recovered from the owner of the ship at fault for the loss of their own ship and her freight, it was held that the underwriters of the ship were not entitled to recovery from the insured of any part of the amount recovered by the said insured for the loss of freight. Sea Ins. Co. v. Hadden, 13 Q. B. Div. 706.

Ouster by Abatement—Forcible Entry and Detainer.—In Brown v. Burdick, 25 Ohio St. 268, it was held, where a testator died seized of an estate in fee, and, before his devisee could enter, a stranger obtained possession, that the devisee might maintain forcible entry and detainer against the stranger. The court said: "The injury of which the plaintiff in detainer complained was what the common law denominates ouster by abatement, which is, where a person dies seized of an inheritance, and before the heir or devisee enters, a stranger who has no right makes an entry and gets possession of the freehold. It is a figurative expression, to denote that the rightful possession of the freehold of the heir or devisee is overthrown by the rude intervention of a stranger, and is always consequent upon the descent or devise of an estate in fee-simple. 3 Bla. Com. 167-169."

I. DEFINITION.—Abatement is the reduction of a legacy, general or specific, on account of the insufficiency of the estate of the testator to pay his debts and legacies. When the estate of a testator is insufficient to pay both debts and legacies, it is the rule that the general legacies must abate proportionably to an amount sufficient to pay the debts. If the general legacies are exhausted before the debts are paid, then, and not till then, the specific legacies abate, and proportionably.¹

II. RESIDUARY LEGACIES—General Rule.—As a residuary legatee is entitled only to what remains after all debts and paramount claims upon the testator's estate are satisfied, he cannot call upon either the general or specific legatees to abate in his favor, even if the entire residue be exhausted.²

In Livingston v. Livingston, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 148, an annuity to the widow of the testator was made chargeable upon all the realty. One of the devisees paid the annuity, and it was held that the various devisees must contribute, on a deficiency of assets, in proportion to the value of their respective interests. The chancellor cited Carter v. Barnardiston, 1 P. Wms. 505; Long v. Short, 1 P. Wms. 403.

Annuity Takes Precedence.—So where there is a gift of an annuity and a residuary gift, the annuity must be paid in full, however great or small the testator's property may be. In other words, the annuity takes precedence, and the whole loss falls upon the residuary legatee.¹

Annuity Paid from Income—Rule Otherwise.—If, however, the testator should provide in his will that the annuity should come only out of the income, and not out of the capital, the rule is otherwise.²

Subsequent Deficiency of Assets.—In cases where there is a residue at the time of the testator's death, but the assets in the hands of the executor subsequently become insufficient to pay all the other legatees, the residuary legatee is not entitled to call upon the other legatees to contribute towards the loss, but must himself bear the whole of it.³

Effect of Residuary Legacy.—"Nothing is given by a residuary clause except upon the condition that something remains after all paramount claims upon the testator's estate are satisfied." Devens, J., in Tomlinson v. Bury, 145 Mass. 347.

A gift of the rest of a specific fund after payment of debts and funeral expenses, where legacies have been given as well, is a gift of the residue after payment of legacies as well as the debts and funeral expenses. Foxen v. Foxen, 3 N. R. 452, 13 W. R. 33.

A testatrix bequeathed her diamonds upon trust for sale, thereout to be paid two legacies of £600 and £700. The will contained a residuary bequest, but did not otherwise deal with the surplus (if any) of the proceeds of the sale. The diamonds realized only £900. The legacy of £700 failed. Chitty, J., said: "The argument of the residuary legatee in this case appears to me to be an attempt to creep into the shoes of the legatee of the £700, as if that legacy had taken effect; but this legacy has failed, and the residuary legatee is entitled to claim, not the legacy of £700, but only so much of the proceeds of sale of the diamonds as is not required to satisfy the £600 legacy. In other words, the residuary legatee can take nothing until this specific charge of £600 has been satisfied." In re Tunno, 45 Ch. Div. 66.

1. Priority of Annuities.—"The general rule is that if there be a clear gift of a life interest and of a reversion, and the estate proves insufficient, each party, the tenant for life and the reversioner, must bear the loss in proportion to his interest; but that if there is a gift of an annuity and a residuary gift, the annuity takes precedence, and the whole loss falls on the residuary legatee." Lord Justice Turner in Croly v. Weed, 3 De G., M. & G. 995.

Where a fund is set apart to pay annuities, and is directed, upon the death of the annuitants respectively, to fall into the residue, if the fund is insufficient to pay the annuities the residuary legatee is entitled to nothing till all the legacies and annuities have been paid in full. Arnold v. Arnold, 2 Myl. & K.

374; Anderson v. Anderson, 33 Beav. 223; In re Tootal's Estate, 2 Ch. Div. 628.

It would seem that a direction that in the event of insufficiency of assets all the beneficiaries are to abate, does not entitle the residuary legatee to a fund which is released by the death of a tenant for life. In re Lyne's Estate, L. R. 8 Eq. 482.

On the other hand, if annuities are directed to abate in favor of legatees, or vice versa, in the event of deficient assets the abatement is permanent, and a fund falling in is not applicable to increase gifts which have abated. Farmer v. Mills, 4 Russ. 86; Hichens v. Hichens, 25 W. R. 249; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 623.

2. Williams on Executors (9th ed.) *1212.

On the question whether an annuity is payable out of the income or capital, see Wright v. Callender, 2 De G., M. & G. 652; Haynes v. Haynes, 3 De G., M. & G. 590; Bogue v. Dumegue, 10 Hare 462; Miner v. Baldwin, 1 S., M. & G. 522; Miller v. Huddleston, 17 Sim. 71; Hindle v. Taylor, 20 Beav. 109; Farmer v. Mills, 4 Russ. 86; Arnold v. Arnold, 2 Myl. & K. 374.

3. Residue at Time of Testator's Death—Subsequent Deficiency.—Willmot v. Jenkins, 1 Beav. 401; Baker v. Farmer, L. R. 3 Ch. 537; Humphreys v. Humphreys, 2 Cox 186; Page v. Leapingwell, 18 Ves. Jr. 466; Baker v. Farmer, L. R. 3 Ch. 537.

In Dyose v. Dyose, 1 P. Wms. 305, a different opinion was expressed, but the decision has been severely criticised, and may now be considered as overruled.

The lord chancellor, in Fonnereau v. Poyntz, 1 Bro. C. C. 477, in speaking of the case of Dyose v. Dyose, 1 P. Wms. 305, said: "As to the case of Dyose v. Dyose, there was no ambiguity, either latent or patent. There was a legacy of £3000 apiece given to the younger sons, the residue to the eldest; and the question was whether the residuary legatee should have anything or nothing, which, if not mixed with the affair of the executrix having wasted the assets of the testator, is a simple question whether a testator giving a larger legacy than he is worth, and then the residue to another, there could be a residue. I cannot agree to the law in that case, for in such a case, if the testatrix did not leave a residue beyond the value of the legacies, the residuary legatee takes nothing, and the law of the court is that the

But a legatee otherwise entitled to a priority may have conducted himself in such a manner as to render it no more than just that the estate should be divided as if no loss had occurred.¹ Where a legacy is given in lieu of a share of residue, and the gift of the share of the residue is revoked, thereby becoming undisposed of, the legacy is payable, not out of the share thus undisposed of, but out of the general estate.²

Debts Charged on Particular Fund.—The testator may, if he desires, relieve the residuary legatee from primary liability by charging the debts upon a particular fund;³ and when he apprehends that there may be a deficiency of assets, intention of the testatrix making a specific bequest or pecuniary legacy cannot be controlled by the statement of her fortune."

1. Conduct of Legatee as Affecting Question of Priority.—In Ex parte Chadwin, 3 Swanst. 387, the testator directed his trustees or executors, after the sale of his estate, to stand possessed of the money arising from the sale, upon trust, first, to invest four hundred pounds in trust for his wife for life, in bar of dower, and after her death for W. C.; and upon the further trust, out of the residue of the money, to invest £400 in trust for T. R. for life, and after his death for his children; and upon the further trust to pay other sums to persons named; and then bequeathed the residue of the estate to W. C. The executor made no investment of the trust money, but paid interest on the two sums of four hundred pounds to the respective legatees, and applied the assets to his own use, and then became insolvent. The lord chancellor in his opinion said: "In the events that have occurred, the executor, instead of applying himself to the due administration of the testator's estate, paying the legacies according to the priorities, if there were priorities, and making proper investments, paid interest to the testator's widow and to one of his brothers; and that sort of transaction introduces another question not touched by any prior decision, whether the legatees have not so dealt with this executor in regard to their respective legacies as to have made him their debtor for each respectively."

In Willmott v. Jenkins, 1 Beav. 404, an executor, who was also trustee, paid the adult legatee his share, but invested the share of the infant legatee in his own name, and then misappropriated the funds; but further assets unexpectedly came to the estate. Lord Langdale, M. R., said: "If an executor makes payments to a legatee in person, or to a trustee for a legatee, or makes such an appropriation as is equivalent to payment, the other persons entitled under the will are not to be called on to contribute for any loss which may afterwards happen to the fund so paid or appropriated. But if there be no payment, and no appropriation equivalent to payment, I do not see why, if anything afterwards comes to the hands of the executors, it should not be applied in discharge of the legacies of the unpaid legatees."

This distinction will explain Morris v. Livie, 1 Y. & C. C. C. 380; Baker v. Farmer, L. R. 4 Eq. 382. Compare Ex parte Chadwin, 3 Swanst. 387.

2. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 618; Sykes v.

Sykes, L. R. 4 Eq. 200, L. R. 3 Ch. 301. See also Cresswell v. Creslyn (2d ed.) 125; 3 Bro. P. C. 246; 1 Swanst. 571 note.

The testator may of course direct the legacy to be paid out of the revoked share. In re Woods' Will, 29 Beav. 236; Walsh v. Walsh, 4 Ir. Rep. Eq. 428.

3. Relieving Residuary Legatee of Primary Liability.—2 Jarman on Wills (5th Am. ed.) *680; Browne v. Groombridge, 4 Madd. 495; Choat v. Yeates, 1 J. & W. 102; Evans v. Evans, 17 Sim. 86; Phillips v. Eastwood, 1 L. & G. 294; Webb v. De Beauvoisin, 31 Beav. 573; Vernon v. Earl Manvers, 31 Beav. 623.

"It should seem that where a specific portion of personal estate is appropriated to charges to which the general personalty is liable, such fund is not, as in the case of land, subsidiary only, but is primarily applicable." 2 Jarman on Wills (5th Am. ed.) *680. If, however, the residue is undisposed of, the latter is primarily liable. Holford v. Wood, 4 Ves. Jr. 78; Hewett v. Snare, 1 De G. & S. 333; Newberger v. Bell, 23 Beav. 386; Corbet v. Corbet, 8 Ir. Rep. Eq. 407.

This accords with the general principle that where there is no residuary gift, but there is in fact a residue of which no disposition has been attempted, such undisposed-of residue is in all cases the primary fund for payment of debts. Howse v. Chapman, 4 Ves. Jr. 542; Taylor v. Mogg, 27 L. J. Ch. 816.

Where one particular fund is appropriated for payment of debts, and the testator's other property is exempted, such other property still remains liable in its proper order for any deficiency, the exemption not having the effect of altering the liabilities of the several species of exempted property inter se. Brooke v. Warwick, 2 De G. & S. 425; affirmed in 1 H. & T. 142.

But where all the personalty is bequeathed in terms expressly exempting it from payment of the usual charges affecting it, this exemption throws those charges on all other property not expressly exempted, so that, for instance, in case of a deficiency in the produce of lands devised to answer such charges, they would fall upon other lands specifically devised. Morrow v. Bush, 1 Cox 185; Young v. Young, 26 Beav. 522; Powell v. Riley, L. R. 12 Eq. 175, 2 Jarman on Wills (5th Am. ed.) 682.

Mortgaged Property.—The testator may also relieve the residuary legatee from his primary liability on deficiency of assets, to exonerate mortgaged property by indicating the fund out of which the debt shall be paid, and provides for it, his direction will govern, and the loss must be borne by those on whom he places it.¹

And this rule applies even if the burden is cast upon some of the specific legacies for the benefit of others of that class, or for the benefit of legatees whose bequests are founded upon a good consideration.²

III. GENERAL LEGACIES—1. The General Rule.—It may be stated as a general rule, that where the assets prove insufficient to pay the debts and specific legacies, but not the general legacies, and all the general legatees are volunteers, the general legacies must abate proportionately inter se, in the absence of an intent on the part of this testator to prefer one general legatee to another.³

or devising the same cum onere. See the titles DEBTS OF DECEDENTS; WILLS. See also 2 Jarman on Wills (5th Am. ed.) *634; Williams on Executors (7th Eng. ed.) *1694; Woerner's Am. Law Adm., § 494.

1. Special Direction of Testator Controlling.—In re Spencer, 16 R. I. 25. In this case the court, by Duffee, C.J., said: "We are of opinion that the clause in the codicil, viz., 'Should my estate diminish in value, then my legacies shall decrease in proportion,' means that if the estate diminishes in value between the making of the will and the payment of the legacies, the resulting loss shall not fall wholly upon the residuary legatees, but all the legacies shall decrease proportionately."

In McLean v. Robertson, 126 Mass. 537, Morton, J., said: "The general rule is, that where there is a deficiency of testamentary assets, after the payment of debts, expenses, and specific legacies, the loss is to be borne pro rata by those pecuniary legacies which are in their nature general. But if the chances of a deficiency are anticipated and provided for by the testator, his directions will govern, and the loss must be borne by those upon whom he places it." See also Towle v. Swasey, 106 Mass. 105; Bancroft v. Bancroft, 104 Mass. 226; Hewes v. Dehon, 3 Gray (Mass.) 205; Hunt v. Hunt, 4 Gray (Mass.) 190; Emery v. Batchelder, 78 Me. 233; *Swasey v. 2. "When the chances of deficiency are anticipated, and provided for by the express terms of the will, then the directions of the testator will of course govern, and the loss must be borne by those on whom he places it, even if the burden is cast upon some of the specific legacies for the benefit of others of that class, or for the benefit of legatees whose bequests are founded on a good consideration." Colt, J., in Richardson v. Swasey, 106 Mass. 104.

Illustrations.—An executor was directed under a will to invest such sum as would yield one thousand dollars per year, and from the sum so invested to pay the testator's widow one thousand dollars a year during widowhood; it was held a general legacy, and subject to abatement. Haviland v. Cocks, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 4.

A legacy charged with the payment of debts is a general legacy and subject to abatement with other legacies. In re Ingersoll's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. Rep. 399. Here Ashman, J., said: "The only question which remains is as to the order of payment of the legacies bequeathed by the donee of the power. These were all pecuniary bequests, and they stand on the same footing. The gift to M. was charged with the debts of the donee and was in the nature of a trust, but this incident did not make it the less a general legacy and liable to abate pari passu." See also In re McDowell's Estate, 3 Pa. Dist. Rep. 271.

Testator gave all his property to his wife for life, and on her death made specific devises of real estate, and directed the payment of a number of pecuniary legacies, and that in case the assets at the death of his wife should not be sufficient to pay his debts and funeral expenses of his wife and the legacies in full, the legacies should be reduced pro rata. He gave his brother by codicil "the sum of twenty-five dollars per month for and during the term of his natural life, such payments to begin immediately after my decease, to and for his own use forever." At the time the codicil was made the testator's brother was sixty-eight years of age. The wife died before the testator. The executor contended that the monthly payments to the brother should abate pro rata, while he insisted that they should be paid in full. It was held by the court that it was clear, from the provisions of the will and codicil, that the testator intended the payment to be made in full; and it was therefore decreed that these monthly sums should take priority over the payment of the

2. Circumstances Influencing Application of Doctrine.—Whether one general legatee has a right to claim a preference in payment of his legacy, so as to be exempt from abatement, depends upon several considerations.

a. BOUNTY.—If the bequest is a mere bounty it must abate upon deficiency of assets, unless the contrary intent be manifest in the will.¹ But the fact of near relationship, or dependence, or of the meritorious character of the objects to which the legacy is to be applied, is not enough to exempt it from abatement.²

other legacies. Richardson v. Bowen (R. I., 1893), 25 Atl. Rep. 908.

A testator devised certain sums to various persons, and later on, by a codicil, increased the amount of the bequest to one of the legatees. It was held that the bequest in the codicil took the place of the bequest in the will, and should therefore abate and be paid on the same footing with the other legacies. Pond v. Allen, 15 R. I. 171.

A testatrix provided for the payment of certain legacies, and by codicil gave five thousand dollars to endow a bed in a hospital without directing the order of its payment. It was held to be a general legacy and subject to abatement, though given for a special purpose, and though that purpose would be entirely defeated by an abatement. Wetmore v. New York Blind Inst., 56 Hun (N. Y.) 313.

Where the Reference as to Certain Legacies Extends only to the time of payment, such legacies abate with others. Matter of Connell's Estate, 3 Redf. (N. Y.) 514.

Where it is Apparent from the Will that it was the intent of the testator to make the real estate aid in discharging the legacies, and that he intended the legacies to stand, they will not abate as in the absence of such intentions. Taylor v. Dodd, 58 N. Y. 335.

In Case of a Deficiency of Assets to Pay Debts, general legacies must be exhausted before the specific legacies can be resorted to for contribution; and this rule prevails though the general legatee be the widow of the testator, where the provisions made for her by the will exceed her common-law rights, at least so far as the excess is concerned. Mayo v. Bland, 4 Md. Ch. 484.

1. Where Bequest a Mere Bounty.—Wallace v. Wallace, 23 N. H. 149; Humes v. Wood, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 478; Towle v. Swasey, 106 Mass. 100; Mollan v. Griffith, 3 Paige (N. Bernard*, 3 Call (Va.) 11; Colbert v. Daniel, 32 Ala. 314.

2. Effect of Near Relationship, Dependence, etc.—Farnum v. Bascom, 122 Mass. 282; Pollard v. Pollard, 1 Allen (Mass.) 490; Towle v. Swasey, 106 Mass. 100; Shepherd v. Guernsey, 9 Paige (N. Creed*, 11 Cl. & F. 491.

"The fact of near relationship, or dependence, or of the meritorious character of the legatee, is not enough, when the will furnishes no proof of an intention to prefer. It cannot be left to our mere conjecture that other legacies would not have been made by the testator except upon the expectation that his estate would be sufficient to meet them." Colt, J., in Richardson v. Hall, 124 Mass. 228.

It was held in In re Chauncey, 119 N. Y. 77, that a legacy for the support of the testator's wife and child did not abate with general legacies. See also Bliven v. Seymour, 88 N. Y. 469.

How far, between persons of the same relation to the testator—e.g., between his only son, bearing the testator's name, and his daughters who are married—circumstances will have the effect to suggest a preference, e.g., of son, quære. See King v. Girdiey, 46 Conn. 555, where such fact was deemed of significance in determining the destination of the testator's homestead, not clearly disposed of by the will.

3. Bequest to Wife.—Blower v. Morret, 2 Ves. 422, by Lord Hardwicke; Lord Truro, in Miller v. Huddleston, 3 M. & G. 523; Pennsylvania University's Appeal, 97 Pa. St. 187; Titus v. Titus, 26 N. J. Eq. 111; Jett v. Bernard, 3 Call (Va.) 11.

In Wells v. Barwick, 50 L. J. Ch. 241, a legacy to testator's wife, to be paid immediately after his decease, was held to have priority. This is equivalent to holding that words in themselves insufficient to give priority to a legacy to a stranger, will be sufficient to have that effect when referred to a bequest to testator's wife, and is contrary to the opinion of Lord Hardwicke in Blower v. Morret, 2 Ves. 422. See also Roper v. Roper, 3 Ch. Div. 714.

In Duncan v. Alt, 3 P. & W. (Pa.) 382, Gibson, C.J., said: "A pecuniary legacy may undoubtedly be exempt from abatement, as in the case of a wife or child destitute of other provision, or of a legacy given in lieu of a dower, or of a preference manifestly intended. But these cases are few in number, dependent on peculiar circumstances, and attended with strong expressions of intention. They are, in fact, exceptions to the general rule that equality is the highest equity, which a chancellor is eager to enforce, whenever it is not controlled by countervailing equities or by an intent too manifest to be disregarded." See McGlaughlin v. McGlaughlin, 24 Pa. St. 22.

4. Bequests to Children.—Lord Hardwicke in Blower v. Morret, 2 Ves. 420; Lord Truro in Miller v. Huddleston, 3 M. & G. 529. A testator, by the first five articles of his will, made specific bequests and devises to his two minor children, including the homestead estate, which was an expensive establishment. By the sixth article he created a trust for the maintenance and education of his daughter, and by the seventh article a similar trust for his son; by the eighth article he gave a large sum of money in trust for the additional benefit of the children, the trust to terminate at a probably distant period, and the interest of the son to be inalienable, for the declared purpose of protecting him and his family from want; by the ninth, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth articles he gave numerous large pecuniary legacies, the largest being to his brother, his sister, and her children, who were dependent upon him for support either wholly or mainly; to other near relations, and a few friends, including one gift which the testator hoped to have applied to purposes not disclosed; by the thirteenth article he made bequests "out of any property which may then remain;" and by the fourteenth article he gave in trust "all which then remains of the property and estate." There was a deficiency of assets. It was held that there was nothing to warrant a presumption that the testator intended to prefer his children, and that the legacies in the sixth to the twelfth articles of the will, inclusive, all abated in equal proportions. Babbidge v. Vittum, 156 Mass. 38.

In Towle v. Swasey, 106 Mass. 100, a testator bequeathed to an adopted son, besides some small specific legacies, "the income arising from the sum of $10,000, to be expended by his guardian for his support and education during his minority, and the principal sum of $10,000" at majority. It was held that the bequest of the income of $10,000 to the son was to be preferred next to a bequest to testator's wife in lieu of dower; but that the bequest of the principal of $10,000 must abate with other general legacies. The court said: "The meritorious character of the legatee is not to be considered as affecting it [the construction] when there is nothing in the language of the will, or the character and declared purpose of the gift, to indicate an intention to prefer. The will is to be interpreted by what the testator has written, rather than by what he ought to have written. The circumstances of near relationship and dependence, though not of themselves sufficient, may, however, be regarded as constituting, in the language of the lord chancellor in Miller v. Huddleston, 3 M. & G. 528, 'an auxiliary reason for allowing such priority where the words used in the will favor the notion of a priority to a sufficient degree.' This is the doctrine of the leading case of Lewin v. Lewin, 2 Ves. 415. The executor was, in that case, directed to pay an annuity to the wife for the maintenance of a child, and Lord Hardwicke declared that it was a strong case to show that the annuity was intended to be preferred, especially in view of the fact that it was a provision for a child otherwise unprovided for. In Miller v. Huddleston, 3 M. & G. 513, where the law is fully discussed, life annuities to a daughter, and to other relatives, were held not entitled to priority over other legacies, on the ground that the language of the will furnished no proof of such intention. In the case at bar, the will makes special provision for the discharge of a natural obligation resting upon the father towards his son. The annuity is given expressly for his education and support during minority. It is in the form of a yearly allowance which in amount is not more than sufficient for the purpose to which it is devoted—a purpose which would be defeated if it is now liable to abatement. It terminates when he reaches twenty-one years of age, and the principal then becomes his. There is no other provision for his support and education, for it cannot be supposed that the testator contemplated that a son adopted by him before marriage would be supported by his widow out of the provision made for her. And we are of opinion that the intention is manifest, that this part of the gift to the son, namely, the income devoted to his support and education, should not be impaired in common with those general legacies which are mere bounties, by deficiency of assets, and is to be allowed from the death of the testator. The principal sum to be paid to the son when he reaches majority stands upon a different ground. There is nothing in the will which gives that part of the legacy any preference. It is distinguishable in this respect from the gift of the income, and must be classed with the general legacies subject to abatement." See Richardson v. Hall, 124 Mass. 233. Compare Willson v. Tyson, 61 Md. 575; Moore v. Beckwith, 14 Ohio St. 129; Hoyt v. Hoyt, 85 N. Y. 148.

New York.—In Stewart v. Chambers, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 393, it was laid down that legacies for support and maintenance of wife and children otherwise unprovided for do not abate with general legacies. This appears to be based upon a misunderstanding of Lord Hardwicke's ruling in Lewin v. Lewin, 2 Ves. 417. That case was based upon the intent to confer priority manifested by the creation of two residues, and not upon the relationship of the parties. Blower v. Morret, 2 Ves. 422.

In Scofield v. Adams, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 366, the principle was extended to the analogous case of a bequest by a wife for the support of her husband. In neither of these cases was Blower v. Morret, 2 Ves. 422, cited. How far they will be sustained in view of the apparent approval in that case in Bliven v. Seymour, 88 N. Y. 475, may well be questioned.

The principle has further been extended to bequests for the maintenance or education of minors (not necessarily children) who are near relatives of the testator, and who would be otherwise unprovided for; and this extension appears to have met the unqualified approval of the Court of Appeals. Bliven v. Seymour, 88 N. Y. 475. See Scofield v. Adams, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 366; Petrie v. Petrie, 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 93. But see Waters v. Collins, 3 Dem. (N. Y.) 376.

A legacy to A for support and a legacy to B for education abate ratably inter se; but a sister,¹ old servant,² or to charities,³ abate. The same is true of bequests given for the purchase of mourning rings,⁴ or for the erection of a monument to the memory of a relative.⁵

b. CONSIDERATION.—But if the legacy be given in consideration of the legatee relinquishing some subsisting right or interest, as to a creditor in satisfaction of his debt,⁶ or to a wife in lieu of dower,⁷ it will be entitled to bequest to erect headstones has priority over both. Wood v. Vandenburg, 6 Paige (N. Y.), 285.

California.—Civ. Code, § 1361, changes the rule laid down in the text by providing that legacies to husband, widow, or kindred of any class are chargeable only after legacies to persons not related to the testator.

Under Civ. Code, § 1362, abatement takes place in any class only as between legacies of that class, unless a different intention is expressed in the will.

Under Civ. Code, § 1359, property which is not specifically devised or bequeathed is to be applied to the payment of debts before other property. Hence it would seem that a general legacy to husband, widow, or kindred would have priority over other general legacies, but not over specific. See, however, Apple's Estate, 5 West Coast Rep. 522, and 1 Code Civ. Pro. § 1563, § 1564.

5. Bequests for Erection of Monuments.—Roper on Legacies (2d Am. ed.) *422; Williams on Executors (7th Eng. ed.) 1366, note (a).

In Masters v. Masters, 1 P. Wms. 423, the chancellor gave a bequest to erect a monument to the testatrix's mother preference over other general legacies, on the ground that it was a debt of piety. This position has been severely criticised by Mr. Roper (Roper Leg. (2d Am. ed.) *423), and seems untenable if the decision in Blackshaw v. Rogers, cited in Simmons v. Vallance, 4 Bro. C. C. 349, that a bequest to keep a monument in repair abates with other general legacies, is to be sustained.

Masters v. Masters, 1 P. Wms. 423, was followed in Wood v. Vandenburg, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 278. See also Ward's Law of Leg. *375; Woerner's Am. Law of Adm., § 452, maintaining the priority of such a bequest on the authority of Masters v. Masters, 1 P. Wms. 423, and Wood v. Vandenburg, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 278. See also the title DEBTS OF DECEDENTS.

Notwithstanding the decision of Lord Parker, C., in Masters v. Masters, 1 P. Wms.

423, "upon the whole, it is presumed that a general legacy to erect a monument for a parent, child, or friend would not now be excepted out of the general rule of abatement." Roper on Legacies (2d ed.), § 422.

"It may therefore be concluded that general and voluntary bequests for the maintenance or further advancement in the world of the legatees, or for any other purposes of bounty, must abate with other general legacies." Roper on Legacies (2d ed.), § 421.

The principle applies to a bequest to A on condition that he conveys a particular estate to B, and on making the conveyance A's position is of a purchaser for value, and his bequest entitled to priority over other legacies. See Blower v. Morret, 2 Ves. 422.

The principle obviously extends to cases where the will is made before the marriage, in contemplation of marrying the legatee. Towle v. Swasey, 106 Mass. 100; Farnum v. Bascom, 122 Mass. 289.

The words "in lieu of dower" need not be used; any words sufficient to put the widow to her election are ample. Warren v. Morris, 4 Del. Ch. 300. Compare Hinson v. Ennis, 81 Ky. 363. In re Gotzian's Estate, 34 Minn. 159.

In most of the states of the Union statutes provide that every testamentary provision in favor of the testator's wife shall be construed to be in lieu of dower, unless it appears from the will that he intended the provision in addition thereto. Under these statutes it seems that if the widow accept the provision she will be entitled to priority over general legacies, although the provision is not expressed to be in lieu of dower. Towle v. Swasey, 106 Mass. 105, by Colt, J. Borden v. Jenks, 140 Mass. 562; Reed v. Reed, 9 Watts (Pa.) 263; Kline's Appeal, 117 Pa. St. 148; Brown v. Brown, 79 Va. 652. Contra, *Jett v. The rule that a legacy to the widow in lieu of dower is preferred to general legacies to volunteers holds good though the gift, being an annuity for life, is made payable out of the income of the estate, unless it also appears that the testator intended that the gift should be strictly limited to such income or its payment. Moore v. Alden, 80 Me. 301.

Whether a Bequest in Lieu of Dower has Priority over Specific Legacies and Devises.—In Massachusetts it has been held that a pecuniary legacy to the testator's widow, accepted by her, must be paid, not only in preference to general legacies, but, if the abatement of those proves insufficient, in preference, first, to specific bequests, and, second, to specific devises. Borden v. Jenks, 140 Mass. 562, 54 Am. Rep. 507. See Addison v. Addison, 44 Md. 201. But this seems not to apply in other states. Sanford v. Sanford, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 757; Boykin v. Boykin, 21 S. Car. 534. See further, upon this point, Lord v. Lord, 23 Conn. 327; Reed v. Reed, 9 Watts. (Pa.) 263; Stuart v. Carson, 1 Desaus. (S. Car.) 500; Clayton v. Akin, 38 Ga. 320; Warren v. Morris, 4 Del. Where the Widow Elects to take against the will, legacies abate in her favor. Capron v. Capron, 6 Mackey (D. C.) 340.

Lien on Realty.—A legacy in lieu of dower has no lien on the realty. Sanford v. Sanford, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 757. See McCorn v. McCorn, 100 N. Y. 511; Boykin v. Boykin, 21 S. Car. 514. Contra, Addison v. Addison, 44 Md. 201. As to California, see Civ. Code, §§ 1359, 1361, 1362; Code Civ. Pro., § 1564; Apple's Estate, 66 Cal. 437.

Express Direction.—A legacy in lieu of dower has no priority over the express direction of the testator; the widow, by electing to take under the will, purchases only such rights as are therein conferred upon her, and is bound by its provisions. Tickel v. Quinn, 1 Dem. (N. Y.) 428; Orton v. Orton, 3 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 415; Kline's Appeal, 117 Pa. St. 148. See Security Co. v. Bryant, 52 Conn. 311, 52 Am. Rep. 599; Barnett's Appeal, 104 Pa. St. 342.

Bequest to Wife of Interest in General Estate.—By item one, testator left to his wife "one third of all my personal estate, excepting the proceeds or price of my farm, which I lately sold, of which I bequeath one third of the interest that may accrue on the same, to be paid to her during her natural lifetime, said bequests to her to be in lieu of dower." By items two and three he bequeathed certain general legacies, and by item four left "all the residue and remainder of my estate, after paying my funeral expenses, just debts, bequests hereby made, etc.," to A, B, C and D. It was held that the widow was only entitled to one third of what was left after deducting the debts and expenses of administration. "There is no merit in the widow's claim to have the testator's debts, expenses of administration, and costs of audit deducted from the residuary fund. * * * The reason assigned for her claim is that the bequests in her favor are in lieu of dower; hence she is a purchaser, and as to her there can be no abatement. It is not a question of abatement. The gift of one third of the personal estate is a gift of one third of what may be left after the payment of debts and expenses. As this is all her husband left her, there is no abatement." Barnett's Appeal, 104 Pa. St. 349. See Morris v. Morris, 4 Houst. (Del.) 443, reversing Warren v. Morris, 4 Del. Ch. 302.

Pretermitted Children.—In states in which the afterbirth of a child unprovided for does not revoke the will, a legacy to wife in lieu of dower is held subject to the rights of posthumous pretermitted children, and must contribute with other legacies and devises as provided by statute. This arises from the paramount right of such children over any disposition made by the will. The part of the estate taken by such child is treated as intestate property and subject to the widow's dower, notwithstanding she may not have renounced the benefit of the provisions of the will. Ward v. Ward, 120 Ill. 116; Shelby v. Shelby, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 268; Mitchell v. Blain, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 588; Warren v. Morris, 4 Del. Ch. 308, on appeal, 4 Houst. (Del.)

greatly exceeds the value of the right relinquished.¹

Bequests to Executors.—A bequest to an executor for his trouble is not sustained by a valuable consideration;² nor do the words "for care and pains"³ of themselves confer priority.

Bequests to Creditors when Debt Already Liquidated.—Likewise, and for the same reason, a bequest to a creditor whose debt has already been liquidated by composition is entitled to no preference.⁴

414. See Coates v. Hughes, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 508.

Creditors.—A widow who accepts a legacy in lieu of dower cannot claim in preference to her husband's creditors. Hence if she would compel payment of an amount equal to her dower interest, she must cite in creditors. Beekman v. Vanderveer, 3 Dem. (N. Y.) 221.

The obligation of a husband to pay to his wife a sum which by an antenuptial contract he agreed she should receive in lieu of dower, in case she should survive him, is a debt within the meaning of the usual clause of a will directing the payment of debts. Warner v. Warner, 18 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 151.

Bequests to Husband.—Since the husband of a testatrix cannot be deprived of his statutory interest in her personal estate, under the statute of distributions, without his own consent, and by accepting a provision under her will relinquishes his rights under the statute, he occupies the same position as a widow who has accepted a devise in lieu of dower, and as a purchaser he is entitled to have the legacies and devises to pure beneficiaries, although specific in their character, first applied to the payment of the debts. It is not important whether that which he is to receive is or is not an exact equivalent in value to the right which he relinquished; it is sufficient that the testatrix deemed it proper to treat it as such. Farnum v. Bascom, 122 Mass. 289; Borden v. Jenks, 140 Mass. 567. See also Scofield v. Adams, 12 Hun (N. Y.) 366.

So, too, a legacy given to a Testator's Widow, to be paid to her before the proceeds of his property are invested, will not abate in favor of legacies not payable till two years after the death of the widow. Dey v. Dey, 19 N. J. Eq. 137.

Eq. 448; Warren v. Morris, 4 Del. Ch. 289; Brown v. Brown, 79 Va. 648.

It is immaterial whether the legacy is or is not the whole of the consideration for the release of dower; if it is only part, the widow is nevertheless a purchaser. Heath v. Dendy, 1 Russ. 564.

In Matter of Brook's Estate (Surrogate Ct.), 10 N. Y. Supp. 20, a testator gave his wife a legacy of twenty-five hundred dollars in lieu of dower. The estate proved insufficient to pay the legacies in full. The surrogate said: "The estate is insufficient to pay the legacies in full. The legacy to the widow is conceded to be in value many times the actual value of the dower right released, and it is claimed that the excess in value should ratably abate with the other legacies. The principle is well established that legacies given in lieu of dower do not abate; and while I do not find any case in which it is stated that it makes no difference whether the legacy exceeds in amount the value of the dower right relinquished, I do find several cases in which it was stated that such was the fact, and no significance apparently was attached to it. Orton v. Orton, 3 Abb. Dec. 411."

2. Bequest to Executor for His Trouble.—Duncan v. Watts, 16 Beav. 204. See Fretwell v. Stacy, 2 Vern. 434; Atty.-Gen. v. Robins, 2 P. Wms. 25; Hurron v. Burt, 2 Atk. 171. Compare Clapp v. Meserole, 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 362; Clayton v. Akin, 38 Ga. 330.

The acceptance of a legacy under the will does not prevent him from claiming commissions, unless put to his election by the instrument. See the title EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Election by Executor.—On the other hand, it would seem clear, upon principle, that where an executor is put to his election, and elects to take the legacy, he stands in regard to other general legatees as a purchaser and entitled to the same priority as any other creditor who has a legacy in satisfaction of his debt. See Harper's Appeal, 111 Pa. St. 247; Waters v. Collins, 3 Dem. (N. Y.) 374; Matter of Mason, 98 N. Y. 533. But see Clayton v. Akin, 38 Ga. 330. As to the status of an executor's claim for commissions see the titles EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS; LEGACIES AND DEVISES.

3. Bequest to Executor "for Care and Pains."—Heron v. Heron, 2 Atk. 171; Clayton v. Akin, 38 Ga. 330; Morris v. Kent, 2 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 175. In the first case cited Lord Hardwicke said: "I am very unwilling to distinguish legacies given to executors for their care and pains from common legacies, because whether the care and pains be expressed in the will or not is a circumstance depending entirely upon the whim of the drawer. The legacies are still bequests, and not more so than others, so that there ought not to be any distinction among them upon so slight a ground."

An executor cannot give himself a preference in regard to his own legacy, as he could at common law in the case of his own debt. Toller Exrs. 347.

4. A Release under a Deed of Composition destroys the original obligation, and the creditor stands in no better position as to the Bequest to Pay Debt of a Friend.—The same is true in case of a bequest to pay the debt of a friend, there never having been any obligation on the part of the testator to pay the debt.¹

Rights must Subsist at Time of Testator's Death.—As it is the surrender of existing rights which constitutes the consideration and authorizes the preference, these rights should be subsisting at the time of the testator's death.² Hence it has been held that legacies of unpaid balances to creditors whose debts have been previously liquidated by composition for less than their face value,³ or to a wife in lieu of dower, of which she had already been barred;⁴ or where the testator left no land of which his widow was dowable,⁵ must abate with other legacies.

c. INTENT—Intent to Create Priority must be Clear.—The testator may, of course, give one legacy a preference over others in case the assets are insufficient, but his intent to do so must be clearly manifest upon a fair construction of the instrument.⁶

balance due than a volunteer. Coppin v. Coppin, 2 P. Wms. 296.

On the other hand, it seems that the bar of the statute of limitations merely creates new matter of defense without destroying obligation, and the defense being waived by the bequest, the original obligation remains intact. See Williamson v. Naylor, 3 Y. & C. 208; Phillips v. Phillips, 3 Hare 281. As to proceedings in bankruptcy, see In re Sowerby, 2 Kay & J. 630; Turner v. Martin, 7 De G., M. & G. 429. But see Duncan v. Franklin Tp., 43 N. J. Eq. 145.

Legacies Given under a Sense of Moral Obligation.—That the legacy was given because of a sense of moral obligation, or as compensation for services or other favors rendered as a mere voluntary courtesy, will not, if no legal obligation to pay exist at the death of the testator, constitute such a valuable consideration as to entitle the legacy to priority in payment. The expression in the will, "for his services in assisting me at different times," referring to the legatee, does not, standing alone, import indebtedness for which payment may be exacted by process of law. For aught that appears to the contrary, the services may have been rendered gratuitously, and the legacy given in grateful recognition. Duncan v. Franklin Tp., 43 N. J. Eq. 145.

So the fact that legatee had supported testator's mother, and that he had declared that she should be compensated as he had provided for her in his will, is not enough. Towle v. Swasey, 106 Mass. 100.

Nevertheless, the fact that the testator, in making the bequest, seems to have acted under a sense of moral obligation, is a material circumstance to be considered in construing the will, and, taken in connection with other circumstances, may confer priority on the legacy, on the ground of implied intention, irrespective of the doctrine of consideration. Thus, where a testatrix by her will directed her house to be sold and two hundred dollars out of the proceeds to be paid to R., a former partner of her husband, provided "it can be proved that it was loaned to my said husband to be put into the first money paid for this house, my executor to decide whether it is or is not proved that the money was so given," and all the other bequests were preceded by words of donation and followed by a provision that "all these specific bequests of money, in the event of there not being enough to pay them all in full, each one is to be paid in proportion to the sum left him," it was held, on the executor's deciding that the money had been so lent by R., that his bequest of two hundred dollars had priority. McLean v. Robertson, 126 Mass. 537; Borden v. Jenks, 140 Mass. 567.

Consideration Arising after Testator's Death.

—A consideration arising after testator's death by reason of services to be performed, as where the legacy is on the express condition that legatee "shall continue to live as housekeeper" with the husband of testatrix, Gassman's Estate, 10 W. N. C. (Pa.) 276; or "take care of the premises and the goods left thereon," is sufficient. Weckerly's Estate, 15 Phila. (Pa.) 527.

So where the legacy was given to "A for his services as trustee to" B, and the question of priority arises exclusively between A and B, the legacy to A is preferred. Harper's Appeal, 111 Pa. St. 245.

Burden of Proof.—But the burden lies upon the party seeking priority to establish it, and to show that such was the intention of the testator.¹

Use of Certain Terms.—But the words "imprimis," "in the first place," "in the second place," or "afterwards" create no priority, either *inter se*² or over other general legatees.³

Direction to Executor.—Nor is a direction to an executor to pay a legatee im-

Trunkey, J., in Pennsylvania University's Appeal, 97 Pa. St. 199.

Presumption of Intended Equality.—But the presumption of intended equality prevails between general legatees as a class and between specific legatees as a class where such legatees are mere beneficiaries, and that equality in respect to the share to be borne in all deficiencies of assets will not be disturbed without clear evidence in the will of a different intention. Richardson v. Hall, 124 Mass. 228.

"In the common case of a direction, in the will of a testator, to pay several pecuniary legacies out of his estate, if it happens that the fund provided for the payment of such legacies is not sufficient to satisfy all, each legacy must abate ratably. And the executor is not at liberty to pay the first legatee named in the will in full, although the payment of that legacy was first directed by the testator. The presumption in such cases is that the testator intended that all the legatees should be paid equally. Such presumption of intended equality will not be repelled by any ambiguous expressions in the will, but must be allowed to prevail, unless the will contains unequivocal evidence of the testator's intention to give some of the legatees a preference in case the fund should be found to be insufficient to pay all." Chancellor Walworth in Shepherd v. Guernsey, 9 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 357.

1. Burden of Proof upon Party Seeking Preference.—Duncan v. Franklin Tp., 43 N. J. Eq. 143; Shepherd v. Guernsey, 9 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 357.

In Emery v. Batchelder, 78 Me. 233, the court by Foster, J., said: "Therefore if, by express words or by a fair construction, the intent of the testator is clearly manifest that one general legatee should have priority over the others, that intention must be carried out; but the burden lies upon the party seeking priority to establish it and show that such was the intention of the testator, for the reason that, in the absence of proof of such priority, the testator is presumed to have considered his estate sufficient to pay all legacies, and therefore not to have thought it necessary to provide for a deficiency by giving preference to any of those upon whom he has bestowed his bounty (Miller v. Huddleston, 3 M. & G. 513), consequently no priority will be allowed where the expressions are ambiguous and do not mark with certainty the testator's intention."

2. Use of the Word "Imprimis" and the Like.—Matter of Vreeland's Estate (Surrogate Ct.), 25 N. Y. Supp. 725; Johnson v. Child, 4 Hare 87; Thwaites v. Foreman, 1 Colly. 409; Beeston v. Booth, 4 Madd. 161; Whitehouse v. Insole, 7 L. T., N. S. 400; In re Hardy, 50 L. J. Ch. 241; Everett v. Carr, 59 Me. 330;

Gray's Estate, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 246; Brown v. Brown, 1 Keen 275.

For if the testator says "imprimis," or "in the first place, I give such a legacy," that amounts only to the order in which he expresses his gifts in the will; to nothing more. Lewin v. Lewin, 2 Ves. 417.

3. Illustrations.—A learned text-writer uses the following language: "If a testator expressed himself in the following manner: 'imprimis,' or 'in the first place,' I give such a legacy to A, and 'in the next place,' or 'afterwards,' I give such a sum of money to B; these words, or variety of expression (considering the inattention and incorrectness with which wills are frequently drawn, as also the little regard paid to nicety of expression), will neither give A a preference to B, nor either of them a priority to other general legatees, so as to exempt them from the obligation of abating with such other legatees. The reason is that the words merely point out the order in which the bequests are made in succession, and do not impart with certainty an intention to prefer one to another. The expressions before noticed are not necessarily inconsistent with the application of the general rule of abatement, which is founded on equality; but they may be satisfied with a construction compatible with the admission of that rule. The possible intent of the testator to give a preference by the language he adopted is judicially insufficient to accomplish a purpose so obscurely or doubtfully intimated." Roper on Legacies (2d Am. ed.) *427, citing Brown v. Allen, 1 Vern. 31; Lewin v. Lewin, 2 Ves. 417; Blower v. Morret, 2 Ves. 421; Brown v. Brown, 1 Keen 275; Everett v. Carr, 59 Me. 330.

For the same reason, if a legacy be given to A, payable one month after the testator's death, a second to B, payable six months after the testator's death, and a third legacy to C, payable twelve months after the testator's death, the difference in times of payment will not impart to any of the legatees such a preference as to exempt them from abating upon a deficiency of assets. Such direction may have been intended to affect only the time of payment, and is consistent with the presumption that the testator intended all his dispositions to be wholly satisfied, upon which presumption the rule of abatement is founded. Blower v. Morret, 2 Ves. 421. See also Beeston v. Booth, 4 Madd. 168.

But a legacy of one thousand pounds, to be raised by executors "within two calendar months next after my decease, out of my said three per cent reduced annuities, before any other charges thereon," is to be paid before any other person named either in the will or codicils is entitled to take any portion of that fund. Johnson v. Johnson, 14 Sim. 325.

mediately after the testator's death,¹ or one month after his decease, sufficient to create a priority.²

Testator Supposing there will be Sufficiency.—On the other hand, a legacy given upon the supposition that there will still be a residue after the payment of prior legacies abates first.³ So where the testator constitutes two residues and computes the first after taking out of it one or more legacies, and computes the second after deducting other legacies, the first set of legatees are preferred to the second.⁴

2. Beeston v. Booth, 4 Madd. 168.

3. Beeston v. Booth, 4 Madd. 170; Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 622; Atty.-Gen. v. Robins, 2 P. Wms. 23; Stammers v. Halliley, 12 Sim. 42; Brown v. Brown, 1 Keen 275. Thus, where the testator, after giving several legacies, mentioned, towards the conclusion of his will, that he apprehended there would be a considerable surplus of his personal estate beyond what he had before disposed of in legacies, for which reason he gave several others, and afterwards bequeathed further legacies by codicil, to be paid, on deficiency of assets, out of £200 given by the will to charitable purposes, the master of the rolls held that the legacies given on the supposition that there would be a surplus were postponed to those previously bequeathed, and that the same supposition of surplus affected the legacies by codicil, which must be lost also, except in so far as the special fund bequeathed to charities sufficed for payment. Atty.-Gen. v. Robins, 2 P. Wms. 24.

4. Where Testator Constitutes Two Residues.—Roper on Legacies (2d Am. ed.) *427, citing Lewin v. Lewin, 2 Ves. 415, a case which was expressly placed upon this ground by Lord Hardwicke in Blower v. Morret, 2 Ves. 241, and which, unless so explained, cannot be reconciled with the principle that a legacy or annuity to a wife or child, ipso facto, has no priority. In that case A, having a wife and two children, bequeathed to her for life an annuity of one hundred and twenty pounds, subject to limitations over if he had a son, etc., and afterwards directed the executors to buy, if they could, the annuity in government securities of ninety-nine years or some other long term; but, if they were unable to do so, then to purchase lands of the annual value of two hundred pounds, to be so settled that the annuity should be to his wife free from taxes with remainder over. A also directed that, if he left any child, his executors should, out of the profits of his residuary estate, pay to the wife thirty pounds a year for the maintenance of the child. He then gave legacies to some collateral relations and friends, and ordered all the residue of his real and personal estates to be placed out for the benefit of his child or children, to be paid to him or them at their respective ages of twenty-one, or marriage. On deficiency of assets, it was held that the wife's annuity of one hundred and twenty pounds was preferred to the other general legacies.

And where the testator gave legacies to his two sons and his daughter, with proviso that, if the assets should fall short, the daughter should be paid in full and the abatement borne proportionally by the legacies to the sons only, it was held that a deficiency caused by the executor's waste must be borne by the sons only. Marsh v. Evans, 1 P. Wms. 668. It seems that a deficiency caused by losses from fire or defective securities would be equally within the proviso. Roper on Legacies (2d Am. ed.) *425.

A testator directed, if his estate should be too small to pay all legacies in full, "then pay one and all pro rata; or if otherwise, the same pro rata." It was held, there being no other residuary clause, that "if otherwise, pro rata" meant, if there should be a surplus the surplus should be divided pro rata. Bartlett v. Houdlette, 147 Mass. 25.

After disposing of his whole estate by the first four clauses of his will, a testator in the fifth provided: "Independent of all the provisions heretofore made by me, I give * * * eight hundred dollars out of money due my estate, to be applied to the education of my youngest daughter, F. L." It was held that the bequest to F. L. was to be paid prior to all other legacies and devises, and the legatee could recover it from the estate after attaining majority. Lee v. Smith, 84 Va. 289.

Where a testator directs a legacy to be paid in preference to and before every and all other legacies, said legacy is entitled to priority in the distribution of a fund produced by the sale of real estate converted by peremptory direction of the testator for the benefit of certain designated beneficiaries. Bright's Appeal, 100 Pa. St. 602.

By the different clauses of a will, gifts of railroad stock by testator were made to his children and to other persons and societies. By the twenty-fourth clause he directed that, should there be a deficiency of assets to pay all the bequests, the bequests to his children in the first four clauses should first be fully paid. It was held that the gifts of railroad stock were not severally specific legacies required to be paid in full, regardless of the question whether there were assets to pay the pecuniary legacies provided in the first four clauses. Shethar v. Sherman, 65 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 9.

Abatement Inter Se.—On deficiency of assets legacies equally preferred by the testator abate pro rata, while the unpreferred general legacies are lost entirely. Bancroft v. Bancroft, 104 Mass. 226; Wood v. Vandenberg, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 285. Compare Waters v. Collins, 3 Dem. (N. Y.) 376.

Special Direction as to Legacies for Life.—So a direction that particular legacies given for life are to become applicable on the death of the legatee to the payment of other legacies, will give the legatee for life priority.¹

When there is but One General Legacy.—The priority of general over residuary bequests is not affected by the fact that there is but one general legacy, and the residue is then distributed in certain sums; but in such case the general legacy has priority over all others.²

3. Annuities—Annuity Charged on Personality.—An annuity charged on personal estate is a general legacy, so that between annuitants and legatees there is no priority where there is a deficient estate, but both must abate proportionally.³

1. Brown v. Brown, 1 Keen 275; Haynes v. Haynes, 3 De G., M. & G. 590.

But legacies payable at the death of a tenant for life, or at some future period, do not abate before other legacies. Miller v. Huddleston, 3 M. & G. 513; Street v. Street, 2 N. R. 56; Nickisson v. Cockill, 3 De G., J. & S. 622.

Legacies for life, with remainder over, where the estate is insufficient to pay them in full, should abate, as between the life tenants and remaindermen, proportionally. Wood v. Hammond (R. I., 1889), 17 Atl. Rep. 324.

Where the payment of the general legacies was postponed till the death of the life tenant, who was entitled by the will to consume the principal of the entire estate if necessary for her support, it was held that if the assets at that time proved insufficient to pay them in full, they should abate ratably.

2. Gyett v. Williams, 2 J. & H. 440; In re Hardy, 50 L. J. Ch. 241. In the first case just cited the court said: "Where a man directs two thousand pounds to be laid out in purchasing an estate, and then, after disposing of that estate, directs that the residue of his estate is to be invested and portioned out in a particular way, what is it that he gives by this last disposition? Clearly nothing except the residue so to be invested after payment of the two thousand pounds. The substance of the gift is such that the language cannot be regarded as pertaining to the mere order of enumeration, but must be read as giving priority. The onus, no doubt, is on those who claim priority; but in this case I think it is satisfied."

3. Annuity Charged on Personality a General Legacy.—Hume v. Edwards, 3 Atk. 693; Innes v. Mitchell, 1 Ph. 346; Creed v. Creed, 11 Cl. & F. 508; Miller v. Huddleston, 3 M. & G. 513; Emery v. Batchelder, 78 Me. 233; Pennsylvania University's Appeal, 97 Pa. St. 187; Heatherington v. Lewenberg, 61 Miss. 372. Compare Smith v. Fellows, 131 Mass. 20; Richardson v. Bowen (R. I., 1893), 25 Atl. Rep. 908.

In Emery v. Batchelder, 78 Me. 233, the court said: "The principal controversy is whether this annuitant should suffer pro rata with the other general legatees in the will, or is entitled to priority over them and to payment of the annuity in full. * * * And here we may say that the language used is such that there can be no question but that this legacy is general, and not specific. It is for a certain amount to be paid from the general fund of the estate. It is not specific, because not of any particular thing or from any particular money of the testator's estate. Therefore the general rule is, that in the administration of testamentary assets, when there is a deficiency of such assets after the payment of debts, expenses, and specific legacies, the loss is to be borne pro rata by those pecuniary legacies which are in their nature general. And it is the settled doctrine that annuities stand upon the same footing as legacies, and as between annuitants and legatees there is no priority merely because one is an annuitant and the other a legatee, where the estate is deficient, but both must abate in the same proportion."

The principle applies whether the annuity is to commence immediately on the testator's death or at a future period. Innes v. Mitchell, 2 Ph. 346.

As to Mode of Valuation, see the cases of Wroughton v. Colquhoun, 1 De G. & S. 36; Wright v. Callender, 2 De G., M. & G. 652; Potts v. Smith, L. R. 8 Eq. 683; Gratrix v. Chambers, 2 Giff. 321.

See Todd v. Billby, 27 Beav. 353, as to the proper mode of ascertaining value in a case where several annuities are given and the fund proves deficient, and some of the annuitants are dead and some living.

When Value to be Taken.—As to the period at which the value must be taken, see Fielding v. Preston, 1 De G. & J. 438.

Legacies and Annuities Charged on Land Devised.—It would seem to be the better opinion that a devise of land and a rent charge, legacy, or annuity charged thereon would abate ratably, since the devise is specific and the charge either demonstrative or specific; and the testator must have equally intended the devisee to have the land and the legatee to have the legacy or annuity. It was so held in the case of a rent charge or annuity in Long v. Short, 1 P. Wms. 403. See Jackson v. Hamilton, 9 Ir. Eq. Rep. 434; Gaw v. Huffman, 12 Gratt. (Va.) 628; McCampbell v. McCampbell, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 92.

On the other hand, it has been said that where property of any kind is devised to one person and a sum certain bequeathed out of it to another, the intention of the testator manifestly is that the devisee shall only have what remains after paying the legacy; and if the property becomes less valuable, or part of it is required for the payment of debts, the loss will be his and not that of the person who is to receive the moiety. Raikes v. Boneton, 29 Beav. 41; Hoover v. Hoover, 5 Pa. St. 351. In re Barklay's Estate, 10 Pa.

The same is true with a bequest of a sum of money to purchase an annuity,¹ or to be used in the purchase of real estate,² or to be invested in government securities for the benefit of annuitants.³ In all these cases, if there is a deficiency of assets, these sums abate.

Annuities abate not only with reference to other legacies, but between themselves as well.⁴ But if annuities are given as specific gifts out of real estate, they do not abate with legacies charged generally upon the real estate, when the real estate is insufficient to pay both annuities and legacies.⁵

St. 387. Compare Hallowell's Estate, 23 Pa. St. 223; Cryder's Appeal, 11 Pa. St. 72.

Where legacies and annuities are charged on real estate, powers of distress and entry conferred upon the annuitants do not give the annuities priority over the legacies. Roper v. Roper, 3 Ch. D. 714.

In Curran v. Green (R. I., 1893), 27 Atl. Rep. 596, where the testator created a trust fund out of which he directed certain annuities to be paid, giving the residue of the fund to his daughter, and the income of the fund proved insufficient to pay the annuities in full and the taxes, the court said: "We are also of the opinion that the annuities provided for are to be paid without abatement, and are not to abate because the income of the trust fund may be insufficient for their payment in full and the payment of taxes; the gift over * * * being not of the fund in its entirety, but only of the residue."

And where also a testator bequeathed an annuity of fifteen thousand dollars per annum to his widow in lieu of her share in his personal estate under the statute, and the personal estate was not sufficient to pay the annuity and other bequests, it was held that the annuity was not subject to abatement along with such other bequests. McDaniels' Estate, 9 Pa. 2. Lawson v. Stitch, 1 Atk. 507.

3. Gibbons v. Hills, Dick. 324.

"Such being the rule when an annuity is given directly out of the personal estate, because it amounts to no more than a general bequest of so much money out of that fund as will yearly produce the annuity, it follows that, if the bequest be of a sum of money to purchase an annuity, or to lay out in buying land, or invest upon government securities for the benefit of the legatee, either in paying to him the rents and interest, or otherwise to dispose of the benefits according to his appointment, or to transfer them to him at a particular time, in each of those cases, if there be a failure of assets, those severally must abate, since they are no more than voluntary dispositions, and fall within the class of general legacies." Roper on Legacies (2d Am. ed.), § 420.

4. Annuities Abating Inter Se.—Innes v. Mitchell, 2 Ph. 346. Or, in reference to general legacies, they abate ratably. Wms. Ex'rs (7th Eng. ed.) 1367; Wroughton v. Colquhoun, 1 De G. & S. 36; Carr v. Ingleby, 1 De G. & S. 362; Long v. Hughes, 1 De G. & S. 364.

In Innes v. Mitchell, 2 Ph. 346, the testator had bequeathed an annuity of three hundred pounds to his three daughters and the survivors and survivor, with a gift over, to the last survivor, of the sums set apart to answer the annuity. After the death of one of the daughters the fund set apart was lost by the misconduct of the trustee, and the annuity remained unpaid for the rest of the lives of the other two; but after their deaths a sum of money—forming part of the residue—became available. It was held that the annuity must be supposed to have continued until put an end to by the principal money falling in, and that such money must be apportioned ratably between the arrears which on that supposition would be due to the daughters respectively, and the sum originally set apart and which belonged to the last survivor.

In Creed v. Creed, 11 Cl. & F. 491, a testator gave his wife his freehold estate of B. and certain specific chattels, and also an annuity for life charged upon all his real estate except B., with power of distress for the same. He then charged his debts upon his real estate in aid of his personal estate. He next gave several pecuniary legacies to be paid, in case of a deficiency of personal estate, out of his real estate except B., and he charged his real estate with the same. The personal estate was insufficient to pay the debts and legacies; the real estate was insufficient to pay the annuities and legacies. It was held that as to the real estate, the annuities were entitled to priority over the legacies.

A testator, after bequeathing certain legacies, devised his freehold estate called R. to his brother in tail male, but subject to and charged with the payment of two annuities; and he directed that the residue of his estate thereafter devised should be considered and made the primary fund for the payment of his debts and the several legacies given by his will, and that the R. estate, "hereinbefore devised, subject as aforesaid" to his brother in tail male, should not be subject or liable to the payment of said legacies, unless the residue of his estates thereafter specifically bequeathed for those purposes should prove of insufficient value. That event having happened, it was held that the subject-matter

4. Legacy of Stock.—Where stock is bequeathed as a general legacy, and the legatee is called upon to abate with other general legatees, the abatement will be regulated by the value of the stock at the end of one year next after the death of the testator.¹

5. Gift of Legacy Duty.—A gift of a legacy duty on a specific or a pecuniary legacy is a general legacy for the benefit of the specific legatee in the one case and of the pecuniary legatee in the other, and abates with other general legacies.²

IV. SPECIFIC AND DEMONSTRATIVE LEGACIES—1. In General.—After all the personal estate not specifically bequeathed has been exhausted,³ specific which was charged with the legacies was only the R. estate, burdened with the annuities, which consequently had priority thereon over the legacies. Portarlington v. Damer, 4 De G., J. & S. 161.

1. An instance of this sort occurred in Blackshaw v. Rogers, cited in Simmons v. Vallance, 4 Bro. C. C. 349, in which a testator gave £200 consols to B, to keep a monument in repair, and by a codicil he gave the interest of £300 to C for life. The assets being deficient, Lord Thurlow decreed that B and C should abate in proportion; and he directed the master to inquire into the value of the stock at the end of a year after the death of the testator. See also Shadwell & C., in Anther v. Anther, 13 Sim. 440; Keyling's Case, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 239, pl. 25; Osborne v. McAlpine, 4 Redf. (N. Y.) 1.

2. Gift of Legacy Duty—When General Legacy.—Farrer v. St. Catherine's College, L. R. 16 Eq. 19, 25. See Wilson v. O'Leary, L. R. 17 Eq. 419.

It appeared in Farrer v. St. Catherine's College, L. R. 16 Eq. 19, 25, that the general personal estate of the testator was insufficient for the payment of the pecuniary legacies in full; and the question was raised as to whether any legacy duty was payable out of that estate or their specific legacies. Lord Selbourne, L.C., said: "A gift of legacy duty on a specific or pecuniary legacy is a common pecuniary legacy for the benefit of the specific legatee in the one case, and of the pecuniary legatee in the other; and in the event of the general estate being insufficient, the gifts of legacy duty must abate along with other pecuniary legacies. The value of the specific legacies must, therefore, be ascertained and the amounts of legacy duty payable thereon calculated, and such amounts must be treated as pecuniary legacies, and abate accordingly."

General Legacies Abate before Specific legacies or devises can be called upon at all. "The principle is the presumed intention of the testator [presumed from his severing specific parts of his personal estate from the rest and bequeathing them specifically] to give a preference to those legatees." Roper on Legacies (2d Am. ed.) *355. In Wallace v. Wallace, 23 N. H. 149, the court said: "As between specific and general legacies, where the personal property is not sufficient to pay the debts and the specific legacy, the general legatees must lose their legacies."

Where there is a deficiency of assets to answer the legacies, the question whether the specific shall abate with the general legacies must be decided according to the intention of the testator. Moore v. Moore (N. J., 1892), 25 Atl. Rep. 403. See also Norris v. Thomson, 16 N. J. Eq. 542.

A devise of a house and ten acres of land adjacent thereto, to be allotted by the executors, is specific, and does not abate upon the insufficiency of the estate to pay all the bequests. Wood v. Hammond, 16 R. I. 98.

Intent of Testator.—A testator devised his residence in trust for his wife for life, the trustees at her death to convey it to the Home for Aged Men; and, disclaiming any intention to "impose any restriction upon the absolute title to be conveyed," suggested its use for a "home." After a specific bequest to his wife absolutely, and a gift to her for life of the income of a trust fund of twenty-five thousand dollars to be created out of personal property not specifically bequeathed, the testator stated that he preferred the provisions for his wife, "to all other devises and bequests of this will;" and directed the specific bequest to be paid to her, and the trust fund to "be formed before payment of any other legacies, and to be free from abatement" in case the estate should prove insufficient to carry out the will. Another fund was then to be formed for the testator's sons, and preferred "next after" the devises and bequests already made. At the wife's death ten thousand dollars was to be paid out of the twenty-five thousand dollar fund to the Washingtonian Home, and the balance was to be held for the benefit of the son and a granddaughter. A power to sell real estate, conferred upon the executors and the trustees, expressly excepted the testator's residence. The wife died before the testator, and the personal estate after the payment of debts was less than ten thousand dollars in value. It was held that the twenty-five thousand dollar fund was not preferred over the specific devise of the residence. Johnson v. Home for Aged Men, 152 Mass. 89.

Brant, 40 Mo. 280; Woodworth's Estate, 31 Cal. 616.

In What Instances Question of Abatement may Arise.—The question of abatement may arise, first, between specific legatees; second, between specific devisees; third, between specific devisees and legatees. The application of the principle in the first two instances is simple, and seems never to have been seriously questioned.

Specific Devisees and Legatees.—But whether the contention has arisen between specific devisees and legatees, the authorities are by no means uniform. Before Stat. 3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 104, by which the land of a decedent was made subject to simple contract debts, it was held that devisees of freehold and leasehold were liable to contribute pro rata to debts by specialty, since both freeholds and leaseholds were liable to those demands. Long v. Short, 1 P. Wms. 403; Tombs v. Roch, 2 Colly. 490; Gervis v. Gervis, 14 Sim. 654, overruling Cornewall v. Cornewall, 12 Sim. 298; Williams on Executors (7th Eng. ed.) 1696, 1717, 1719.

Since the passage of Stat. 3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 104, in England, and similar statutes in most of the United States, by which the real estate of a decedent is rendered liable for his simple contract debts, there would seem to be no reason why specific legatees whose legacies have been sold to pay principal contract debts cannot call on the specific devisees for like contribution. Roper on Legacies (2d Am. ed.) *359. See Williams on Executors (7th Eng. ed.) 1717; Jackson v. Pease, L. R. 19 Eq. 96; Lancefield v. Iggulden, L. R. 10 Ch. 136; Armstrong's Appeal, 63 Pa. St. 316; Cryder's Appeal, 11 Ga. St. 72; Brant v. Brant, 40 Mo. 280; Woodworth's Estate, 31 Cal. 616; Grim's Appeal, 89 Pa. St. 333; Loomis's Appeal, 10 Pa. St. 387; Kelly v. Richardson, 100 Ala. 584; Mabury v. Grady, 67 Ala. 147.

In Armstrong's Appeals, 63 Pa. St. 312, Sharswood, J., said: "In this state, where lands have always been assets for the payment of debts by simple contract as well as by specialty, the rule is general—that wherever there is a deficiency of assets to pay both debts and legacies, specific devisees and specific legatees shall contribute proportionably. What is termed a demonstrative legacy partakes, in this respect, of the privilege of a specific legacy."

In Hubbell v. Hubbell, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 561, it was held that lands specifically devised could not be sold to pay specific legacies; whether or not the specific legatees could compel contribution, was left undecided. See also Humes v. Wood, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 478; Hayes v. Seaver, 7 Me. 237; Kitchell v. Young, 46 N. J. 501.

In some instances, following cases decided upon the authority of Cornewall v. Cornewall, 12 Sim. 298, overruled in Gervis v. Gervis, 14 Sim. 654, it has been held that specific legacies abate before specific devisees, and the devisees cannot be called upon for contribution unless the testator has manifested his intention to place both on the same level by charging the land, or it is subject to a lien. Rogers v. Rogers, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 190; Shreve v. Shreve, 10 N. J. Eq. 391; Elliott v. Carter, 9 Gratt. (Va.) 549; Warley v. Warley, Bailey Eq. (S. Car.) 409; Farmer v. Spell, 11 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 549; M'Campbell v. M'Campbell, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 92, 15 Am. Dec. 59.

In M'Fadden v. Hefley, 28 S. Car. 317, item 1 of a will was as follows: "I give, devise, and bequeath to my wife, Rebecca Hefley, during her life or widowhood the plantation where I now reside; and at her death, or in the event of her marrying again, I give and devise the same to my son, William Henry, to be held by him in trust for his own use and benefit and for the use and benefit of all my other children by my said wife, Rebecca, equally; the said plantation to be the common homestead of all my said children so long as they may choose to occupy it as such; and in the event of any of them removing therefrom, then the ones so removing are to be entitled to receive from the net proceeds of said plantation such amount as will equal that of those who remain thereon. My said son, William Henry, is to have the control and management of the said plantation." McIver, J., said: "Item 1 is clearly a specific devise of real estate, and cannot therefore be abated until, first, the general legacies and then the specific legacies are exhausted. Warley v. Warley, Bailey Eq. (S. Car.) 397. It was argued on behalf of appellants, that there is no priority as between specific devisees and specific legacies, but that when abatement becomes necessary they must abate pro rata. While, under the view which we take, this may not become a question of any interest to the appellants, yet, to avoid misconception, we desire to say that we do not concur in that proposition. The rule is otherwise." See also Hull v. Hull, 3 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 65.

Of course, where the land is not liable for simple contract debts, specific legatees whose legacies have been taken to discharge such obligations cannot call for contribution from the devisees. Chase v. Lockerman, 11 Gill & J. (Md.) 204; Dugan v. Hollins, 11 Md. 41.

In states in which a legacy to widow in lieu of dower has priority over both specific legacies and devises, specific legatees and devisees must contribute pro rata. Addison v. Addison, 44 Md. 202. See also the title LEGACIES AND DEVISES.

Devise to Heir.—The heir to whom an estate as the fund upon which they are charged will extend for their payment, abate ratably with specific legacies;¹ but in so far as it may be necessary to resort is devised, though taking as heir, is entitled to contribution as between himself and other devisees. Roper on Legacies (2d Am. ed.) *361; Biederman v. Seymour, 3 Beav. 368.

By Stat. 3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 106, § 3, the heir to whom an estate is devised takes as devisee for all purposes. Strickland v. Strickland, 10 Sim. 374.

Devise in Lieu of Dower.—When a widow relinquishes her right of dower in consideration of a devise she is regarded as a purchaser, and as such she has the right to ask that lands devised to others, not standing in the same position with herself, shall first be sold for the payment of debt before proceeding against those given to her. Kirk's Estate, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 276, citing Heath v. Dendy, 1 Russ. 543; Burridge v. Brady, 1 P. Wms. 127; Blower v. Morret, 2 Ves. 420; Earp's Will, 1 Pars. Eq. Cas. (Pa.) 453; Walter v. Dunshee, 38 Pa. St. 430; Steffy & Shimp's Appeal, Leg. Int. 1874 (Pa.), 252.

English Rule Modified.—In Grim's Appeal, 89 Pa. St. 333, the court, by Mercur, J., said: "It may be conceded, under the English authorities, that demonstrative legacies, or specific bequests of personalty, payable out of a particular fund, set apart for that purpose, will abate only as against each other in case of a deficiency of assets for the payment of simple contract debts, and also that some of the earlier decisions of this court appear to have assumed that to be the correct rule. In later cases, however, this court has given a reason for modifying the rule which prevails in England, resting, in my opinion, on substantial ground. There lands are not, as here, regarded as general assets for the payment of debts. Hence it was reasonably inferred that an intention existed there, as against simple contract debts, to prefer specific devisees over specific legacies. In this state, however, lands have always been assets for the payment of debts whether by simple contract or otherwise. Hence, now, specific or demonstrative legacies shall not alone be liable to abate, but, on a deficiency of personal assets to pay debts, devisees are equally liable to abate." See, further, Loomis's Appeal, 10 Pa. St. 387; Tea's Appeal, 23 Pa. St. 223; Armstrong's Appeal, 63 Pa. St. 312; Knecht's Appeal, 71 Pa. St. 333; Snyder's Appeal, 75 Pa. St. 171.

In Brant v. Brant, 40 Mo. 266, the court said: "The rule that specific devisees were considered as intended to be preferred over specific legacies was derived from England, where, as is well known, land is not regarded as general assets for the payment of debts. But this rule never applied to specialty debts, because land was liable for them, and therefore as to them devisees and specific legacies ratably contributed. With us land is assets for all sorts of debts, no distinction being made between simple contract debts and debts by specialty; and although the personal estate is the primary fund for their payment, yet, as between the devisees and legatees, the same reason does not exist for preferring devisees over legacies."

In Hoover v. Hoover, 5 Pa. St. 351, the court said: "But the case is very different where the burden of paying the legacies is specifically imposed on the devised land. The devisee then takes it so subject, and, in Pennsylvania, on failure of the prior funds, also operated with the debts. The testator says he shall pay the legacies, and the law says he shall pay the debts. It is, in this respect, like a devise of mortgaged lands, charged by the testator with the payment of a sum certain, partly applicable to the discharge of legacies given to other children of the testator."

McCampbell*, 5 Litt. (Ky.) 92.

A testator provided that certain of his real and personal estate should be sold for the payment of his debts, and made a bequest of seven hundred dollars to one of his seven children, "which should be his entire portion." To another son, who was also executor, he devised the homestead, to be cultivated by him so long as the testator's wife should remain a widow, one-quarter of the proceeds thus arising to be paid to the widow and the balance to be divided among the six heirs. At the death or marriage of the widow the executor was given the privilege of taking the homestead at so much per acre, or of selling it at auction and dividing the proceeds equally among the six heirs. At the death of the widow he sold the homestead at auction. The proceeds derived from the sale of land and personalty proved insufficient to pay the debts and the seven hundred dollar legacy, and it became a question as to whether or not the proceeds of the sale of the homestead should be resorted to for this purpose. It was held that inasmuch as the seven hundred dollar legacy was a general legacy, and the devise to the six heirs was a demonstrative legacy, the former, and not the latter, should abate. Myers v. Myers, 88 Va. 131. In this case Hinton, J., said: "Such being the relative characters of these two different legacies, and the rule being that a demonstrative legacy is preferred to a general legacy, in the case at bar, inasmuch as the assets of the testator are insufficient to pay his debts and his legacies too, the general legacy of seven hundred dollars to the appellant has to abate to pay the debts before the demonstrative to the general estate, by reason of the total or partial failure of the fund, they are to be regarded as general legacies, in which event they contribute pro rata with other general legacies.¹

2. Specific Bequest of all the Testator's Personal Property.—Although, in general, specific legacies are not compelled to abate in favor of general legacies, there are exceptions to the rule. When, for example, all of the testator's personal property is specifically bequeathed, and at the same time a general legacy is directed to be paid "out of his personal estate," the specific legatees will have to abate proportionally in favor of the general legacies; the usual presumption of preference in favor of specific legatees being, in instances of this sort, repelled.²

3. Fund given in Fractional Parts.—So also if stock or the proceeds of an estate directed to be sold be specifically given in fractional parts, and the person to whom the last fractional part is given be appointed to take it as the residue or remainder of the specific fund, whatever may be its amount, then, on insufficiency of assets, he, as residuary legatee, will only be entitled to the surplus of the fund after full satisfaction of the other aliquot parts specifically bequeathed.³

legacy to the remaining six children can be touched."

Rule of Intention.—The rule that demonstrative legacies, or those payable out of a specific fund, are preferred in case of deficiency, is a rule of intention merely. Legacies charged on land specifically may abate equally with general legacies, if it is apparent from the will that the testator so intended. Rambo v. Rumer, 4 Del. Ch. 9.

For a case where, upon the construction of a will, certain legacies of bank stock, bills obligatory, and chattels were deemed equally specific and abatable pro rata, see Sparks v. Weedon, 21 Md. 156.

Certain legacies of specific amounts "in government bonds" were held to be neither specific nor demonstrative, but general, and subject to abatement pro rata with other general legacies. Matter of Newman's Estate, 4 Dem. (N. Y.) 65.

Where a will gave to one legatee a sum of money absolutely, it was held that this legacy did not abate with the general legacies. Matter of Morris's Estate, 6 Dem. (N. Y.) 304.

1. Mullins v. Smith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 210; Florence v. Sands, 4 Redf. (N. Y.) 210; Gelbach v. Shively, 67 Md. 501.

Demonstrative legacies, so far as the fund to which they are referred will suffice for payment, are preferred to general legacies, because it is to be inferred that by referring to specific parts of the estate for their payment the testator intended them to be preferred to other legacies which he had not so secured. Williams on Executors (7th Eng. ed.) 1371. Hence the lien which they have on the designated fund places them upon the same plane as specific legacies and devises; but when the legacy becomes general by the failure of the fund, the reason for the preference has ceased to exist. Mullins v. Smith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 210.

A specific legacy is not liable to abatement for the payment of debts; but a demonstrative legacy is liable to abate when it becomes a general legacy by reason of the insufficiency or extinction of the fund out of which it is payable. Mullins v. Smith, 1 Dr. & Sm. 210.

In Florence v. Sands, 4 Redf. (N. Y.) 210, where a demonstrative legacy was given to F., and the fund upon which it was chargeable proved insufficient to pay it in full, it was held that the demonstrative legatee was, as to the unpaid balance of his legacy, a general legatee, and that his legacy was subject to abatement with the other general legacies.

Thus where a testator, possessed of personal estate at W and X, after devising all his personal estate at W to one, and all his personal estate at X to another, devises a legacy of three hundred pounds "out of his personal estate," and dies having no other personal estate than in the two places before mentioned, the three hundred pound legacy must come out of the personal estate in W and X. But although the last aliquot share of the fund be given by the word remainder or residue, yet if, from the context of the will, it appears to have been the testator's intention that all the specific legatees should have certain defined parts or proportions of the subject, by whatever words they were bequeathed, then the last-named legatee, although in terms a residuary legatee, will be entitled to call upon the other legatees of parts of the fund to abate equally with him upon their respective shares. Roper on Legacies (2d Am. ed.) *357; Sleech v. Thorington, 2 Ves. 561; Page v. Leapingwell, 18 Ves. 463;

In England, and in those states of the Union which hold that a residuary devise is specific, such devise, notwithstanding the existence of statutes providing that after-acquired realty shall pass by the will,¹ abates with other specific devises.²

But in states in which the effect of such legislation has been to abolish all distinctions between real and personal property in the administration of decedent's estates, it would seem that such devise would be liable immediately after residuary personality, in exoneration of both general and specific legacies and specific devises.³

V. LAPSED INTERESTS.—Real estate, specifically devised, which descends to the heirs by reason of lapse, is liable with other lands descended in exoneration of specific devises which take effect;⁴ but in states in which a lapsed devise, instead of descending to the heir, falls into the residuary⁵ devise, and a residuary

It should also be observed that the residue of a particular fund severed and distinguished from the bulk of the estate, whether specific or residuary in respect to bequests of other parts of that fund, will always, as regards the general estate, be specific, and cannot be applied until the general estate is exhausted. Earlier decisions held that by virtue of the Wills Act a residuary devise had ceased to be specific, and was to be applied in exoneration of general and specific legacies and specific devises. *Dady v. In Shreve v. Shreve, 10 N. J. Eq. 385, the effect of the corresponding statute in that state was left undecided.

Effect of General Charge of Legacies.—Since a general charge of legacies did not, even before the passage of the Wills Act, affect land specifically devised, such charge falls necessarily, without regard to the construction placed upon such act, upon the residuary realty. Spong v. Spong, 3 Bligh, N. S. 8. See Mirehouse v. Scaife, 2 Myl. & C. 704; Young v. Hassard, 1 J. & L. 471.

Contribution in Favor of General Legatees.—In Hensman v. Fryer, L. R. 3 Ch. 420, Lord Chelmsford held that although a residuary devise is specific, notwithstanding the passage of the Wills Act (1 Vict., c. 26), and hence a general legatee had no right to marshal the assets as against a residuary devisee, yet the latter was bound to contribute ratably with the general legatees to pay such debts as the general personal estate was insufficient to satisfy. This decision is evidently based upon the idea that the language of Knight Bruce, V.C., in Tombs v. Roch, 2 Colly. 502, referred to the rights of general legatees, whereas that case merely decided that specific legatees and devisees must contribute ratably to specialty debts, on deficiency of the general personal estate. Such a right on the part of general legatees is manifestly inconsistent with the doctrine that a residuary devise is specific. Hensman v. Fryer, while never expressly overruled by the House of Lords, has not been considered binding by the lower branches of the Court of Chancery, on the ground that it was "clearly erroneous." See Collins v. Lewis, L. R. 8 Eq. 708; Dugdale v. Dugdale, L. R. 14 Eq. 235; Tomkins v. Colthurst, 1 Ch. Div. 626; Farquharson v. Floyer, 3 Ch. Div. 109.

3. See judgment of Kindersley, V.C., in Hensman v. Fryer, L. R. 2 Eq. 627, holding that a general legatee had the right to marshal the assets against a residuary devisee.

Under California Code Civ. Pro., §§ 1359, 1360, "property which is devised or bequeathed to a residuary legatee" is to be applied to the payment of debts before "property specifically devised or bequeathed."

4. Williams v. Chitty, 3 Ves. Jr. 548; Dady v. Hartridge, 1 Dr. & Sm. 241.

"The order in which descended estates are liable is not generally varied in favor of the heir by their being included with the devised estates in the charge of debts, nor by the circumstance that they come to the heir by lapse, and not as simply undisposed of, nor by both of these circumstances together." 2 Jarman on Wills (5th Am. ed.) *624, citing Williams v. Chitty, 3 Ves. Jr. 545; Dady v. Hartridge, 1 Dr. & Sm. 241.

5. In Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 624, it is said that real estate devised, not charged with debts, but descending to the heir by reason of lapse, is applicable in the same order as specific and residuary devises, citing Blann v. Bell, 47 L. J. Ch. 120, 7 Ch. Div. 382; Luckcraft v. Pridham, 48 L. J. Ch. 636. This is true in England if there is a residuary devise, since the only instance in which a lapsed devise is, nevertheless, considered specific, it would seem that the land comprised in the lapsed devise is to be regarded as specifically devised to the residuary devisee, and only liable to contribute pari passu with other specific devises.¹ A lapsed share of a general or residuary devise to several as tenants in common, as between the heir at law and residuary devisees, only contributes ratably with the shares well devised.² In regard to personalty, a lapsed share of residue,³ or a lapsed specific legacy falling with the residue, only contributes its ratable proportion with the other residue.⁴ Where there is no residuary bequest, and all the legacies are subject to a charge of debts, a lapsed pecuniary legacy only contributes ratably with those which take effect;⁵ where there is no charge of debts, it would seem to be the better opinion that the lapsed legacy is to be applied in exoneration of the others.⁶

devise can descend to the heir is in the case of a lapsed share of a general or residuary devise to several as tenants in common. But if there is no residuary devise, it would seem that a lapsed specific devise descending to the heir would be applied before other devises, as under the old law. See Williams v. Chitty, 3 Ves. Jr. 548.

In both Blann v. Bell, 7 Ch. Div. 382, and Luckcraft v. Pridham, 6 Ch. Div. 205, the devise was a share of a blended residue.

1. Such at least was the opinion of Kindersley, V.C., upon the effect of the corresponding English statute. Dady v. Hartridge, 1 Dr. & Sm. 241.

In states in which a residuary devise is held not to be specific, or in which all distinction between real and personal property has been abolished, it would seem that a specific devise falling into the residue would contribute with the other residuary realty.

2. Peacock v. Peacock, 34 L. J. Ch. 316; Ryves v. Ryves, L. R. 11 Eq. 541; Fisher v. Fisher, 2 Keen 610; Wood v. Ordish, 3 Sm. & G. 125. See Blann v. Bell, 47 L. J. Ch. 120, 7 Ch. Div. 382; Luckcraft v. Pridham, 48 L. J. Ch. 636. Compare Maddison v. Pye, 32 Beav. 658; Bagot v. Legge, 2 Dr. & Sm. 259; Jackson v. Pease, L. R. 19 Eq. 96.

Costs of Administration Suit.—But in Scott v. Cumberland, L. R. 18 Eq. 586 (per Malins, V.C.), it was held that the costs of an administration suit were to be charged upon a lapsed share of residuary realty which had descended to the heir in execution of the shares well devised. Mr. Theobald thinks this case not now of authority. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 624. See, however, Astley v. Micklethwait, 15 Ch. Div. 66; Row v. Row, L. R. 7 Eq. 414; Trethery v. Helyar, 4 Ch. Div. 53; Fenton v. Wills, 7 Ch. Div. 33; Blann v. Bell, 7 Ch. Div. 382.

3. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 619; Trethery v. Helyar, 4 Ch. Div. 53; Fenton v. Wills, 7 Ch. Div. 33; Blann v. Bell, 7 Ch. Div. 382.

It is well settled that if there is a general charge of debts a lapsed share of residue only contributes ratably with a share well disposed of. Eyre v. Marsden, 4 Myl. & C. 231; Burt v. Sturt, 10 Hare 415; Oddie v. Brown, 4 De G. & J. 179. See Elborne v. Goode, 14 Sim. 165; Ralph v. Carrick, 5 Ch. Div. 984.

It was at one time supposed that Malins, V.C., had decided in Gowan v. Broughton,

L. R. 19 Eq. 77, that a lapsed share, in the absence of a general charge of debts, was to be applied in exoneration of a share well disposed of; whereas what he intended to decide was that where the residuary personalty is given to a person who dies in the life of the testator, such personalty is no less the primary fund than it would have been if the legatee had survived. Jones v. Caless, 10 Ch. Div. 40.

A bequest of "all testator's personal estate, after payment of debts, funeral and testamentary expenses," is liable to the costs of administration in exoneration of a lapsed devise of realty. Jones v. Caless, 10 Ch. Div. 40.

Bequests to Charities.—Under the principle in the text, if a mixed residue of pure and impure personalty is given to a charity, so that the gift fails as regards the impure personalty, the latter will not be the primary fund as against the other portion, the gift of which takes effect, but debts will be payable ratably out of both. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 619, citing Atty.-Gen. v. Winchelsea, 3 Bro. C. C. 373; Atty.-Gen. v. Hurst, 2 Cox 365; Blann v. Bell, 7 Ch. Div. 382. See also Stuart, V.C., in Scott v. Forristall, 10 W. R. 37.

A Testator Made a Specific Bequest of Jewels, and directed that they be sold, and out of the proceeds of the sale two legacies of fixed amounts be paid. He then made a residuary bequest, but no other gift of any surplus sale-money. The proceeds of the sale failed to be sufficient to pay both of the legacies. But one of the legacies lapsed. It was held that the other legacy was not liable to abate in favor of the residuary legatee, as it would have been obliged to do in favor of his fellow-legatee had that legacy not lapsed. In re Tunno, 45 Ch. Div. 66.

4. Scott v. Forristall, 10 W. R. 37; Morley v. Tunstall, L. R. 7 Eq. 416, note (1).

5. Howse v. Chapman, 4 Ves. Jr. 551.

6. Theobald on Wills (2d ed.) 620; Harris's Trust, 2 Sim., N. S. 106.

This view seems to be sustained by the principle of the decisions in Gowan v. Broughton, L. R. 19 Eq. 77, and Scott v. Cumberland, L. R. 18 Eq. 578, without being justly subject to Sir George Jessel's criticisms in Trethery v. Helyar, 4 Ch. Div. 53, which referred to the application of the principle to a lapsed share of residue.

VI. STATUTORY PROVISIONS.—In many of the states the question of contribution between legatees and devisees, and also questions of abatement and priority, are regulated by statute.¹

A testatrix devised her real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to sell, and from the proceeds to pay debts, legacies, and annuities, to be created by subsequent writing or codicil, the surplus to be applied as she should appoint. By subsequent memoranda, proved with the will, she created certain charitable bequests which turned out to be void; upon which Lord Eldon held that the proportion of the fund produced by the real estate which would have been applied to payment of the charitable bequests, had they been valid, did not go to the heir, but must be raised to supply a deficiency of assets for the other legacies. Currie v. Pye, 17 Ves. Jr. 462. He said: "If a man devises his real estate in trust to pay several persons £1000 each, and any of those persons die in his life, in case of a deficiency the others must abate; but if the devise is in trust to pay his debts and legacies, and he gives several legacies, and one of the legatees dies, the fund is a trust for the benefit of all the other legatees, if necessary."

But in Harker v. Reilly, 4 Del. Ch. 95, it was held that a legacy charged on land, which reverted to the heir by reason of lapse, must abate with other general legacies.

A testator devised his freehold estates to seven children, and empowered his executor, notwithstanding the preceding devises, to sell so much of the freehold estates as was necessary to pay debts, and directed that the money so raised should be applied in payment of such debts, and that the surplus money should go according to the preceding devise of the freehold estates. The testator then gave his leaseholds to his seven children and his personal estate to his daughter E., free from debts, and charged his freehold as the primary fund and the leaseholds as the secondary fund for the payment of his debts. One share of the leasehold and personal property lapsed by the death of one of the children. It was held that the testator had appropriated, first, his freeholds, and, second, his leaseholds, as a special fund for the payment of debts; that the interest which the deceased child would have taken if he had lived was a share of so much only as remained after deducting debts; that therefore his share of so much only lapsed. In other words, the lapsed share was liable pari passu with shares well devised. Fisher v. Fisher, 2 Keen 610.

In Wood v. Ordish, 3 S. & G. 125, the testator devised, in 1832, all his real and personal estate, subject to payment of debts, to one for life, with remainder to three persons as tenants in common, and afterwards purchased other lands, which, of course, were unaffected by the will. One of these shares in remainder lapsed; and it was held that the simply descended lands must first be exhausted, and that the lapsed share of the devised estate was then applicable for payment of debts pari passu with the other shares.

The two cases above were treated by Sir W. P. Wood, in Peacock v. Peacock, 34 L. J. Ch. 316, as laying down the principle that, as between the heir at law, the next of kin, and the residuary devisees and legatees, a lapsed share of real and personal estate ought to be applied in the same order as if the legatee had survived.

1. See the various local statutes.

As to the construction of the California statute and the condition of the law in that state, see Neistrath's Estate, 66 Cal. 330. It was held in this case that the statute of that state did not authorize the payment of general legacies from property specifically devised or bequeathed. See also Apple's Estate, 66 Cal. 432. See, as bearing upon the Rhode Island and Massachusetts statutes, In re Spencer, 16 R. I. 25.

It has been held in Michigan that the statutory provision that an heir, legatee, devisee, or distributee, who pays more than his share of a debt, shall have contribution from others liable in the same order, is declaratory of the common law, Eberstein v. Camp, 37 Mich. 176; and that such contribution, if enforced in the probate court, must be by execution. Atwood v. Frost, 59 Mich. 409.

It has been held, in construing the Colorado statute providing that where the widow renounces the will, and "legacies and bequests" are thus increased or diminished, the court, in settling the estate, shall place the legatees on the same relative footing which they had under the will; that the words "legacies and bequests" embrace devises. Logan v. Logan, 11 Colo. 44.

I. DEFINITION.—The abatement of a nuisance is the taking away or removal of the same.¹

II. ABATEMENT BY PROCESS OF LAW—1. Civil Proceedings—a. ACTION AT LAW.—The ancient common-law remedies for the abatement of nuisances were quod permittat prosternere and assize of nuisance.² The former of these was a writ of right, commanding the defendant to abate the nuisance complained of, or to show cause why he would not.³ An assize of nuisance was a writ issued at the instance of the tenant of the freehold, complaining of some act done ad nocumentum liberi tenementi sui, and commanding the sheriff to

1. Definition.—The Century Dict.

In 3 Cooley's Black. Com. (3d ed.) 5, it is said that a nuisance may be abated, that is, taken away or removed, by the party aggrieved thereby, provided that he commits no riot in doing it.

In Maloney v. Traverse, 87 Iowa 309, the court says: "The definition of 'abate' is to put an end to, as to abate a nuisance."

2. Ancient Common-law Remedies.—Kendrick v. Bartland, 2 Mod. 253; Baten's Case, 9 Coke 54.

summon a jury to view the premises; and, if they found for the plaintiff, he was entitled to a judgment abating the nuisance, and for damages.¹ Both of these remedies are now obsolete, and have been superseded by an action on the case.²

Power of Court to Order Abatement.—At common law, the court, after verdict in an action on the case, is without power to order an abatement;³ but in most of the states this authority has been conferred by statute.⁴

b. SUIT IN EQUITY—(1) When Equity will Interfere.—The aid of a court of equity may be invoked for the abatement of nuisances, both public⁵ and

2. Wood Law of Nuisances (2d ed.), § 843;

3 Cooley's Black. Com. (3d ed.) 221; Kintz v. McNeal, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 436.

Both these remedies are abolished by Stat. 3 & 4 Wm. IV., c. 27.

A Writ of Nuisance is an ancient proceeding and should not be encouraged, and the court will not in such a proceeding relax the strictness of the ancient practice. Kintz v. McNeal, 1 Den. (N. Y.) 436.

But in Barnet v. Ihrie, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 174, it was held that assize of nuisance was an existing remedy in Pennsylvania, not altered in essential points, though it ought to be adapted to modern practice. For cases in which a writ of nuisance has been recognized in this country see: Tate v. Parrish, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 325; Brown v. Woodworth, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 550; Livezey v. Gorgas, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 251; Maris v. Parsy, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 413. But see Ellsworth v. Putnam, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 565, and Hutchins v. Smith, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 252, where it was held that the writ of nuisance had been abolished by statute in New York.

In an action on the case, as no abatement of the nuisance is claimed, nor can be asked for, the fact that the plaintiff has himself removed the nuisance does not defeat the remedy. Gleason v. Gary, 4 Conn. 418; Call v. Buttrick, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 345.

In Kendrick v. Bartland, 2 Mod. 253, the court said: "The end of a quod permittat or assize was to abate the nuisance, but the end of an action on the case was to recover damages."

A declaration alleging that the plaintiff was lawfully possessed of a certain close, and that the defendant, "well knowing the premises, wrongfully and injuriously kept and continued a building projecting, and overhanging the plaintiff's said close, and before then wrongfully erected and built, projecting as aforesaid for a long space of time," was a declaration in tort for a nuisance; and if the plaintiff had prevailed therein, no exception would lie to an order of the court entering judgment that the nuisance be abated. Codman v. Evans, 7 Allen (Mass.) 431.

While a ditch, by which the waters of a stream have been appropriated, is out of repair and not in condition to carry off water, an action will not lie to abate, as a nuisance, a reservoir built across the bed of the stream above the head of the ditch, by which the water of the stream is collected and detained, and caused to overflow unequally. The reservoir does not become a nuisance until the ditch has been repaired and put in a condition to carry off the water. Bear River, etc., Water, etc., Co. v. Boles, 24 Cal. 359.

In an action, under Laws of Massachusetts (1887), c. 348, for maintaining unnecessarily a fence over six feet high, for the purpose of annoying the plaintiff, a reduction, after suit instituted and before trial, of the fence from sixteen to seven and a half feet, does not remove the power given the court by chapter 180, § 1, to order the nuisance abated. Rice v. Moorehouse, 150 Mass. 482.

Proceedings before Justices of the Peace.—The impeding or stopping a private way is a private nuisance. Such a nuisance may be abated by proceedings before two justices of the peace and a jury. Salter v. Taylor, 55 Ga. 310; Holmes v. Jones, 80 Ga. 659.

Mr. Bishop, in his work on Non-Contract Law, § 429, says: "In the flexible proceedings in equity, an abatement of the nuisance or its equivalent—the injunction is in substance, though not in form, an abatement—may be ordered." But see Ruff v. Phillips, 50 Ga., 132, where it was said that neither an action for damages nor an injunction can abate a nuisance.

Acquittal on Indictment not a Bar.—An acquittal on an indictment for the particular nuisance will not bar the remedy in equity. The fact that the statute gives the remedy by indictment does not deprive the court of its equitable jurisdiction. Minke v. Hopeman, 87 Ill. 450, 29 Am. Rep. 63.

Where a bill charged that the defendant's milldam injured the health of the relators, an injunction was perpetuated, notwithstanding the defendant had been indicted for the same offense, on which there had been a mistrial, and although an indictment was still pending. Atty.-Genl. v. Hunter, 1 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 12.

Statutory Remedy at Law and Remedy in Equity Concurrent.—It has been held in Iowa that the fact that the court is authorized by statute, after verdict, to order the abatement of a nuisance does not take away the remedy by equity. Bushnell v. Robeson, 62 Iowa 540; Gribben v. Hansen, 69 Iowa 255; Miller v. Keokuk, etc., R. Co., 63 Iowa 680.

There has been a similar decision in Tennessee. Lassater v. Garrett, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 368. And it was similarly held in Michigan. Wilmarth v. Woodcock, 58 Mich. 482.

But in Georgia it has been held that parties who wish to abate a nuisance, either public or private, must resort to the remedy provided by statute, unless special facts are alleged showing that the remedy is insufficient or inadequate. Broomhead v. Grant, 83 Ga. 452.

Feed Lots.—Where feed lots were found to be a nuisance, and the trouble arose largely from the wet and miry condition of the soil, and there was no reason to suppose that any mode of use could be adopted which would obviate the trouble, it was held that it was proper to enjoin the use of the lots for that purpose absolutely. Baker v. Bohannon, 69 Iowa 60.

Vibration of Machinery.—The complainants and defendant occupied adjoining buildings, the walls of which touched in places. The force of the defendant's machinery caused the building of the complainants to vibrate to such an extent as to seriously interfere with their business. It was held that the defendant was guilty of a nuisance which it was the duty of the court to abate. Demarest v. Hardham, 34 N. J. Eq. 469.

Noise.—Where a tinsmith erected his shop, a very thin, loose building of boards, some eight feet from the back building and sleeping-rooms of the complainant, and there carried on his work, generally beginning in the morning, before or by daylight, and resuming it in the evening at or about eight tiff and the fact of a nuisance had been first established in a court of law.¹ But at present, where the plaintiff's right is clear and the existence of a nuisance is manifest, a court of equity will interfere to give relief, and it is only when the plaintiff's right, or the question of nuisance, is doubtful, that a previous settlement at law is necessary.²

o'clock, and keeping it up until eleven o'clock at night, having generally other employment through the day; and the noise from the hammering was so great that the complainant and his family could scarcely hear each other converse, and had been obliged to abandon their chambers next the shop, and were every morning deprived of their rest, it was held that equity would interfere to restrain it as a nuisance. Dennis v. Eckhardt, 3 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 390.

Cornice Projecting over Boundary.—A bill in equity will lie against the complainant's neighbor for building and maintaining a cornice which projects over the complainant's boundary lines, to the permanent injury of his property. Wilmarth v. Woodcock, 58 Mich. 482.

Sewerage.—The plaintiff purchased from the state certain lands formerly used for canal purposes, through which ran a ditch or culvert used to carry off the surplus waters from a portion of the Chemung canal. Thereafter the legislature authorized the defendant to use that portion of the canal which was adjacent to the plaintiff's premises, with power to fill and improve the same and adopt it as a public street, and lay a sewer therein. In pursuance of this authority the defendant occupied the said portion of the canal as a street, and constructed a sewer therein connecting with the culvert running under the premises of the plaintiff, which sewer the defendant used, and permitted others to use, for the purpose of draining and conducting off from their premises slops, refuse, and other foul matter, which accumulated under the plaintiff's premises, occasioning a foul, unhealthful, and offensive smell therein, to such an extent as to render the buildings thereon unsuitable for occupancy. It was held that the plaintiff was not obliged to bring an action at law to abate the nuisance, and for damages, but was entitled to an injunction restraining the defendant from discharging, or allowing to be discharged, on his premises, through the said sewer, any noxious or offensive matter, or any matter whatever other than surface-water, if any, from the said canal. Beach v. Elmira, 22 Hun (N. Y.) 158.

Poisonous Gas.—The defendant was the owner of a brick-yard, upon which he burned brick by the use of mineral coal as a fuel; in this process, sulphurous acid gas, which is poisonous to vegetation, was generated in quantities. When the south wind blew while the kilns were burning, this gas was carried upon the plaintiffs' improved land, which they had been engaged for several years in beautifying, and by its repeated attacks many of the ornamental trees were destroyed. It was held that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendant from using mineral coal in his process of burning brick. Campbell v. Seaman, 2 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 231.

Smoke, Steam, Cinders, etc.—The plaintiff, the lessee for a term of three years of a residence, brought an action to restrain the defendant from so conducting the business of manufacturing blinds, sashes, and boxes, in the adjoining premises, as to allow the smoke, steam, cinders, and partly burned shavings, issuing therefrom, to come upon and into the plaintiff's premises, to her damage and annoyance. It appeared that the plaintiff's house was at times enveloped in smoke, and that dust and soot, proceeding from the defendant's works, were deposited on the windows in the rooms of the plaintiff's house, and upon clothing when hung in the yard to dry. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to the injunction demanded in the complaint. Beir v. Cooke, 37 Hun (N. Y.) 38.

Dam.—Where a nuisance, by overflowing the plaintiff's mining claim by means of a dam erected by the defendants, was found, the decree should have directed such a reduction of the dam as would have prevented any overflow, from that cause, of the ground of the plaintiff; or, if necessary, an entire removal. Ramsay v. Chandler, 3 Cal. 90.

Obstructing Natural Channel.—If the surface of the ground is such as to collect water at different seasons of the year, to an extent which requires an outlet to some given reservoir, and if such is always the case in times of heavy rain and melting of snow; and if, so far as the memory of man runs, that flow of water created a natural channel through the lands of different persons, where such accumulated surplus water has always been accustomed to run, a court of equity will protect such channel from obstruction, to the injury of any one through whose land it runs. Earl v. De Hart, 12 N. J. Eq. 280, 72 Am. Dec. 395.

Ringling Bell.—The ringing, at an early hour in the morning, for the purpose of awaking the keepers of boarding-houses where operatives in a mill live, or for the purpose of awaking the operatives themselves, of a bell weighing two thousand pounds and set in an open tower forty feet from the ground, and so situated with respect to the residences of persons, owned and occupied by them before the erection of the bell, that they receive the full force of the sound, such persons being thereby robbed of sleep during the hours usually devoted to repose, and personally disturbed and annoyed, and the quiet and comfort of their homes impaired, is a private nuisance to them, which may be restrained by injunction. Davis v. Sawyer, 133 Mass. 289.

The Modern Doctrine of Courts of Equity in regard to the necessity of the person establishing his right at law before seeking the aid of equity to protect him by injunction in the enjoyment of it is much more liberal than the ancient, and the rule requiring the right to be first established at law prevails only in cases where the right itself is in dispute, or is doubtful. White v. Forbes, Walk. (Mich.) 112. Some courts more than others have hesitated or refused to grant the injunction until the existence of a nuisance has been established at law. Daniels v. Keokuk Water Works, 61 Iowa 553.

Must be Clear Case of Nuisance.—On the petition of a land-owner complaining that certain steam power and machinery operated by another on adjoining land is a nuisance, an injunction should not be granted unless a clear case of nuisance and irreparable injury be made out. When a party who complains that a business lawful per se is a nuisance and affects his property injuriously by reason of the manner in which it is carried on, has an adequate remedy in an action for damages, he must establish his right to relief at law before equity will interfere by injunction. Goodall v. Crofton, 33 Ohio St. 271, 31 Am. Rep. 535.

When a complainant in equity seeks to enjoin the continuance of a milldam on the ground that his dwelling-house has been thereby rendered unhealthful, the evidence must establish clearly the injury complained of, in order that the court may justly interfere to restrain the defendant from the lawful use of his property in conducting a legitimate business. The court in such case should be permitted to interfere where it is plainly shown that the injury is real and not purely imaginary. But where the evidence leaves the matter doubtful, the court should decline to interpose. Thomas v. Calhoun, 58 Miss. 81.

Where there is a gradual fall of water, extending over lands owned by different persons, merely sufficient to allow of one milldam, and where the different owners, recently and about the same time, proceeded to erect separate dams upon their own land, and the lower dam renders the upper one useless, the court, acting as a court of equity, will not interfere to abate the lower dam before the rights of the parties are determined at law. Porter v. Witham, 17 Me. 292.

Where a bill in equity was brought praying that the defendants be compelled to remove and abate a dam, erected by them for the purpose of running a mill and other machinery, upon the ground that it was a nuisance producing sickness, and rendering permanently unhealthful the neighborhood near by, it was held that, from the evidence in the case, it was not clear that the destruction of the dam would remove the nuisance, and hence equity would not interfere. Lassater v. Garrett, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 368.

A milldam which, if a nuisance at all, has become so by the gradual growth of the city around it, will not be abated in equity as a nuisance where the fact that it is a nuisance has not been established at law. New Castle v. Raney, 130 Pa. St. 546.

The operation of a manufactory by day and night, in a city, which necessarily causes some vibration and noise in neighboring private residences, will not be restrained by injunction where the evidence is not such as to satisfy a chancellor that the noise and vibration constitute a substantial and unjustifiable nuisance to the complainant. McCaffrey's Appeal, 105 Pa. St. 253.

A machine-shop in a city, although its operation may render the adjacent places less valuable and less desirable as residences for families but not intrinsically less valuable as property, is not for that reason a nuisance, and will not be restrained by injunction. League v. Journeay, 25 Tex. 172. And see Hudson v. Thorne, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 261.

Locality of Nuisance.—The locality is proper to be considered in determining the question of nuisance. Thus, where a street in a city has ceased to be used or occupied, and is erty has been affected, and that the plaintiff has suffered an injury which will entitle him to damages in a court of law.¹ But equity will not grant relief changed into a place of business, persons who may for any reason desire to continue a residence therein will not be allowed to restrain a blacksmith from pursuing his trade in such street merely because they are subjected to annoyance or even loss thereby. It would be better that they should go elsewhere than that the public should be inconvenienced by arresting a necessary and useful business, and the trade of an artisan be broken up. Gilbert v. Shomeran, 23 Mich. 448. See also Huckenstine's Appeal, 70 Pa. St. 102, 10 Am. Rep. 669.

But the fact that a locality has been partially given up to noxious trade will not deprive a party of his remedy in equity. McKeon v. Lee, 4 Robt. (N. Y.) 449; Mulligan v. Elias, 12 Abb. Pr. N. S. (Brooklyn City Ct.) 259. Also where a noxious trade is carried on in a neighborhood for the most part given up to residences, the locality should be considered. For example, where the proofs showed that the business of forging was carried on by the defendant on a large scale, in an inexpensive wooden building situated in close proximity to a neighborhood substantially used and adapted to dwellings and built up with valuable residences; and that the complainants, who were occupants of such residences, were seriously injured, both in person and property, by means of the smoke and soot from the large quantity of bituminous coal used, settling in clouds upon their premises and sifting and blowing into their dwellings, and by means of the noise and jarring of the steam hammers used, disturbing the peace and annoying all those who were well, and injuring the sick, and in case of the nearest dwellings seriously damaging their foundations and walls, a clear case for relief by injunction against a nuisance was made out. Robinson v. Baugh, 31 Mich. 290.

The fact that when the defendant erected his works no dwellings were near, but that the plaintiff has come to his works, will not operate to protect him, for he should have purchased enough of the surrounding property, when he built his works, to prevent the possibility of a nuisance. Brady v. Weeks, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 157.

Denial of Right by Answer.—Where a complainant seeks protection in the enjoyment of a natural watercourse upon his land, the right can ordinarily be regarded as clear; and the mere fact that the defendant denies the right by answer, or sets up title in himself by adverse user, will not entitle him to an issue before the granting of the injunction. Carlisle v. Cooper, 21 N. J. Eq. 576. See also Holsman v. Boiling Springs Bleaching Co., 14 N. J. Eq. 335; Shields v. Arndt, 4 N. J. Eq. 235.

Generally, an Injunction will not be Granted until the complainant's legal right has been established at law; yet in a case where his right appears to be clear, though it has not been established at law and the defendant denies it, and the complainant has for a long time been in the enjoyment of the right, and the acts of the defendant in violation of it are recent, equity may properly take jurisdiction of the question of legal right and decide that as well as the other question involved in the litigation. Stanford v. Lyon, 37 N. J. Eq. 94.

Issue Made to a Jury.—An issue may be made to a jury by either party when the right is doubtful, or the court may direct it of its own motion. Wood Law of Nuisances (2d ed.), § 785; Irwin v. Dixon, 9 How. (U. S.) 10; Ingraham v. Dunnell, 5 Met. (Mass.) 118; Robinson v. Baugh, 31 Mich. 290.

In Shields v. Arndt, 4 N. J. Eq. 235, it was held that the court will exercise its discretion whether or not to order a trial at law before ordering an injunction, always inclining, if there be reasonable doubt, to put the case to the jury.

Where the complainant's right to the relief sought by the bill is admitted by the answer, and also established in a suit at law, and the only question of controversy in fact is whether the defendant has effected an abatement of the admitted nuisance by lowering his dam to the required level, the court of equity is an appropriate tribunal to decide the question. There is nothing in the subject-matter of such investigation that would entitle the defendant to an issue as of course. Carlisle v. Cooper, 21 N. J. Eq. 576. In delivering the opinion of the court in this case, Dupie, J., said that the power of courts of equity to order the trial of an issue of fact which the court is itself competent to try ought to be sparingly exercised, and the practice of sending ordinary matter to the decision of a jury ought not to be established. Where the truth of the facts can be satisfactorily ascertained by the court without the aid of a jury, it is its duty to decide as to the facts, and not subject the parties to the expense and delay of a trial at law. But in cases where the evidence is so contradictory as to leave the decision of a question of fact in serious doubt, and superior advantages of testing the credit of witnesses by viva voce examination in open court, and of applying the facts and circumstances proved in the cause to the decision of disputed points, may be obtained by means of trial before a jury, it is proper that an issue should be awarded.

Where the Nature of the Injury is such that it never could be determined whether the injunction had been violated or not, an injunction will not be granted even after a verdict at law. Wason v. Sanborn, 45 N. H. 169.

1. Must be Substantial Injury.—Richeson v. Richeson, 8 Ill. App. 205; Sparhawk v. Union Pass. R. Co., 54 Pa. St. 401. See also Webb v. Portland Mfg. Co., 3 Sumn. (U. S.) 189; Hargro v. Hodgdon, 89 Cal. 623; Hacke's Appeal, 101 Pa. St. 245.

A Mere Temporary Obstruction to the flow of water, such as does not cause actual injury to the prior appropriator below, will not be in every case where an action at law might be sustained.¹

Injunction—When Granted.—It is a matter of common learning that an injunction is not, like damages, a remedy ex debito justitiæ. Whether it shall be granted or not, in a given case, is in the judicial discretion of the court, now guided by principles which have become well settled.² To warrant the interposition of a court of chancery, it must be shown that no adequate remedy can be had in a court of law.³ Thus, where the grievance is permanent, continuous, or actionable; but if a sensible or positive injury be caused, such as would diminish the value of the water right, an action will lie, not only to recover damages, but to enjoin the future commission of the wrong. Phoenix Water Co. v. Fletcher, 23 Cal. 481.

A Mere Diminution of the Value of the property of the party complaining, by the nuisance, without irreparable mischief, will not furnish any foundation for equitable relief. Zabriskie v. Jersey City, etc., R. Co., 13 N. J. Eq. 314.

An owner of vacant land which is intended for house lots is not entitled to an injunction to restrain the exercise of an offensive trade in the vicinity thereof, whereby its value is diminished. Such owner has an adequate remedy at law. Dana v. Valentine, 5 Met. (Mass.) 8.

Lands Rendered Worthless.—Where the complainant's lands are rendered comparatively worthless by backwater from a dam, and a nuisance is thereby created dangerous to health, and the enjoyment of the premises is thereby impaired, an action of law furnishes no adequate redress, and the complainant is entitled to the protection of a court of equity by the abatement of the nuisance. Carlisle v. Cooper, 21 N. J. Eq. 576. In giving the opinion of the court in this case, Depue, J., said that the jurisdiction of courts of equity over the subject-matter of nuisances is not an original jurisdiction. It does not arise from the fact that a nuisance exists, but results from the circumstance that the equitable power of the court is necessary to protect the party from an injury for which no adequate redress can be obtained by an action at law, or its interference is necessary to suppress interminable litigation for the recovery of damages for an actionable wrong.

The Location of a Railroad through a public street, in a line not warranted by law, will not be enjoined at the instance of the owner of an unimproved building lot suffering no detriment. Zabriskie v. Jersey City, etc., R. Co., 13 N. J. Eq. 314.

Equity will not Enjoin the Continuance of a milldam as a private nuisance, in damaging by flowage the land of the party complaining, where it appears that the injury is not irreparable, or incapable of being removed by the building of levees to confine the water, but is trifling, and can be adequately compensated by an action at law, and that the business for which the dam is erect-often recurring, equity will interfere to prevent irreparable injury, interminable litigation, and a multiplicity of suits.¹ While a substantial right must be violated, and the remedy at law must be inadequate, to entitle the plaintiff to equitable relief, the damage sustained need not be great. Such relief may be granted, though only nominal damages are given in a court of law.² In determining upon the propriety of injunctive relief against nuisances, the court will sometimes be influenced against ordering an abatement, by the fact that the damage to the plaintiff is small in comparison with the injury which the issuance of an injunction would work to the defendant and the public at large.³

ed is lawful and carried on wholly on the land of the party against whom the complaint is made. Thomas v. Calhoun, 58 Miss. 80.

Digging Deep Holes and planting therein large stone pillars or abutments, digging and carrying away large banks of valuable clay, and constructing an aqueduct by ditches and embankments through the complainant's land, are acts which, if done without authority of law, would present a case of irreparable damage authorizing the interposition of a court of equity by injunction. Reddall v. Bryan, 14 Md. 444, 74 Am. Dec. 550.

Where it appeared that the water from the defendant's milldam was thrown upon a small part of several pieces of swamp land of the plaintiff, which had never been productive or brought into use, an injunction was refused, upon the ground that the injury was not irreparable in its nature, although the plaintiff's title had been established at law. Bassett v. Salisbury Mfg. Co., 47 N. H. 426.

An Injunction is the Only Effectual Remedy, when the injury is caused by so many who contributed to the nuisance that it would be difficult to apportion the damage, or say how far any one may have contributed to the result, and so damages would likely be but nominal, and repeated actions, without any substantial benefit, might be the result. *Woodyear v. Instances of Irreparable Injury.—Where the plaintiff owns valuable machinery which gives employment to a large number of hands, and which is worked by the water power of a certain stream, the court of equity will restrain by injunction a repeated diversion of the water by the upper proprietors, by means of a ditch on their own lands; and this on the principle of preventing irreparable injury and multiplicity of suits. Wright v. Moore, 38 Ala. 594, 82 Am. Dec. 731. See also Tuolumne Water Co. v. Chapman, 8 Cal. 393.

The unauthorized use of the premises of another, in putting filth, trash, and garbage upon the same in such a manner as to interfere constantly with the reasonable and unimpeded use of such premises by the owner, and to occasion him damage, hurt, and annoyance, is, in addition to being a nuisance, a continuing trespass which may be irreparable in damages; and whether the wrongdoer is insolent or not, these repeated acts may give rise to a multiplicity of suits. To avoid these consequences, a court of equity may interpose by injunction. Lowe v. Holbrook, 71 Ga. 563.

In an action to abate a dam as a nuisance, it is proper to prove damages caused by it after the commencement of the action, as this shows the continuance of a nuisance. Hayden v. Albee, 20 Minn. 159.

If a Substantial Right has been invaded, especially if the wrong be in the nature of a continuing trespass, of such character that its continuance will create a right against the plaintiff's estate, or operate to deprive the plaintiff of a substantial right incident to property, the nuisance will be abated, although the damage is merely nominal. Hargro v. Hodgdon, 89 Cal. 623.

Leasehold Interest.—An equitable action may be maintained by one having only a leasehold interest in the premises injuriously affected. DeLaney v. Blizzard, 7 Hun (N. Y.) 7.

Benefit Resulting from Act.—In Dickenson v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 19 Eng. Law & Eq. 287, an injunction was granted to prevent the defendants from injuring the plaintiffs' rights when it appeared that there was no damage, but an actual benefit, ensuing to the plaintiffs from the defendants' act.

The plaintiffs owned certain premises and were riparian proprietors of a certain stream. The defendants, having a long lease of these premises, had diverted the water of the stream from its natural channel, for the

But the court will not stop to balance conveniences if the plaintiff's right is clear, and he has no adequate redress at law.¹

(2) Who may Maintain a Bill.—Any person injured by a nuisance, who could bring an action at law therefor, may maintain a bill for an injunction.² Thus, to abate a private nuisance, suit must be brought by the party injured.³ Although the nuisance is public, the bill may be maintained by an individual who has suffered some private, direct, and material damage beyond that suffered by the public at large.⁴ But where the nuisance is purely public, proceedings in equity use of their machinery. It was held that since the act complained of might ripen into a right, neither the trivial amount of damage already sustained, nor the heavy expenditures to which the defendants would be subjected if enjoined from the further use of the diverted waters and compelled to restore them to their natural and accustomed channel, furnished sufficient reason why an injunction should be denied. Corning v. Troy, etc., Factory, 34 Barb. (N. Y.) 486.

Where a city was dependent upon the defendant's water-works for its supply of water to extinguish fires, and for other public and domestic purposes, and smoke and gases escaping from the defendant's smokestack—a necessary part of the works—were accustomed to be carried by the wind over, upon, and into the grounds and houses of the plaintiffs, thereby causing damage, inconvenience, and annoyance, but no injury to health, destruction of property, or other irreparable injury, it was held that equity could not interfere to abate the works complained of, and that the decree of the court restraining the defendant from using its smokestack without using a proper smoke-consumer to prevent smoke, soot, etc., escaping therefrom, was as favorable a judgment as the plaintiffs were entitled to. Daniels v. Keokuk Water Works, 61 Iowa 550.

Soap Factory.—In Howard v. Lee, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 281, it was held that a soap factory, in a compact part of the city where it had been carried on for a long time, was a nuisance, and that it might be restrained by injunction at the suit of the proprietor of a large hotel situated within two hundred feet of the said factory, where it appeared that the factory was very offensive to the plaintiff's guests, and many left his house in consequence of it.

Loud Noises—Offensive Odors.—An adjacent house-owner who, with his family, is seriously annoyed by loud noises and offensive odors from hucksters selling their produce from wagons on the public space surrounding the city park, including the sidewalks in front of and near his house, the sleep, comfort, and conversation of the family being disturbed thereby, may enjoin the city from using or authorizing the use of the streets in question as a market-place for the sale of goods, although the nuisance may also be a public one. McDonald v. Newark, 42 N. J. Eq. 136.

Erection of Dam.—Where a party by erecting a dam raises a stream of water above its natural level so as materially to injure the mills above on the same stream, the court of equity will decree that the dam be lowered. Hammond v. Fuller, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 197.

Where a Pond which is maintained by the defendant for manufacturing purposes upon lands belonging to the plaintiff, and which adjoins other lands belonging to him, is a common nuisance and is especially injurious to the plaintiff, he may bring an action to have the pond removed, even though, by the terms of the deed by which the lands were conveyed to the defendant by a former owner of the lands of both the plaintiff and defendant, the right to maintain and use the pond is expressly reserved to the defendant. Leonard v. Spencer, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 341.

Noxious Gases from Brewery.—The complaint averred that the defendant maintained a brewery on lands adjoining the plaintiff's residence, and so operated it as to foul the water in certain streams running along and through his premises, and cause the whole neighborhood and a certain highway therein, and the atmosphere over and around the same, to be tainted and polluted with noxious gases and smells which disturbed the comfort and endangered the health of all persons residing in the neighborhood. Special matters of damage to the plaintiff were alleged, and in a separate count it was averred that by the fouling of the air around the plaintiff's residence the comfort of himself and family was annoyed and their health endangered. It was held that this was not an action to abate a private nuisance, but a private action to abate a public nuisance. Meiners v. Frederick Miller Brewing Co., 78 Wis. 364.

New York Rapid Transit Act.—Where the commissioners appointed under the New York Rapid Transit Act (1875) authorized the defendant to build a station, provided that the "stairs and all parts of the stations except the platform, doors, windows, and inside sheathings, and except the tread of the stairs, shall be of iron"—it was held that, in erecting a station of wood, the defendant was guilty of maintaining a public nuisance, which equity would remove at the instance of an aggrieved property-owner. Porth v. Manhattan R. Co. (Super. Ct.), 11 N. Y. Supp. 633.

Obstructions on Highways.—An unauthorized continuous obstruction of a public street is a public nuisance, for the reason that the public are entitled to an unobstructed passage upon the streets and sidewalks of the city; and where the defendants placed skids across the sidewalk in front of the plaintiff's premises, whereby the plaintiff's employees and patrons were prevented from passing and repassing along the sidewalk to the plaintiff's great injury and detriment, it was held that such obstruction was a special injury to the plaintiff, who might have an injunction to restrain it as a nuisance. Callanan v. Gilman, 67 How. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 464.

Where the evidence in an action showed that the upper portion of a building, in which the plaintiff had leased offices previously, had been so far injured by a bridge which the defendants had thrown across a public street in front of such building, and by the obstruction to the approaches to it, caused by pedestrians passing along the walks, that they had been abandoned by the tenants, and he was unable to procure others to occupy them; and that persons who passed along the street at that point, on account of the diminished capacity of the sidewalk, by the erection of a stairway to the bridge, blockaded the front of his store, rendering it inconvenient for goods to be taken to and removed from it, and for his customers to pass in and out, and frequently forcing persons collected upon the sidewalk to go through his store for the purpose of passing and repassing from one street to another—it was held that these facts showed such a clear case of special injury to the plaintiff as would enable him to maintain an equitable action for the abatement of the structure as a public nuisance. Knox v. New York, 55 Barb. (N. Y.) 404.

Where the defendants, having become somewhat famous as museum attractions under the name of the "Seven Sutherland Sisters," used the front window of their store upon a busy and bustling business street in New York City for arranging their extraordinarily long hair in full view of the passers-by, in order to promote the sale of their hair restorative, causing crowds to collect which blocked up the street and seriously interfered with the entrance to and egress from the plaintiff's store in the basement underneath the defendant's premises, it was held that such use of their premises was unreasonable and resulted in a public nuisance, with special damage to the plaintiff, and should be enjoined pendente lite. Elias v. Seven Sutherland Sisters, 18 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 126.

Where the defendants permanently located their floating dock in a basin opposite to the upland in the street, and opposite to the side of the plaintiffs' pier, by which act the plaintiffs were deprived of wharfage and of gains arising from large boats for active shipping lying in the basin, it was held that the plaintiffs' rights were peculiar to them, and their loss by the obstruction of the defendant constituted a special injury to the plaintiffs. Penniman v. New York Balance Co., 13 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 40. See Walker v. Shepardson, 2 Wis. 384, 60 Am. Dec. 423.

A railroad switch laid without municipal authority on part of a public street is a nuisance, and the owner of the property in front of which the same is used may have it abated as inflicting injury peculiar to himself; but he may not champion the rights of others in front of whose property the switch is laid with municipal authority, and who do not complain. Bell v. Edwards, 37 La. Ann. 475.

Where the owner of a lot fronting upon a street in a city erects a stoop and fence in front thereof, so as to reduce the space left for public travel upon the sidewalk from nineteen to eight feet, an owner of a lot fronting on the same street, and distant about one hundred feet from the obstruction so erected, may bring an action to have the same removed as a nuisance. Crooke v. Anderson, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 266. See also Pettis v. Johnson, 56 Ind. 139.

If in front of a lot in a city there is a public street in a condition to be used as such, and an obstruction is put on the street by which its use as a highway is impeded, which prevents the owner of a lot from having free access to the street therefrom, he may maintain an action to abate the nuisance. Hargro v. Hodgdon, 89 Cal. 623. See also Schulte v. Northern Pac. Transp. Co., 50 Cal. 592.

The owner of a slaughter-house, who slaughters a large number of animals daily, and has no other place for slaughtering, is specially injured by an obstruction in the highway which wholly cuts him off from access to the slaughter-house, and he may abate the nuisance by a mandatory injunction. Gardner v. Stroeveer, 89 Cal. 26.

But the owner of a lot in a city is not entitled, as a matter of right, to enjoin a party from obstructing a sidewalk or street in such city, where the owner's lot or land does not abut upon, and is not opposite or contiguous to, the obstruction, since the injury or nuisance complained of is not different in kind from that sustained by the public. Billard v. Erhart, 35 Kan. 611; Hartshorn v. South Reading, 3 Allen (Mass.) 501. See also Hogan v. Central Pac. R. Co., 71 Cal. 83; Blanc v. Klumpke, 29 Cal. 156.

In San Jose Ranch Co. v. Brooks, 74 Cal. 463, it was held that to obstruct a public highway so as to completely prevent travel will not constitute special injury to an individual such as will enable him to maintain a private action to abate the nuisance, even where such highway constitutes the only means by which the individual can reach his property. O'Brien v. Norwich, etc., R. Co., 17 Conn. 371; McCowan v. Whitesides, 31 Ind. 236.

Iowa Code, § 3331, giving the right to "any person injured thereby" to maintain an action to abate a nuisance, does not change the ordinary rules that a private individual will not be allowed to maintain an action to restrain or abate a public nuisance unless he can show some peculiar or special damage or injury to himself. A person who, after the erection of a bridge over a lake, has purchased boats and engaged in the business of running them, has no rights, in respect to the navigation of the lake, differing from those enjoyed by other persons, or sufficient to enable him to maintain an action to abate the bridge as a nuisance on the ground that it obstructs the navigation of the lake. Innis v. Cedar Rapids, etc., R. Co., 2 L. R. A. 282.

Suit by Two or More Parties.—Two or more persons having distinct and separate tracts of land which are injured or rendered less valuable by the overflow of water at certain seasons of the year, from a natural water-course obstructed by dams and ditches, where such overflow is a common injury to the lands of both, may join in a suit as plaintiffs to restrain such nuisance, since such parties have a common interest in the subject-matter thereof. Palmer v. Waddell, 22 Kan. 352. See Brady v. Weeks, 3 Barb. (N. Y.) 157.

Suit against Two or More Parties.—An injunction was prayed by the owner of a flour-mill on a stream, against the owner of a slaughter-house above on the same stream, to restrain the latter from letting flow down the stream into the milldam, and thence into the millrace, blood and other matter from the slaughtered animals, on the ground that such acts created a nuisance by rendering the water offensive and depriving the air of its purity, thereby injuring the health of the mill operatives, diminishing the value of the mill property, and depriving the complainant of its comfortable and reasonable enjoyment. It appeared that the defendant was one of many who contributed to create the alleged nuisance, there being other slaughter-houses, breweries, soap and other factories, and cattle-scales, from which flowed filth and refuse, with the occasional addition of dead animals and other offensive matter from other sources, blood being the principal contribution from the defendant's slaughter-house; and that the mill had been in use for more than twenty years before the slaughter-house was erected, and that the pollution of the water had been gradually growing worse for some eight years before suit was brought. It was held that complainant was entitled to relief, and that he would be entitled to the same relief against all those contributing to the nuisance; and if it should not cease upon the granting of the injunction in this case, he would be entitled to join in one case all who continued the injury. Woodyear v. Schaefer, 57 Md. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 419.

(3) Delay and Acquiescence.—Mere delay in applying to the court of equity to abate a nuisance may be a ground for denying relief until the plaintiff's right has been established in a court of law.¹ But where the right is clear, or has Suits by the State.—The state of Pennsylvania having constructed lines of canal and railroad and other means of transportation, which would be injured in their revenues by the obstruction of the Ohio river created by a bridge at Wheeling, has a sufficiently specific interest to sustain an application to the Supreme Court of the United States, in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, for an injunction to remove the obstruction. Pennsylvania v. Wheeling, etc., Bridge Co., 13 How. (U. S.) 518.

Title to the bed of the ocean below low-water mark, along the shore, is in the state, and if obstructions are placed in it which interfere with navigation and fishery, they may be abated as public nuisances at the suit of the state. Coburn v. Ames, 52 Cal. 385, 28 Am. Rep. 634.

If an action is brought to remove an erection in navigable waters, on the ground that it is an injury to the jus publicum and to the common right of navigation, it must appear that an actual nuisance exists, even though the erection is an encroachment. Atty.-Genl. v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 27 N. J. Eq. 1.

The relators in a bill filed by the state under the Act of March 31, 1887, §§ 28, 29, to abate a nuisance as dangerous to the public health, must show that the situation or practice complained of amounts of itself, and without the aid of other similar practices or situations (for which the defendants are not responsible) to a public as distinguished from a private nuisance, and one which would be indictable as such. A mere tendency to injure is not sufficient to constitute such a nuisance. There must be something actually appreciable, which arrests the attention, and rests not merely in theory, but strikes the common sense of the ordinary citizen. State v. Chosen Freeholders, 46 N. J. Eq. 173.

In an action by the people on the relation of an individual to remove an obstruction in a public street, where it appears that the street was never dedicated or accepted, the plaintiff cannot invoke an estoppel on the ground that the relator, an abutting property owner, acted on an agreement with the defendant to open the street, since the action by the people is not to vindicate the relator's private rights. People v. Dreher, (Cal., 1894), 35 Pac. Rep. 867.

Suit Brought by Municipal Corporation.—A municipal corporation, in the exercise of its power, granted by the state, to abate nuisances under proper circumstances, may call a court of equity to its assistance. *Denver v. In Pine City v. Munch (Minn., 1890), 44

N. W. Rep. 197, it was held that a municipality may maintain in its own name a suit in equity to abate a nuisance. Compare Ottumwa v. Chinn, 75 Iowa 405, 23 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 55.

New Jersey Pub. Laws 1888, p. 80 (a statute authorizing boards of health to abate nuisances hazardous to public health), makes provision in section 28 that any local board of health, instead of proceeding in a summary manner to remove a nuisance hazardous to the public health, may file a bill in chancery in the name of the state, on the relation of such board of health, for an injunction to prohibit the continuance of such nuisance; and such action shall proceed according to the rules and practices in such cases on the relation of individuals. State v. Neidt (N. J., 1890), 19 Atl. Rep. 318.

The Court of Chancery will not interfere by injunction to enforce the by-laws of a corporation unless the act to be restrained is in itself a nuisance. Hudson v. Thorne, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 261. See also Marshalltown v. Foreney, 61 Iowa 578.

A court of equity will not limit the abatement of a nuisance to any particular officer of a municipality unless exclusive power to act in the matter is conferred plainly on one department. U. S. Illuminating Co. v. Grant (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 788.

An injunction to stop chemical works, applied for after the works had been in operation three and a half years, by an individual who owned and resided on adjoining lands during that time, was denied. Tichenor v. Wilson, 8 N. J. Eq. 197.

Where a trifling trespass or interference with an ancient right has been submitted been settled at law, relief will not be refused the plaintiff on account of delay, unless he has done some act amounting to acquiescence in the nuisance.¹ Where, however, the delay is coupled with an acquiescence,² especially if, by reason of such delay, the defendant is allowed to go ahead and make expensive erections,³ the plaintiff will be deprived of all equitable relief. The owners of glass-works which were erected in 1845, erected in 1847, and subsequent years down to 1863, seven new furnaces, by reason of which the quantity of smoke and vapor emitted from the works was greatly increased. The plaintiff owned property adjoining the works, which he and his predecessors in title had enjoyed long before the erection of the works, and he had at considerable expense fitted up a portion of the property for building purposes; but, on account of the offensive smoke, etc., from the glass-works, he had been prevented from carrying out this plan. In 1870 he filed a bill to restrain the emission of smoke and vapor from the new kilns. It was held that he was not barred by delay, and that he was entitled to an injunction as to the whole of the new works. Saville v. Kilner, 26 L. T., N. S. 277.

An adjoining owner who expressly consents to the occupancy of a street may not ask a court afterwards to enjoin the use of the street or to give him damages. Burkam v. Ohio, etc., R. Co., 122 Ind. 344.

If waste-gates be erected by the defendants, and used by them through a course of years with the assent of the complainants, the complainants cannot have relief by injunction so long as the use of the gates is confined to their original purpose. Hulme v. Shreve, 4 N. J. Eq. 116.

The acquiescence of the plaintiff's grantor in an action by the defendant is no defense. Learned v. Castle, 78 Cal. 454.

Where a contract between a person and a municipal corporation, whereby the latter permitted the former to erect a stairway occupying a portion of a public alley, was entered into privately, and not under a public ordinance of the city, the fact that the defendant's grantors, in carrying out the terms of such contract, had expended large sums of money, of which expenditure the agent of the plaintiff had knowledge, and to the construction of which stairway he did not object, does not work an estoppel against the plaintiff. Pettis v. Johnson, 56 Ind. 139.

3. Expensive Erections.—Fresno v. Fresno Canal, etc., Co., 98 Cal. 179; Ninth Ave. R. Co. v. New York El. R. Co., 7 Daly (N. Y.) 174; Southard v. Morris Canal, etc., Co., 1 N. J. Eq. 518; Atty.-Genl. v. New York, etc., R. Co., 24 N. J. Eq. 49; Bassett v. Salisbury Mfg. Co., 47 N. H. 426; Goodin v. Cincinnati, etc., Canal Co., 18 Ohio St. 169; Sprague v. Steere, 1 R. I. 247.

Where it appeared that a canal was constructed at great expense, more than five years before the incorporation of the city of Fresno (the party complaining) and eleven years before the suit was instituted, and had ever since been used by the canal company, adversely to all the world; that the proprietors of the land where the city was situated induced such company to run its canal through the town, and located the latter on the assurance that the company would do so; that the supervisors were consulted at the time and offered no objections; that taxes on the canal were paid to the city, and its trustees by ordinances and official acts recognized its existence; and that a mill of the company was built at an expense of nearly one hundred thousand dollars—it was held that a decree ordering the canal to be abated as a nuisance by filling it up was erroneous. Fresno v. Fresno Canal, etc., Co., 98 Cal. 179.

Where the plaintiff, having granted a mill site and water privilege, with power to close his land within certain limits, permitted a dam to be raised so high as to flow the water beyond those limits, and afterwards allowed the dam to be repaired at the same height and a mill and machinery to be adjusted to that height, an injunction to compel the defendant to lower his dam and restrict the flowage to the limits expressed in the grant was denied by the court. Sprague v. Steere, 1 R. I. 247.

Where the plaintiff and his grantors had acquiesced for six years in the defendant's maintaining a dam, under a claim of right to the erection of a nuisance will be no estoppel where the party, at the time of giving assent, had no reason to suppose that a nuisance would be the result.¹

(4) Decree must not be Too Broad.—The decree must limit the abatement to that in which the nuisance consists, and no unnecessary damage should be done.²

2. Criminal Proceedings—a. GENERALLY.—Where a person has been indicted for maintaining a public nuisance, the judgment on conviction may embrace, in addition to the punishment, an order for the abatement of the nuisance.³

flow certain lands, during which time the defendants made expensive erections of mills and machinery, to be operated by the power so gained, it was held that there was good reason for refusing an injunction. Bassett v. Salisbury Mfg. Co., 47 N. H. 426.

A person may so encourage another in the erection of a nuisance as not only to be deprived of the right of equitable relief, but also to give the adverse party an equity to restrain him from recovering damages at law for such nuisance. William v. Jersey, 1 C. & P. 91; Carlisle v. Cooper, 21 N. J. Eq. 591.

1. Assent—How Far a Bar.—Bankart v. Houghton, 27 Beav. 430; Corley v. Lancaster, 81 Ky. 171; Mueller v. Fruen, 36 Minn. 273; Adams v. Popham, 76 N. Y. 410; Snow v. Williams, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 471; Leonard v. Spencer, 108 N. Y. 338.

In order that an injunction may issue, a business must be in its very nature a nuisance. If it is only a business which may or may not become a nuisance, acquiescence is no estoppel. Bankart v. Houghton, 27 Beav. 430.

In Adams v. Popham, 76 N. Y. 410, it was held that the fact that the plaintiff, by consent of the defendant, took ice from the pond one or two winters, did not constitute such an acquiescence in the continuance of the dam as to estop her from claiming that it was a nuisance, especially when thereafter its effects were more clearly discovered; nor did the fact that the plaintiff and her husband had made efforts by suggesting improvements, and otherwise, to have the pond rendered harmless, preclude her from resorting to an action for the abatement of the nuisance.

In Snow v. Williams, 16 Hun (N. Y.) 468, it was held that the owner of a farm through which a stream flowed was not precluded from maintaining an action to enjoin the operation of a cheese-factory on the stream above in such manner as to pollute the water with whey, by the fact that at the time the same was built he was acquainted with the custom of such factories to thus dispose of surplus whey, and that he had patronized it for two years before the defendant purchased it.

The plaintiff's mere failure to protest against the construction of a mill and the use of a millpond—in the absence of evidence that the defendant by his silence caused the plaintiff to do anything he would not otherwise have done—and his reasonable delay in suing, in order to be sure that the pond was a nuisance, will not estop the plaintiff from maintaining an action to abate it. Leonard v. Spencer, 108 N. Y. 338.

2. Decree—and Action Thereunder.—Richards v. Holt, 61 Iowa 529; Trulock v. Merte, 72 Iowa 510; Green v. Lake, 54 Miss. 540; Shepard v. People, 40 Mich. 487; Williams v. Osborn, 40 N. J. Eq. 235.

Where a factory situated at B. was complained of by one who lived at G., and an injunction was thereupon allowed, restraining the defendants from causing the nuisance at B. by their factory, it was held that, as no one at B. had complained, the injunction must be modified so as to restrain the defendants from causing a nuisance at G. only. Williams v. Osborn, 40 N. J. Eq. 235.

Where the defendants were so keeping a building on their premises as to be a nuisance to the plaintiff in several respects, but, after the plaintiff's action to enjoin the nuisance had been begun, the defendants so kept the building that it was no longer a nuisance, except in one particular, and there was nothing in the evidence to indicate that they would again keep it as they did when the action was begun, it was held that the injunction should have been limited to the offense existing at the time of the hearing. Trulock v. Merte, 72 Iowa 510.

A court of equity will not make perpetual an injunction against the lawful use of a flour and corn mill in a city, upon the allegations of noise by the machinery, danger of fire from the engine, and of disease from the accumulation of filth and unwholesome odors, if the grievances can be remedied by scientific and skilful appliances, but it will require such appliances to be used. Green v. Lake, 54 Miss. 540.

Where it was determined that a certain hog-lot was so kept and used as to create a nuisance, but not that it was a nuisance per se, the court was not authorized in wholly restraining the use of the lot for the purpose of feeding hogs. It should have restrained only such use of the lot as would amount to a nuisance. Richards v. Holt, 61 Iowa 529.

Destruction of Property.—The court is not obliged to order the destruction of property which it has decreed to be a nuisance. Property cannot be destroyed for the abatement of a nuisance until its destruction is lawfully ascertained to be necessary therefor, and then only so far as is determined to be necessary. Shepard v. People, 40 Mich. 487.

Such order, however, is not an essential part of the judgment.¹ The abatement may or may not be ordered, according as it is or is not justified by the facts in the case.² For instance, to warrant the order, it must be shown that the nuisance is continuing.³ The abatement, strictly speaking, forms no part

The power conferred by Iowa Code, § 456, upon cities and towns organized under the general laws of the state to abate a nuisance, is to be exercised through the medium of an ordinance and criminal proceedings rather than a suit in equity. *Ottumwa v. 1. Order of Removal.—Howard v. State, 6 Ind. 446; Maxwell v. Boyne, 36 Ind. 125; Crippen v. People, 8 Mich. 124; Shepard v. People, 40 Mich. 487. See also Campbell v. State, 16 Ala. 146; State v. Haines, 30 Me. 65; State v. Noyes, 30 N. H. 279.

Although the removal of a nuisance is not a necessary part of the judgment, and the power may or may not be exercised by the court, yet when it is exercised it must be at the time of imposing the fine or imprisonment, and the order for removal must form a part of the same judgment. Crippen v. People, 8 Mich. 124.

2. Abatement—When Ordered.—Maxwell v. Boyne, 36 Ind. 120.

In Rex v. Pappineau, 2 Stra. 688, Rhenolds, J., said that "every judgment should be adapted to the nature of the case."

There seems to be some diversity among the decisions as to whether or not the matter of abatement is left entirely to the discretion of the court. Thus, in Crippen v. People, 8 Mich. 124, the court said that the removal of a nuisance is left discretionary with the court. It is a power that may or may not be exercised. See also Shepard v. People, 40 Mich. 487. And in Howard v. State, 6 Ind. 446, it was said, "The court may order the removal or not, at its discretion." See also Cromwell v. Lowe, 14 Ind. 234. But in Maxwell v. Boyne, 36 Ind. 120, the court, in commenting upon the above-mentioned Indiana cases, said that although an order for the abatement of a nuisance does not necessarily follow a conviction in a criminal case, or a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff in an action for damages, yet it is not a matter entirely in the discretion of the court. It is the court's duty to make such an order whenever the interest and comfort of the community or of individuals require the nuisance to be abated in whole or in part.

3. Nuisance must be Continuing.—Campbell v. State, 16 Ala. 144; People v. Branchport, etc., Plank Road Co., 5 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 604; State v. Noyes, 30 N. H. 298; Miller v. State, 3 Ohio St. 477; Smith v. State, 22 Ohio St. 539; Matthews v. State, 25 Ohio St. 536.

An indictment for nuisance against a plank road company contained the allegation that the defendants' road was, and had been, and at and until the finding of the indictment still was out of repair, to the damage and common nuisance of the citizens of the state, so that they could not go and pass over the same without great trouble and inconvenience. It was held, that to warrant a conviction, it was necessary to show not only that the road had been out of repair, but that it continued so to be down to the time of the finding of the indictment. People v. Branchport, etc., Plank Road Co., 5 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 604.

The sentence and judgment required by the statute, upon conviction for maintaining a nuisance, under the Ohio Act of April 15, 1857, cannot be dispensed with upon a showing that the nuisance does not exist at the time such judgment is about to be rendered. In such case, however, an order to abate the nuisance will not be issued to the sheriff as a matter of course; and, on the hearing of a motion for such order, either party will be of the punishment.¹ Hence, where the offense is pardoned, the abatement of the nuisance is not thereby prevented.²

b. EXTENT OF ABATEMENT.—The judgment may require the destruction of property, if it is necessary for the abatement of a nuisance;³ but only so much of the thing as causes the nuisance ought to be removed.⁴

c. TO WHOM ORDER IS GIVEN.—The court usually orders that the defendant abate the nuisance at his own cost.⁵ And if he disobey, obedience may be enforced by attachment for contempt of court,⁶ or by an order, contained in the sentence, that he stand committed until the nuisance is abated.⁷ It is competent for the court, also, in case the defendant refuses to comply with the sentence, to require by law the sheriff or some other officer to execute the order.⁸

heard upon testimony, and if it then appear that such nuisance has ceased to exist, the order should not issue. Smith v. State, 22 Ohio St. 539; Matthews v. State, 25 Ohio St. 541.

Compare Willis v. Warren, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 590; Delaware, etc., Canal Co. v. Com., 60 Pa. St. 367, 100 Am. Dec. 570.

The abatement of a nuisance is not a punishment for the offense, but the removal of a thing injurious to the public. Matthews v. State, 25 Ohio St. 541.

But in Willis v. Warren, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 590, it was said that where obscene pictures were destroyed, the loss thus occasioned to the owner was a part of the punishment inflicted for the offense of publicly keeping or exposing them.

2. Rex v. Wilcox, 2 Salk. 458.

3. Willis v. Warren, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 590. In this case it was held that the exhibition of obscene pictures is an offense indictable at common law, and that such pictures might be destroyed as a public nuisance when the fact of publication is established.

4. Extent of Abatement.—Rex v. Pappineau, 1 Stra. 686; Campbell v. State, 16 Ala. 144; Shepard v. People, 40 Mich. 487; Brightman v. Bristol, 65 Me. 426, 20 Am. Rep. 711.

Where the nuisance consists in the illegal use of a building, and not in the building itself, the court will not be justified in ordering the destruction of the building. It is only the unlawful use that can be abated. State v. Kaster, 35 Iowa 222; Earp v. Lee, 71 Ill. 193; Brightman v. Bristol, 65 Me. 426, 20 Am. Rep. 711; Welch v. Stowell, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 332; Barclay v. Com., 25 Pa. St. 503, 64 Am. Dec. 715; State v. Paul, 5 R. I. 185.

Where Strangers are Affected.—In State v. Haines, 30 Me. 65, it was held that upon conviction an abatement of the nuisance will not be ordered by the court when strangers to the proceeding might be improperly affected.

In Delaware, etc., Canal Co. v. Com., 60 Pa. St. 367, 100 Am. Dec. 570, it was held that a sentence against a corporation to abate a nuisance created by it is proper, although the nuisance is on the land of another.

5. Nature of Order.—Rex v. Bateman, 8 El. & Bl. 584; Rex v. Pappineau, 1 Stra. 686; Rex v. Yorkshire, 7 T. R. 467; Rex v. Sterd, 8 T.

Upon the prosecution of an employee of a powder company for maintaining a public nuisance, judgment upon his conviction, ordering that the nuisance be removed, is erroneous. The judge, in giving the opinion of the court in this case, said: "The law contemplates that property, either in business or in a building, shall not be destroyed unless the person who is financially interested therein is before the court. An employee has no interest in either, and, while he may be culpable in continuing to maintain an obnoxious trade or business, he has no such control over it as that an order that he abate the entire business could be otherwise than oppressive, if not in its nature necessarily ineffectual." State v. Paggett, 8 Wash. 579.

6. Miller v. State, 3 Ohio St. 477.

It seems to be the better opinion that the Court of King's Bench may, by a mandatory writ, prohibit a nuisance and order that the same shall be abated; and that if the party disobeys the writ he subjects himself to an attachment. But upon such attachment, for proceeding after the writ of prohibition, there ought to be a declaration setting forth the nature of the offense, and that the same is a nuisance, and that, notwithstanding the writ of prohibition, the defendant proceeded in or continued it; to which, if the defendant can in pleading set forth a sufficient justification, his proceeding post prohibitionem regiam will be good in law, and he himself discharged of all contempt. 7 Bac. Abr. 234.

8. Requiring Officer to Execute Order.—Ashbrook v. Com., 1 Bush (Ky.) 144, 89 Am. Dec. 616; Barclay v. Com., 25 Pa. St. 503, 64 Am. Dec. 715. See also Howard v. State, 6 Ind. 444; *State v. Order not to be Given to Sheriff in First Instance.—The prevailing opinion among the authorities seems to be that the court cannot order the sheriff to abate a nuisance, where no previous order has been given to the defendant.

III. ABATEMENT WITHOUT PROCESS OF LAW—1. By Private Individuals—

a. ORIGIN OF THE RIGHT.—Abatement of nuisances by private individuals has its origin in the common law,¹ which allows this private and summary method of doing one's self justice, because injuries which obstruct or annoy one in the enjoyment of such things as are of daily convenience and use, require an immediate remedy and cannot await the slow progress of the ordinary forms of justice.²

b. WHO MAY ABATE.—A Private Nuisance may be abated only by the party aggrieved,³ who may always resort to this summary method of redress whenever he has been injured to such an extent as to give him a right of action.⁴

In Barclay v. Com., 25 Pa. St. 503, 64 Am. Dec. 715, it was held that, on a conviction for nuisance, it is error in the court to command the nuisance to be abated by the sheriff in the first instance, that being part of the sentence given against the defendants; but if they refuse to comply with the sentence, the court may order the sheriff to abate it at their cost.

In Campbell v. State, 16 Ala. 144, it was held that a judgment, upon an indictment for a nuisance, "that the nuisance be abated forthwith, at the cost of the defendant; and the sheriff is charged with the execution of the order," is virtually an order to the sheriff to abate the nuisance, and to that extent erroneous, but that it will be amended in the appellate court so as to command the defendant to abate the same, if this has not been already done. Compare Crippen v. People, 8 Mich. 117; Copper v. Territory, 1 Wash. 325.

In Miller v. State, 3 Ohio St. 477, it was held that an order to abate should not be directed to any officer. It is not an order to be executed by an officer. But it has been held that in Ohio now, by Act of April 15, 1857, the court is authorized to issue an order to the sheriff to abate a nuisance at the cost of the defendant, unless such nuisance shall be abated or removed before said order shall be issued to the sheriff. Matthews v. State, 25 Ohio St. 537; Smith v. State, 22 Ohio St. 539.

In the trial of an action of trespass on the case, brought by the owner of the middle one of three dams on the same stream against the owner of the lowest, subsequently erected, for damages caused by flowing the wheels of the former, it is not competent for the defendant, except so far as it might affect the question of abandonment, to prove that the plaintiff's dam caused the water to flow back and injure the oldest and uppermost dam and the mills thereon, and that the owner of the last-mentioned dam abated the plaintiff's dam as a nuisance at the time the defendant erected his dam. The judge, in giving the opinion of the court, said: "One cannot answer proof that he has done an injury to the property of his neighbor, by allegation and proof that the property is in itself injurious to some third person whose rights he does not represent. The right of abatement for private nuisances cannot be thus extended." Lincoln v. Chadbourne, 56 Me. 197.

Instances of Exercise of Right.—"If H. builds a house so near mine that he stops my lights, or shoots the water upon my house, or is in any other way a nuisance to me, I may enter upon the owner's soil and pull it down." Rex v. Rosewell, 2 Salk. 459.

It is equally well established that one who sustains a special injury from a public nuisance may abate it, for, as to him, it is a private nuisance.¹

Public Nuisance.—But the question of the right of an individual to abate a public nuisance from which he sustains no special injury beyond that common to the public at large, has given rise to considerable discussion and conflict of authority.² The ancient authorities, in the broad and general language used, appear to support the view that anybody may abate a public nuisance;³ but there is a tendency among the modern decisions to limit the right of an individual to abate a public nuisance, to cases where an action could be maintained by him. The true rule would seem to be this, that, speaking generally,

Where the commissioners of highways changed the course of a sluiceway crossing and draining the highway, and turned the water upon the defendant's land, and the defendant obstructed the drain and was sued for a penalty, it was held that if the effect of the change was to destroy his cultivated field, the defendant committed no error in peaceably abating the drain, in that manner, as a nuisance. Thompson v. Allen, 7 Lans. (N. Y.) 459.

Every proprietor of land adjoining a highway has a right to reasonable access to its traveled part; and any fence or other obstruction which so encumbers it as essentially to interfere with this right, is a nuisance, and may be abated by such proprietor. Therefore, where the traveled part of the highway had been so constructed in front of the land of B as to render direct access to it therefrom inconvenient without considerable expense, and C, owning land adjoining B's, inclosed with his own premises a part of the highway by a fence, whereupon B, finding it necessary to pass through that portion of the highway so inclosed in order to get access to the traveled part, removed the fence as an incumbrance on the highway—in an action of trespass by C, it was held that B was justified in so doing. Hubbard v. Deming, 21 Conn. 356. In the above case the public generally was not affected by the obstruction, and hence it was not a public nuisance, though it was erected on a public highway. The defendant's rights as an adjoining proprietor were the only matters in dispute.

One owning an ancient mill has the right to go upon the land of another and remove an obstruction erected across the stream for the purpose of irrigating the land, by which the mill is prevented from working. Colburn v. Richards, 13 Mass. 420, 7 Am. Dec. 160.

Where the natural course of surface water is, and has been for a long period of time, through a culvert in a public highway, and thence upon the lands of A, the latter has no right to fill up the culvert, thereby making the highway impassable at times of high water, and, by the construction of a ditch, to collect the water in a channel and discharge it in a body upon the lands of B, to his injury. B may abate such nuisance by restoring the culvert. Reed v. Cheney, 111 Ind. 387.

In Turner v. Holtzman, 54 Md. 157, 39 Am. Rep. 361, Dobbins, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "Without stopping to inquire whether any one whose rights are not injured or interfered with by a public nuisance, may abate it, about which there is some conflict in the decisions, there can be no doubt whatever that any person whose rights are injured or interfered with may abate it, provided its abatement does not involve a breach of the peace."

2. Right of Individual to Abate Public Nuisance.—There is a diversity of opinion among text-writers on this question, Mr. Hilliard and Mr. Bishop holding that any one may abate a nuisance. 1 Hilliard on Torts 605; 1 Bishop New Criminal Law (8th ed.), § 828. an individual has not the right to abate a public nuisance from which he sustains no special injury, but that circumstances may arise to secure a judicial recognition of such right. The cases bearing upon this question are cited below, those purporting or tending to afford support for the affirmative view being somewhat carefully collated.¹

1. The Following are cases supporting the doctrine that any one may abate a public nuisance:

Canada.—Rex v. Patton, 13 Low. Can. 311.

Alabama.—Oliver v. Loftin, 4 Ala. 240.

California.—Gunter v. Geary, 1 Cal. 462.

Connecticut.—Burnham v. Hotchkiss, 14 Conn. 310.

Maine.—Low v. Knowlton, 26 Me. 128, 45 Am. Dec. 100.

Maryland.—Day v. Day, 4 Md. 262.

Massachusetts.—Arundel v. McCulloch, 10 Mass. 70.

New Jersey.—Manhattan Mfg., etc., Co. v. Van Keuren, 23 N. J. Eq. 253.

New York.—Meeker v. Van Rensselaer, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 397; Adams v. Beach, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 271; Wetmore v. Tracy, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 252, 28 Am. Dec. 525; U. S. Illuminating Co. v. Grant (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 788; Coe v. Schultz, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 67.

North Carolina.—State v. Dibble, 4 Jones (N. Car.) 107.

Pennsylvania.—Lancaster Turppike Co. v. Rogers, 2 Pa. St. 114, 44 Am. Dec. 179.

South Carolina.—King v. Sanders, 2 Brev. (S. Car.) 11.

Tennessee.—Stump v. McNairy, 5 Humph. (Tenn.) 363, 42 Am. Dec. 437.

See also Wales v. Stetson, 2 Mass. 143, 3 Am. Dec. 39; Griffin v. New York, 9 N. Y. 462; Strickland v. Woolworth, 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 286.

Authorities Analyzed.—A leading American case on this side of the question is Meeker v. Van Rensselaer, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 397, where, during the cholera epidemic of 1832, an Albany tenement house, containing fifty or more persons, and being a public nuisance, was torn down. In an action of trespass it appeared that the defendant was a citizen of the ward and an alderman. He had a verdict, and a new trial was refused. Mr. Wood, in commenting upon this case (Wood on Nuisances (2d ed.) § 735 et seq.), lays stress upon what he deems to have been the defendant's personal interest in the abatement of the nuisance, and upon the extraordinary exigency of the situation. We incline to believe, however, that the defendant's personal interest played but a small part in the case, and that the exigency of the situation afforded the ground of the decision.

Renwick v. Morris, 7 Hill (N. Y.), 575, was an action of trespass for cutting away a part of a dam. Here the defendant justified on the ground that the dam was a public nuisance. It appeared that he was interested in the navigation of the river. Whether his action would have been justified had he been a stranger, cannot be said.

In Wetmore v. Tracy, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 250, 28 Am. Dec. 525, the court said: "Any person may abate a public nuisance," and cited

2 Burn's Justice 563, and Hawkins 408; but neither of these authorities supports the statement of the learned judge, nor does the case of Hart v. Albany, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 589, 24 Am. Dec. 165, also cited, the decision there having been put upon the ground that the defendant was an aggrieved party.

In Arundel v. McCulloch, 10 Mass. 70, the court said: "It is clear that, when any public way is unlawfully obstructed, any individual who wants to use it in a lawful way may remove the obstruction." The case went no farther than this. In Burnham v. Hotchkiss, 14 Conn. 310, the court said: "We consider it to be well settled that a common nuisance may be abated by any person." But the authorities here cited hardly support so broad a statement, the authorities being Lord Hale, who said, "Any man may justify the removal of a common nuisance either by land or water, because every man is concerned in it;" James v. Haywood, Cro. Car. 184, a case of a gate across a highway; Lodie v. Arnold, 2 Salk. 458, a case of a house across a highway; and 1 Hawk. P. C., § 61, where an obstruction to a highway was spoken of.

In Low v. Knowlton, 26 Me. 128, 45 Am. Dec. 100, the court said, in passing, that a public nuisance was abatable by any one; but this was clearly a dictum. Adams v. Beach, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 271, at most only assumed the truth of the doctrine.

In Jones v. Williams, 11 M. & W. 176, Lord Abinger, C.B., says it may be necessary in some cases, where there is such immediate danger to life or health as to render it unsafe to wait, to remove without notice.

In Perry v. Fitzhowe, 8 Q. B. 757, where a building was a nuisance, the court said, "While the plaintiff might have pulled down the house, yet he could not do it while any one was in it, for it is well settled that no one may abate a nuisance in such a way as to disturb the peace." And see Burling v. Read, 11 Q. B. 904; Davies v. Williams, 16 Q. B. 546.

In Harvey v. DeWoody, 18 Ark. 252, the court said, "It seems that any person may abate a common nuisance." Here this language was not essential to the decision of the case. Nor does Dewey v. White, M. & M. 56, which was an action of trespass against a fireman for pulling down a stack of chimneys in the vicinity of a fire, go further than to hold that the defendants were justified because the condition of the chimneys was such as to endanger the safety of those who pulled them down as well as of those at work.

In Manhattan Mfg., etc., Co. v. Van Keuren, 23 N. J. Eq. 251, an injunction was refused by the vice-chancellor; and what was said in relation to the right of a citizen to abate a common-law nuisance was not essential to the decision.

c. LIMITATIONS UPON RIGHT OF ABATEMENT.—The person who abates a nuisance, either public or private, acts at his own peril. He takes upon him-

In Stiles v. Laird, 5 Cal. 120, 63 Am. Dec. 110, there was an invasion of a private as well as of a public right.

Killing Dogs.—In the following cases it was held that any person is justified in killing a ferocious and dangerous dog which is permitted to run at large by its owner, when the owner has notice of its vicious disposition. Parker v. Mise, 27 Ala. 483, 62 Am. Dec. 776; Woolf v. Chalker, 31 Conn. 121, 81 Am. Dec. 175; Putnam v. Payne, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 312; Dunlap v. Snyder, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 566; Hinckley v. Emerson, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 351, 15 Am. Dec. 383; Dodson v. Mock, 4 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 146; Bowers v. Fitzrandolph, Add. (Pa.) 215; Brown v. Carpenter, 26 Vt. 638, 62 Am. Dec. 603.

In Woolf v. Chalker, 31 Conn. 121, 81 Am. Dec. 175, it was held that any person may kill a mad dog, or one which is justly suspected of being mad, or which is known to have been bitten by a dog which was mad.

In Maxwell v. Palmerton, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 407, the court said: "If the dog be in fact ferocious, at large, and a terror to the neighborhood, the public should be justified in dispatching him at once."

In King v. Kline, 6 Pa. St. 318, there is a dictum to the effect that a dog may be so ferocious as to become a public nuisance; and in such case, if his owner permits him to run at large any person may kill him.

In Bowers v. Fitzrandolph, Add. (Pa.) 215, it is said that a dog having bitten the defendant was a nuisance, and that anybody might abate the nuisance; and in Dunlap v. Snyder, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 561: "If a dog is so ferocious that of his own disposition he will bite men in the street, and is at large, he is a nuisance and may be killed by any one."

Below are the cases supporting the opposite view:

Wisconsin.—Godsell v. Fleming, 59 Wis. 52.

Among the contra cases are those of Griffith v. McCullum, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 561, where the court, by Marvin, J., said, on the proposition that any one might abate a public nuisance: "I so conceded in Peckham v. Henderson, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 207, without examining the question. Indeed, in the view taken in that case, the question was of no importance;" and then concurred with Harrower v. Ritson, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 301, and concluded that "that which is exclusively a common or public nuisance cannot lawfully be abated by the private acts of individuals," citing the language quoted in that case from Blackstone, and deeming it not to afford authority for the contrary doctrine.

In Brown v. Perkins, 12 Gray (Mass.) 89, Shaw, C. J., said: "The true theory of abatement of nuisance is that an individual citizen may abate a private nuisance injurious to him, when he could also bring an action; and also, when a common nuisance obstructs his individual right, he may remove it to enable him to enjoy that right; and he cannot be called in question for so doing. As in the case of the obstruction across a highway, and an unauthorized bridge over a navigable watercourse, if he has occasion to use it, he may remove it by way of abatement. But this would not justify strangers being inhabitants of other parts of the commonwealth, having no such occasion to use it, to do the same. Some of the earlier cases, perhaps, in laying down the general proposition that private subjects may abate a common nuisance, did not expressly mark this distinction; but we think, upon the authority of modern cases, where the distinctions are more accurately made, and upon principle, this is the true rule of law." This was an action of tort against persons taking part in the abatement of a liquor nuisance and the destruction of the liquor.

In Colchester v. Brooke, 7 Q. B. 339, the defendant negligently ran his vessel into and destroyed an oyster bed unlawfully planted by the plaintiff in the channel of a navigable river. Being sued for the damage, he claimed that as the oyster bed was a public nuisance, no action would lie for an injury to it; but the court held otherwise. Denman, C. J., said: "However wrongful the act of the plaintiffs, yet, as the defendant sustained no special inconvenience thereby, he certainly could not have been justified in wilfully impinging upon or destroying the oysters, even for the purpose of abating the nuisance. It is very important, for the sake of the public peace and to prevent oppression, even on wrongdoers, not to confound common with private nuiself by his act the risk of being able to show, on a proper action by the party whose interests are affected by the abatement, that the thing abated was a nuisance.¹ It must be a nuisance actually existing at the time, and not one sances in this respect. In the case of the latter, the individual aggrieved may abate (3 Black. Com. 5), so as he commits no riot in doing it; and a public nuisance becomes a private one to him who is specially and in some particular way inconvenienced thereby, as in the case of a gate across a highway which prevents a traveler from passing, and which he may therefore throw down; but the ordinary remedy for a public nuisance is itself public—that of indictment; and each individual who is only injured as one of the public can no more proceed to abate than he can bring an action."

In Dimes v. Petley, 15 Q. B. 276, Campbell, C.J., says: "It is fully established by the recent cases, that if there be a nuisance in a public highway, a private individual cannot of his own authority abate it, unless it does him a special injury; and he can only interfere with it as far as is necessary to exercise his right of passing along the highway. * * * W: clearly think he cannot justify doing any damage to the property of the person who has improperly placed the nuisance in the highway, if, avoiding it, he might have passed on with reasonable convenience."

In Brown v. De Groff, 50 N. J. L. 409, 7 Am. St. Rep. 794, the defendant, in fishing for clams, injured the plaintiff's oysters, and, when sued, sought to justify on the ground that the plaintiff's maintenance of the oyster bed was a public nuisance; but the court held that, conceding this to be so, it was no defense.

The decayed and worthless condition of a street erected by authority of law, or the peril attending its crossings, will not authorize its destruction or injury by one not suffering particular annoyance or injury. Owens v. State, 52 Ala. 400.

There is a class of cases in which it is held that the party who had occasion to use a highway might abate an obstruction therein. Thus, in Fort Plain Bridge Co. v. Smith, 30 N. Y. 44, the court said: "A distinction must be made between the right of a person navigating the stream and one not navigating it, to abate the nuisance therein." See also Com. v. Tolman, 149 Mass. 235, 14 Am. St. Rep. 414 (which distinguishes Arundel v. McCulloch, 10 Mass. 70); Williams v. Fink, 18 Wis. 265; Godsell v. Fleming, 59 Wis. 54.

In State v. Parrott, 71 N. Car. 311, 17 Am. Rep. 5, it was held that the proprietors of a steamboat on a navigable river might tear away a sufficient portion of the bridge to enable them to take their boat through, where the bridge had been constructed without a draw, and the proprietors, after notice, had failed to remove the bridge or to put in a draw. This case, however, cites with approval the case of State v. Dibble, 4 Jones (N. Car.) 107, which was a similar case, and in which it was held that the nuisance was abatable by any one.

In Larson v. Furlong, 63 Wis. 323, it was held that one may remove a wharf built in navigable water in front of his land, disconnected with said land, and preventing access to it.

To a declaration charging the defendant with breaking and entering upon a certain dummy or landing-stage of the plaintiffs, the same being a barge of the plaintiffs moored in the river Orwell, and embarking and disembarking from the same passengers and others on, to, and from divers ships and vessels, and mooring ships and vessels against the same, the defendant pleaded that the river Orwell was a public and common navigable stream; that he had a right to land and was desirous of landing passengers from his steam vessel at the wharf; that the plaintiffs' dummy or landing-stage at the time was permanently moored and fixed alongside the wharf so that his passengers could not embark or disembark there without his vessel being moored thereto and his passengers passing over the same. This was held on demurrer a sufficient answer to the declaration; the dummy appearing to be a permanent obstruction of the defendant's right to use the river as a highway, which right he could exercise only by removing or passing over the said dummy. Eastern Counties R. Co. v. Doling, 5 C. B., N. S. 821.

Where the defendant, owning a vessel and a wharf upon a navigable stream, and finding a raft of lumber belonging to the plaintiff fastened in the stream so as to obstruct the approach of his vessel to his wharf, untied the raft, doing no unnecessary damage, and the raft, not being in charge of any person, floated away, it was held that he was not liable for the loss of the lumber. Harrington v. Edwards, 17 Wis. 586, 84 Am. Dec. 768.

The case of Bowden v. Lewis, 13 R. I. 189, 43 Am. Rep. 21, presents some peculiar complications. A villa fronted upon a bay, on the shore of which an oyster house was erected which obstructed the view of the bay from the villa and interfered with the approach to it up the bay. The oyster house was erected without authority in the navigable portion of the bay. The owner of the villa tore it down. It appeared that the market value of the villa had been considerably depreciated by the erection of the oyster house. The court held the owner liable, though admitting that he had suffered a special injury; and held that the injury which he suffered, to entitle him to abate, must be an injury to him in his right as one of the public to navigate the bay.

Encroachments.—The cases distinguish between a mere encroachment not interfering with the freedom of passage, and an obstruction hindering or materially interfering with the passage, the former being held not to be a nuisance. Graves v. Shattuck, 35 N. H. 257, 69 Am. Dec. 536; Godsell v. Fleming, 59 Wis. 52; Williams v. Fink, 18 Wis. 265; Howard v. Robbins, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 63. See also Clark v. Lake St. Clair, etc., Ice Co., 24 Mich. 508; Peckham v. Henderson, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 207.

Where A's fence encroached upon the road, but did not render the use of the highway entirely inconvenient or impossible, and B, while himself obstructing the highway by keeping a threshing-machine thereon, took down A's fence opposite the machine and caused a team to be driven across the field inclosed thereby, it was held, in an action of trespass to the close, that B could not defend on the ground that the fence encroached upon the highway. Williams v. Fink, 18 Wis. 265.

Where the trustees of the village of Watkins, proceeding in a manner directed by their charter, declared an encroachment on one of the village streets to be a nuisance, and the defendants, being thereupon deputed by them so to do, removed it, and in an action by the owner to recover damages for such removal the evidence did not establish a nuisance in fact, it was held that the defendants were not protected by the determination and direction of the trustees. Howard v. Robbins, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 63.

If a party assumes that a building which is being moved through a public highway is a nuisance, and undertakes to abate it as such, he does so at the risk of being deemed a trespasser if he fails to establish the existence of the nuisance. Graves v. Shattuck, 35 N. H. 258, 69 Am. Dec. 536.

A company which undertakes, under a contract with a municipal corporation, to work a public improvement, such as laying a fire-alarm telegraph, has no right to invade the premises of an abutting proprietor and to cut off limbs of trees overhanging the sidewalk when such limbs do not obstruct the use of the sidewalk, or when the posts and wires could have been, with less inconvenience or with none, located elsewhere. Tissot v. Great Southern Telephone, etc., Co., 39 La. Ann. 996, 4 Am. St. Rep. 248.

Dangerous Animals.—In Perry v. Phipps, 10 Ired. (N. Car.) 259, 51 Am. Dec. 387, it was held that a person cannot kill a dog in the owner's house or yard, upon the pretense that he is a nuisance, because he has at a former period chased or bitten some one else. Also in Uhlein v. Cromack, 109 Mass. 273, it was held that a person has no right to kill a dog simply because it is ferocious, so long as it does not attack him or endanger his safety, being confined on the owner's premises.

The fact that a dog has a habitual disposition to drive off stock trespassing on its owner's land will not justify a person whose stock is so being driven off by it in killing the dog. In order to warrant him in doing this, the dog must be shown to be a nuisance. Spray v. Ammerman, 66 Ill. 309.

In Franz v. Hilterbrand, 45 Mo. 121, the plaintiff was the owner of two horses, sick with a contagious disease, which he kept upon his own premises. The defendants, thinking to prevent the spread of the disease, entered the plaintiff's premises and killed the horses, claiming that they had become a nuisance. It was held that their action was not justifiable. See further, in relation to the right to kill dangerous animals, Marshall v. Blackshire, 44 Iowa 475; Clark v. Keliher, 107 Mass. 406; Aldrich v. Wright, 53 N. H. 398, 16 Am. Rep. 339; Bost v. Minguets, 64 N. Car. 44; Ladue v. Branch, 42 Vt. 574.

1. Abatement must be of Existing Nuisance.—Moffett v. Brewer, 1 Greene (Iowa) 350; Gates v. Blincoc, 2 Dana (Ky.) 158, 26 Am. Dec. 440; Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Goodale, 46 N. H. 53.

The nuisance must exist at the time it is sought to be abated. If the thing was a nuisance ten years or five years since, and it has ceased to be such, it cannot be abated as a nuisance. Peckham v. Henderson, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 210.

The fact that a dam has been a nuisance, and is likely to become so again, will not justify an abatement of the dam. Gates v. Blincoc, 2 Dana (Ky.) 158, 26 Am. Dec. 440.

A nuisance cannot be abated, with or without legal process, if it has been discontinued and has not been renewed when proceedings are begun against it. State v. Saunders (N. H., 1889), 25 Atl. Rep. 588.

A nuisance must be actually subsisting, to the injury of the public or some individual, before any person should be suffered to resort to a remedy so critical, perilous, and extraordinary as that of his own will and power, which necessity alone indulges in cases of extremity or great emergency, and in which no ordinary remedy will be altogether effectual. The public peace should not be jeopardized by permitting individuals to redress their own wrongs when they might obtain adequate security and indemnity by a resort to any of the ordinary remedies in courts of justice. Gates v. Blincoc, 2 Dana (Ky.) 158, 26 Am. Dec. 440.

If a person, having an intent to build a wall, lay the foundation, this may not be pulled down. Norris v. Baker, 1 Rolle 394. And again, in the same case: "Although boughs which hang over another's land may be cut, yet they cannot be cut merely for fear they will hereafter grow over." And again in Rolle Abr., tit. "Nuisance": "A man cannot remove scaffolds, etc., for making buildings which will be a nuisance when finished."

In abating a nuisance no more injury must be done to the property than is absolutely necessary to effect the object. Roberts v. Rose, L. R. 1 Exch. 82; State v. Moffett, 1 Greene (Iowa) 247.

Instances.—An owner of land in abating a private nuisance, as shocks of corn left encumbering the ground by a tenant, is bound to use reasonable care to avoid unnecessary injury. He has no right to destroy the corn unless there is no other reasonable way of enjoying the land. Calef v. Thomas, 81 Ill. 478.

In Howard v. Robbins, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 63, it was held that where an encroachment in a highway constitutes a nuisance, it may be abated to that degree only which will enable the public to enjoy the right of way.

A party exercising the right to abate a nuisance can remove or take away only so much as constitutes the nuisance. Thus if a person entitled to raise water to a certain height by means of a dam, raises it higher than he is entitled to, the person injured may reduce the dam to the proper height, but has not the right to demolish it. Dyer v. Depui, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 584.

M. was authorized by the county court to erect a tollgate on a turnpike road in the county, and take toll thereon at a fixed rate, he being bound to keep the road in order. R. and B. came with their teams to the gate, which they found shut and fastened. They demanded that the gate should be opened, and the gatekeeper demanded the usual tolls before opening the gate. R. and B. refused to pay the tolls, and the gatekeeper refused to open the gate. Thereupon R. and B. broke down and destroyed the gate, and passed through without paying toll. It was held that if the tollgate was such an obstruction on the highway as could be regarded a nuisance, R. and B. could be justified only in removing it peaceably, not in destroying it. Smart v. Com., 27 Gratt. (Va.) 950.

In Cooper v. Marshall, 1 Burr. 259, it was decided that a commoner cannot destroy the lord's conies and their burrows because they are in excess. See also Rex v. Pappineau, 2 Stra. 688.

When the nuisance consists in the wrongful use of a building harmless in itself, the remedy is to stop the use and not to destroy the building. Thus, where the defendants tore down a building in which a business, offensive from its smells, was carried on, this method of abatement was held unjustifiable. Brightman v. Bristol, 65 Me. 426, 20 Am. Rep. 711.

Where a house was kept as a place of public prostitution, it was held that the remedy was to stop such use, and not to demolish the building. Moody v. Niagara County, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 660; Welch v. Stowell, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 332; Gray v. Ayres, 7 Dana (Ky.) 376, 32 Am. Dec. 107. See also Colchester v. Brooke, 7 Q. B. 339; Brown v. Perkins, 12 Gray (Mass.) 89; Earp v. Lee, 71 Ill. 193; State v. Paul, 5 R. I. 185; State v. Keeran, 5 R. I. 497. Compare Van Wormer v. Albany, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 262; Meeker v. Van Rensselaer, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 397, where it was held that the defendants were justified in destroying the building, on the ground that it was impossible otherwise to remove the cause of disease.

To abate a nuisance occasioned by a pond of water, the injured parties have not the right to fill up the bed of water, but may remove the cause rendering the water impure. Finley v. Hershey, 41 Iowa 389.

Where a person who is entitled to a limited right exercises it in excess, so as to produce a nuisance, this may be abated to the extent of the excess. Crosland v. Pottsville, 126 Pa. St. 511; Taggart v. Com., 21 Pa. St. 527.

But if the nuisance cannot be abated without obstructing the right altogether, the exercise of the right may be stopped entirely until means have been taken to reduce it within its proper limits. Thus, where a person, a lot-owner in a borough, gave to the owner of a lot across the street a license to

there are more ways than one of abating a nuisance, he must choose that which is the least mischievous to the wrongdoer;¹ but where a particular method would work an injury to some innocent third person, or to the public, such method cannot be justified, and it may be necessary to abate the nuisance in a manner more onerous to the wrongdoer.² The right must always be so exercised as not to disturb the public peace.³

d. NOTICE.—The party having the right to abate must give reasonable notice of his intention to do so, unless in the case of an emergency requiring immediate action, or, perhaps, in the case of positive wrong or gross negligence on the part of the person maintaining the nuisance.⁴

carry off surface water by a covered drain-pipe passing under the street and through his lot to a stream, and the licensee turned into the drain foul matter from his cesspool, it was held that the person granting the license was justified in disconnecting the drain and in stopping it at his curb line. Crosland v. Pottsville, 126 Pa. St. 511.

In Beard v. Murphy, 37 Vt. 101, 86 Am. Dec. 693, it was held that where an upper owner mingled slops and filthy water with the surface water that flowed from his premises to those of a lower owner, the owner of the servient estate was justified in building an embankment that altogether prevented the surface water from coming upon his land.

In Pilcher v. Hart, 1 Humph. (Tenn.) 524, it was held that while a man may not willfully destroy the property of another even though it be a nuisance, yet he should not be held to so strict an accountability for the unintentional destruction of such property as for a like destruction of property in the lawful use and possession of its owner.

1. Choice of Modes of Abatement.—Roberts v. Rose, L. R. 1 Exch. 82.

Where the water is thrown back upon the land of a riparian owner by a dam erected below him, the proper mode of abating it is by lowering the level of the dam, if there be a prescriptive right for it, to the height authorized by such prescription, or, in the absence of any prescription, to such a height as will stop the reflux of the water at his boundary line; but he cannot divert the water from the stream, to the injury of the proprietor below him, by cutting a ditch on his own land. Wright v. Moore, 38 Ala. 593, 82 Am. Dec. 731.

2. Roberts v. Rose, L. R. 1 Exch. 82; Amick v. Tharp, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 564, 67 Am. Dec. 787.

The plaintiffs, by parol license from G. and from the defendant, constructed a watercourse, and thereby discharged water from their own mines across the land of G., thence across the defendant's land. The defendant revoked his license, and upon the refusal of the plaintiffs to discontinue using the watercourse, he entered upon G.'s land at a spot near the boundary between it and the land of the plaintiffs, and obstructed the watercourse. Had the defendant stopped the watercourse on his own land, he would have done less damage to the plaintiffs than was actually done, but more damage to G., and possibly some damage to the public. It was held that the watercourse was obstructed in a reasonable manner, inasmuch as the convenience of the plaintiffs, who after revocation of the license were wrongdoers, was subordinate to the convenience of innocent third persons and the public. Roberts v. Rose, L. R. 1 Exch. 82.

Where the city authorities changed the channel of a drain so as to throw the water flowing along it upon the lot of G. lying below, he could not obstruct the channel so as to cause the water to flow back upon and injure the lot of M. lying above his. Amick v. Tharp, 13 Gratt. (Va.) 564, 67 Am. Dec. 787.

3. Public Peace must not be Disturbed.—Rex v. Rosewell, 2 Salk. 459; Perry v. Fitzhowe, 8 Q. B. 757, 55 E. C. L. 757; Colchester v. Brooke, 7 Q. B. 339; Stiles v. Laird, 5 Cal. 123, 63 Am. In Perry v. Fitzhowe, 8 Q. B. 757, 55 E. C. L. 757, it was held that if a house is occupied, even though it has itself become a nuisance, the nuisance cannot be abated, for the reason that an abatement cannot, under such circumstances, be made without involving a breach of the peace. Compare Meeker v. Van Rensselaer, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 397.

In Burling v. Read, 11 Q. B. 904, this doctrine was held to be true in cases where no notice or request to remove existed; but it was further held that where reasonable notice had been given, and the person occupying the house had neglected to remove, the house might be torn down while he was actually in it. See also Davies v. Williams, 16 Q. B. 546; Jones v. Jones, 1 H. & C. 1.

4. Reasonable Notice—When Required.—Penruddock's Case, 5 Coke 101; Perry v. Fitzhowe, 8 Q. B. 757, 55 E. C. L. 757; Burling v. Read, 11 Q. B. 904; Davies v. Williams, 16 Q. B. 546; *Jones v. Y.) 397; Crosland v. Pottsville, 126 Pa. St. 511. Compare Manhattan Mfg., etc., Co. v. Van Keuren, 23 N. J. Eq. 251.

2. By Municipal Corporations.—a. SOURCE OF POWER.—A municipal corporation derives its control over nuisances from the legislature creating it.¹ This power is usually conferred specifically in the act of incorporation;² but in the absence of such specific authority, it will be implied from the general power to secure and promote the public health, safety, and convenience.³

The alienee of property upon which a nuisance exists at the time of his purchase has a right to a reasonable notice, on the ground that he merely permits the nuisance. Penruddock's Case, 5 Coke 101; Jones v. Williams, 11 M. & W. 176.

Parke, B., commenting on this question in Jones v. Williams, 11 M. & W. 176, says that it may be necessary in some cases, where there is such immediate danger to life or health as to render it unsafe to wait, to remove without notice.

When Notice is Necessary, notice of the identical nuisance must be given. Thus, where the use of a lot sheltered by a fence constituted a nuisance, it was held to be insufficient to give notice of nuisance and an order to remove the fence. Verder v. Ellsworth, 59 Vt. 354.

Nuisances from Omission.—In Lonsdale v. Nelson, 2 B. & C. 302, Best, J., said: "Nuisances by an act of commission are committed in defiance of those whom such nuisances injure, and the injured party may abate them without notice to the person who committed them; but there is no decided case which sanctions the abatement, by an individual, of nuisances from omission, except that of cutting the branches of trees which overhang a public road, or the private property of the person who cuts them. The permitting these branches to extend so far beyond the soil of the owner of the trees is a most unequivocal act of negligence, which distinguishes this case from most of the other cases that have occurred. The security of lives and property may sometimes require so speedy a remedy as not to allow time to call on the person on whose property the mischief has arisen, to remedy it. In such cases an individual would be justified in abating a nuisance from omission without notice. In all other cases of such nuisances, persons should not take the law into their own hands, but follow the advice of Lord Hale, and appeal to a court of justice."

Where Branches of a Tree Overhang a right of way, constituting a nuisance, a railroad company may remove the overhanging parts without giving notice, when the adjoining owner is aware that the company claims they are a nuisance, and desires their removal, which he refuses. The fact that the company offered him money to remove them gives him no right of further notice. Hickey v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 96 Mich. 498.

1. Source of Municipal Power over Nuisances.—State v. Mott, 61 Md. 297, 48 Am. Rep. 105; St. Paul v. Gilfillan, 36 Minn. 298; Clark v. Syracuse, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 33; People v. Albany, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 539, 27 Am. Dec. 95; Breninger v. Belvidere, 44 N. J. L. 350; State v. Williams, 11 S. Car. 288; Miller v. Burch, 32 Tex. 208, 5 Am. Rep. 242; Pye v. Peterson, 45 Tex. 312.

"All power a municipal corporation created by special or general laws may exercise emanates from the state creating it." Scott, J., in Harmon v. Chicago, 110 Ill. 408, 51 Am. Rep. 698.

There are cases which are in seeming conflict with the proposition as declared in the text. Thus, in Baumgartner v. Hasty, 100 Ind. 575, 50 Am. Rep. 850, it was said by the court: "It is settled, without dissent, that without a special grant of authority public corporations may, as a common-law power, cause the abatement of nuisances." See also Ronayne v. Loranger, 66 Mich. 373.

But Mr. Wood, in his work on Nuisances, § 743, explains this apparent conflict by saying, that when the city authorities, with no authority except the common law, proceed to abate a nuisance, they are justified, not because they are officials of the city, but because they are citizens injured by the thing abated. See Meeker v. Van Rensselaer, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 397; Van Wormer v. Albany, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 262; Manhattan Mfg., etc., Co. v. Van Keuren, 23 N. J. Eq. 255.

2. How Conferred.—Dillon Mun. Corp. (4th ed.), § 379.

One of the powers most commonly conferred upon municipal corporations is that to declare and to abate nuisances. The general authority is commonly given to the common council or other legislative body; but so far as the nuisances are supposed to be injurious to the public health, jurisdiction in respect to them is likely to be conferred upon boards of health. Where nuisances are spoken of in statutes delegating this authority, public nuisances must be understood as intended. Cooley Const. Lim. (6th ed.) p. 741, note.

3. When Implied.—Dillon Mun. Corp. (4th ed.), § 379; Ferguson v. Selma, 43 Ala. 400; Alpers v. San Francisco, 32 Fed. Rep. 503; Baker v. Boston, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 184, 22 Am. Dec. 421; Hellen v. Noe, 3 Ired. (N. Car.) 493; State v. Williams, 11 S. Car. 288. See also Louisville City R. Co. v. Louisville, 71 Ky. 416; Milne v. Davidson, 5 Martin, N. S. (La.) 409, 16 Am. Dec. 190; Kennedy v. Phelps, 10 La. Ann. 227; State v. Heidenhain, 42 La. Ann. 483, 21 Am. St. Rep. 388; Childress v. Nashville, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 347.

Under the authority to regulate the police of the city or village, and pass and enforce all necessary police ordinances, it was held that the village of Chebanse had the power to prohibit the keeping open of places of business on Sundays. McPherson v. Chebanse, 114 Ill. 46, 55 Am. Rep. 857.

In delivering the opinion of the court in Baker v. Boston, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 184, 22 Am. Dec. 421, Wilde, J., said: "The mayor and aldermen are fully empowered to adopt measures of police for the purpose of preserving the health and promoting the com-

b. EXTENT OF POWER.—The extent of the control of a municipal corporation over nuisances is measured by the powers conferred by its charter and the general laws.¹ It has been claimed that the right of a municipality to abate nuisances is absolute; that since many things not nuisances per se may become so, under certain circumstances, a declaration by the proper authority that such is the fact should be conclusive.² But this doctrine has fort, convenience, and general welfare of the inhabitants within the city. Among these powers no one is more important than that for the preservation of the public health. It is not only the right, but the imperative duty, of the city government to watch over the health of the citizens, and to remove every nuisance, so far as they may be able, which may endanger it."

1. Extent of Municipal Control.—Nevada v. Hutchins, 59 Iowa 506; State v. Mott, 61 Md. 297, 48 Am. Rep. 105; Baker v. Boston, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 184, 22 Am. Dec. 421; Weil v. Ricord, 24 N. J. Eq. 169; Breninger v. Belvidere, 44 N. J. L. 350; People v. Albany, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 539, 27 Am. Dec. 95; Collins v. Hatch, 18 Ohio 525; Miller v. Burch, 32 Tex. 208, 5 Am. Rep. 242.

The power to declare and provide for the removal of nuisances does not prevent the doing of an act which is of itself a nuisance. It is confined to stationary nuisances such as can be removed. State v. Jersey City, 29 N. J. L. 170.

Within the power granted, the degree of necessity or propriety of the exercise of the power of abatement rests exclusively with the proper corporate authorities; but in all cases the power exercised, or attempted to be exercised, must depend upon the nature and extent of the power granted; and whenever the question of the existence or limit of the power is raised, it becomes the plain duty of the court to see that the corporate authorities do not transcend the authority delegated to them. State v. Mott, 61 Md. 297, 48 Am. Rep. 205.

All the authority of a municipal corporation being derived from its charter, it is evident that its power cannot be enlarged, diminished, or varied by the ordinances or police of the corporation. Breninger v. Belvidere, 44 N. J. L. 350.

In Miller v. Burch, 32 Tex. 208, 5 Am. Rep. 242, the defendant purchased a livery stable belonging to and on the premises of the plaintiff, under a sale by authority of an ordinance of the town council of Bastrop declaring it a nuisance and ordering its sale and removal. The defendant purchased the building and destroyed it, and removed the materials. In an action of trespass therefor the defendant was justified under the ordinance, but Caldwell, J., in giving the opinion of the court, said: "The question is well settled that a corporation can exercise no power not clearly delegated in the act of incorporation, or arising by necessary implication out of some delegated power. An ordinance, therefore, not warranted by the charter, is void, and can furnish no justification to persons acting under its authority."

The corporation of the city of Albany has no right under its corporate powers granted by charter, or by special acts of the legislature, to remove the bulkhead at the foot of the basin connecting the Erie canal with the Hudson river; and where a Court of General Sessions instructed a jury that the corporation was bound to abate the nuisance arising from the basin being foul, even if in doing so it should be necessary to cut down or remove the bulkhead, and a verdict was found accordingly, the judgment entered upon such judgment was reversed by the Supreme Court upon a writ of error. People v. Albany, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 539, 27 Am. Dec. 95.

The charter of the city of St. Paul confers no power upon the city council to declare what acts or omissions shall constitute a public nuisance. Hence an ordinance passed, declaring the emission of dense smoke from smokestacks and chimneys a public nuisance, is unauthorized and void. St. Paul v. Gilfillan, 36 Minn. 298.

In State v. Hammond, 40 Minn. 43, it was held that part of an ordinance of the city of Minneapolis, which imposes a penalty upon any person who commits any act of lewdness or indecency within the limits of the city, is void, because it is in excess of the power vested in the city council by the city charter.

2. Effect of City's Determination.—Green v. Savannah, 6 Ga. 1; Kennedy v. Board of Health, 2 Pa. St. 366; Wistar v. Addicks, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 145. See also Dingley v. Boston, 100 Mass. 546; St. Louis v. Stern, 3 Mo. App. 48.

In Kennedy v. Board of Health, 2 Pa. St. 366, it was shown that the board of health was by legislative enactment authorized to cause all offensive or putrid substances, and all nuisances which in their opinion might have a tendency to endanger the health of the citizens, to be removed, etc. Under this authority they declared that a certain lot was a nuisance because filled with stagnant water, and proceeded to remove the nuisance by causing the lot to be filled in. The proprietor, upon being proceeded against for the expense incurred by the filling, offered to prove the cause of the alleged nuisance. The refusal of the trial court to hear this evidence was assigned as error in the appellate court. The court, in delivering the opinion on this point, said: "It is not easy to perceive the relevancy of such evidence, unless it was intended to show by it that there was in reality no nuisance to be removed. But this latter could not be proved, for the Act of Assembly on the subject, as recited above, makes the order of the board conclusive that the nuisance did exist, and expressly enacts that the fact of the nuisance shall not be inquired been repudiated, and it is well settled that municipal authorities cannot declare a thing a nuisance arbitrarily, or destroy valuable property which was lawfully erected or created, until this fact has been ascertained lawfully; and further, that where the power to declare what shall be a nuisance has been conferred expressly, such power is inoperative and void unless the thing is in fact a nuisance, or was created or erected after the passage of the ordinance and in defiance of it; and except in cases of emergency, or where the use is purely a nuisance, that fact should be established first by judicial adjudication.¹ It is into. The board decided that the nuisance existed on the lot of the defendant, and the fact being so determined, it made no difference from what cause it arose. It was necessary and proper that it should be removed. The evidence was therefore properly rejected."

In Green v. Savannah, 6 Ga. 1, the corporate authorities were empowered by their charter to pass such laws and ordinances as they might consider fit and proper to remove nuisances or causes of disease which might affect the citizens of Savannah or in any wise injure their health. An ordinance was passed under this authority prohibiting the cultivation of rice within the corporate limits. It was held that this was in effect a conclusive adjudication that rice growing, within the corporate jurisdiction, was in fact injurious to the public health.

In St. Louis v. Stern, 3 Mc App. 48, the above cases were cited, apparently with approval.

In Alabama it has been held that the action of a city in declaring a certain thing a nuisance is prima facie evidence of the fact. Montgomery v. Hutchinson, 13 Ala. 573.

The board of health of the town of Kirkwood, acting within the scope of its powers, duly adjudged a drain or sewer pipe which discharged sewage from the premises of the defendant into a public street of that town to be a nuisance, and thereon, pursuant to the ordinances of the town, a proceeding was instituted before the recorder of the town, against the defendant, for a failure to abate the nuisance within a specified time. It was held that in such a proceeding before the recorder, the adjudication of the board of health was prima facie evidence of the existence of a nuisance. Kirkwood v. Cairns, 44 Mo. App. 89.

In Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 497, Miller, J., said: "It is a doctrine not to be tolerated in this country, that a municipal corporation, without any general laws, either of the city or the state, within which a given structure can be shown to be a nuisance, can, by its mere declaration that it is one, subject it to removal by any person supposed to be aggrieved, or even by the city itself. This would place every house, every business, and all the property of the city at the said also, however,—and the statement is not irreconcilable with the previous proposition,—that where a municipal corporation is authorized by its charter uncontrolled will of the temporary local authorities."

The legislature can neither declare nor authorize a municipality to declare a building a nuisance because it obstructs a view of the sea or intercepts the breezes therefrom. Quintine v. Bay St. Louis, 64 Miss. 483, 60 Am. Rep. 62, 16 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 50.

A City Cannot Declare the Keeping of Bees to be a nuisance without determining whether it is so or not. Arkadelphia v. Clark (Ark., 1889), 27 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 586.

In St. Louis v. Shnuckelberg, 7 Mo. App. 536, where a dairy had been declared a nuisance by the board of health of the city of St. Louis and ordered to be abated, under power to declare and abate nuisances granted by the city charter, the person violating the order of the board to abate may show that the thing declared to be a nuisance is not so in fact, the action of the board of health in such cases not being conclusive. In this case Hayden, J., delivering the opinion of the court, says: "The question here is merely whether, when the thing condemned as a nuisance is not such by any law or ordinance, the decision of the board, when brought before a court, prevents all inquiry into the fact of a nuisance. In such cases we hold that their decision is not conclusive."

A clause in a charter giving the city power to declare what shall be a nuisance, and to remove the same, does not mean that a city council, by mere resolution or motion, may declare any particular thing a nuisance which has not theretofore been pronounced to be such by law or so adjudged by judicial determination. Only nuisances per se may be removed or abated summarily by the acts of individuals or by the public. Denver v. Mullen, 7 Colo. 345, 4 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 304.

Arkansas Stats. March 9, 1875, §§ 12, 42, do not authorize a city council to condemn as a nuisance any act or thing which in its nature, situation, or use does not come within the legal notion of a nuisance. Ward v. Little Rock, 41 Ark. 526, 8 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 397, 48 Am. Rep. 46.

Limekilns.—Under a power to remove nuisances and regulate the places where offensive trades are carried on, the city may not prohibit the operation of limekilns. State v. Mott, 61 Md. 297, 48 Am. Rep. 105.

Laundries.—The city ordinance which makes it an offense to keep a laundry, wherein clothes are cleansed for hire, within the limits of the largest part of the city, without regard to the character of the structure or the appliances used for the purpose, or the way in which the business is carried on, is unconstitutional and void. In re Sam Kee, 31 Fed. Rep. 680.

Dead Animals.—The seizure of dead hogs by a city inspector, under an ordinance directing that all dead animals be forthwith removed beyond the city limits, so as most effectually to secure the public health, is not warranted by the mere proof that they died by suffocation, and that animals so dying were sometimes taken to market and sold for food; but it must appear that they were, or would become, a nuisance. Underwood v. Green, 42 N. Y. 140. See River Rendering Co. v. Behr, 77 Mo. 91. Compare Alpers v. San Francisco, 32 Fed. Rep. 503; Louisville v. Wible, 84 Ky. 290.

Person Sick of Infectious Disease.—Under the provision, in the charter of the city of Utica, authorizing the common council to make and publish ordinances, by-laws, etc., for the purpose of abating and removing nuisances, they have no power to direct the removal of a person sick of an infectious or contagious disease from one place to another without his consent. A person sick of an infectious disease in his own house, or in suitable apartments at a public hotel or boarding-house, is not a nuisance. Boom v. Utica, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 104.

Use Authorized by Common Law or Statute.—Nothing is to be understood to be a nuisance which is authorized either by the common law or by statute. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, 67 Ind. 45, 33 Am. Rep. 73; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Joliet, 79 Ill. 25; Clark v. Syracuse, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 32. Thus, where a city declared the occupation by a railroad company of certain grounds, where it had been lawfully located, to be a nuisance, it was held that the declaration was a mere nullity, because in conflict with the superior law. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Joliet, 79 Ill. 25.

The Use of Steam Engines to Draw Trains of cars over the street railroad laid down by the Augusta and Somerville Railroad Company through Washington street, in the city of Augusta, is expressly authorized by acts of the legislature of Georgia and by the contracts and ordinances of the city of Augusta, and, being so authorized, the running of the said trains cannot be abated as a public nuisance, under the Revised Code of that state, even though such use tend to the immediate annoyance of the citizens in general. Vason v. South Carolina R. Co., 42 Ga. 631.

A City cannot Arbitrarily, by Ordinance, declare property a nuisance and destroy it, unless it is in fact a nuisance. When it is in fact not a nuisance, no authority to remove it is derived from the ordinance declaring it to be such. Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 497; Denver v. Mullen, 7 Colo. 345, 4 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 304; Cole v. Kegler, 64 Iowa 59; Chicago v. Laffin, 49 Ill. 172; New Orleans v. St. Louis Church, 11 La. Ann. 244; Salem v. Eastern R. Co., 98 Mass. 431, 96 Am. Dec. 650; Wreford v. People, 14 Mich. 41; Pieri v. Shieldsboro, 42 Miss. 493; Allison v. Richmond, 51 Mo. App. 133; State v. Jersey City, 29 N. J. L. 170; Babcock v. Buffalo, 56 N. Y. 268; Clark v. Syracuse, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 32.

Public Picnics and Public Dances are not in their nature nuisances. They are not in the list of common-law nuisances enumerated in to remove nuisances, generally speaking, the only restriction upon that right is, that what is done shall be for the public health, safety, and conventhe text-books. That the manner of conducting them may be productive of annoyance and injury to the public, will only authorize an ordinance directed against such manner of conduct. The fact that a privilege may be abused is no reason why it should be denied. Desplaines v. Boyer, 123 Ill. 348.

Slaughter-houses.—An ordinance of the city of New Orleans described the place where slaughter-houses must be located. Relying upon this designation of such place, the complainants secured land within its limits and proceeded thereon to erect houses and make other improvements for slaughtering purposes; the city afterwards amended the ordinances by making it unlawful to maintain slaughter-houses in the prescribed place, except permission be granted by the council of the city of New Orleans, and proceeded to prevent the complainants, who had no such permission, from carrying on their slaughtering business. It was held that the amendment was unconstitutional, because it would, in effect, deny the complainants the equal protection of the laws guaranteed by the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution. Barthel v. New Orleans, 24 Fed. Rep. 563, 9 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 509.

Nuisance Created by Municipality.—Under a city charter authorizing the city council, whenever the health of the city required it, to order any lot to be filled by the owner thereof, or, on default by him, to fill it itself and charge the expense to him, it was held that the city could not require the filling of a lot because of a nuisance created by itself. Hannibal v. Richards, 82 Mo. 330. And see Chicago v. Laffin, 49 Ill. 172; Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 270.

Creating New Class of Offenses.—The following cases support the doctrine that it is competent for the legislature to confer upon a municipality the authority to supersede the general law in respect to those matters which are found to be injurious in their locality, and to create, as to them, a new class of public offenses:

Georgia.—Green v. Savannah, 6 Ga. 1.

Illinois.—Roberts v. Ogle, 30 Ill. 459, 83 Am. Dec. 201; McPherson v. Chebanse, 114 Ill. 46, 55 Am. Rep. 857; Harbaugh v. Monmouth, 74 Ill. 367; Kettering v. Jacksonville, 50 Ill. 39; Goddard v. Jacksonville, 15 Ill. 589; Harmon v. Chicago, 110 Ill. 400, 51 Am. Rep. 698; North Chicago City R. Co. v. Lake View, 105 Ill. 207, 44 Am. Rep. 788; Harmison v. Lewiston, 46 Ill. App. 164.

Louisiana.—Milne v. Davidson, 5 Martin, N. S. (La.) 409, 16 Am. Dec. 189; Kennedy v. Phelps, 10 La. Ann. 227.

New York.—Metropolitan Board of Health v. Heister, 37 N. Y. 661.

North Carolina.—Hellen v. Noe, 3 Ired. (N. Car.) 493; Whitfield v. Longest, 6 Ired. (N. Car.) 271.

Pennsylvania.—Kennedy v. Board of Health, 2 Pa. St. 366. See also Tourne v. Lee, 8 Martin, N. S. (La.) 548, 20 Am. Dec. 260.

Under its charter power to prevent and remove all nuisances, it was held that a city had power to declare to be nuisances all steam grist-mills, saw-mills, or other machinery contained in buildings wholly or in part of wood, which arrangements, by reason of the defect or dilapidation of the building, the defective construction of the machinery, the worn-out condition of the boiler, or any other causes which are, or shall hereafter become, dangerous to persons or property. Green v. Lake, 60 Miss. 451.

Steam as Motive-power.—In North Chicago City R. Co. v. Lake View, 105 Ill. 207, 44 Am. Rep. 788, it was held that, under the authority of a charter giving the power to define and declare what shall be deemed a nuisance and to abate the same, a municipal corporation might pass an ordinance declaring the use of steam as a motive-power to propel any street-car or other vehicle upon or along any street, etc., in the town, to be a nuisance, in the absence of any legislative grant authorizing it. In delivering the opinion of the court in this case, Miller, J., said: "Town authorities have no power to pass an ordinance declaring a thing a nuisance which in fact is clearly not one. The adoption of such an ordinance would not be a legitimate exercise of the power granted, but, on the contrary, would be an abuse of it. But in doubtful cases, where a thing may or may not be a nuisance, depending upon a variety of circumstances requiring judgment and discretion on the part of the town authorities in exercising their legislative functions, under a general delegation of power like the one we are considering, their action, under such circumstances, would be conclusive of the question." The doctrine in this case was followed in Harmison v. Lewiston, 46 Ill. App. 164.

Dense Smoke.—In Harmon v. Chicago, 110 Ill. 400, 51 Am. Rep. 698, it was held that where a city was authorized to declare what should be a nuisance, and to abate the same, an ordinance declaring dense smoke emitted from the smokestack of any boat or locomotive or from any chimney of any building within the corporate limits, to be a nuisance, was valid and enforceable.

In St. Paul v. Gilfillan, 36 Minn. 298, where the charter of the city of St. Paul conferred no power to declare what should be nuisances, it was held that an ordinance declaring the emission of dense smoke from smokestacks and chimneys a public nuisance was unauthorized and void.

Hogs Running at Large.—Under the power to make ordinances for the removal of public nuisances, and also such necessary rules as may tend to the advantage, improvement, and good government of the town not inconsistent with the laws and constitution of the state, it was held that a municipal corporation may pass an ordinance declaring the running at large of hogs in the streets of the town a nuisance which may be abated. Hellen v. Noe, 3 Ired. (N. Car.) 493; Whit- ience.¹ But where the objectionable thing or property is clearly a nuisance per se, the power of the municipality to abate it is unquestioned.² An injunc-field v. Longest, 6 Ired. (N. Car.) 271. See also Tourne v. Lee, 8 Martin, N. S. (La.) 548, 20 Am. Dec. 260.

Where an incorporated town was authorized by the legislature to declare what should be nuisances, it was held that under this power an ordinance declaring that swine running at large were a nuisance, and providing for the abatement thereof, was valid. Roberts v. Ogle, 30 Ill. 459, 83 Am. Dec. 201.

Keeping Places of Business Open on Sunday.—Under the power to regulate the police of the city or village, and pass and enforce all necessary police regulations, a municipal corporation may pass an ordinance prohibiting persons from keeping their places of business open on Sunday. McPherson v. Chebanse, 114 Ill. 46, 55 Am. Rep. 857.

Private Hospital.—Under the authority to make and pass such by-laws as shall be deemed necessary to maintain the cleanliness and salubrity of the city, it was held that a municipal corporation had the power to pass an ordinance prohibiting the erection of a private hospital. Milne v. Davidson, 5 Martin, N. S. (La.) 409, 16 Am. Dec. 189. Porter, J., in delivering the opinion in this case, said: "The authority of the city council to make the regulation complained of cannot be tested by the principles of the common law in relation to nuisances. No such guide is given to them by the charter. No such limit can be inferred from the motives which we must suppose induced such a grant of power, nor from the language by which it is conferred. The police of cities requires many regulations which grow out of their situation, their climates, and their population; and many things which would not amount to a nuisance at common law might be hurtful here."

Spirituuous Liquors.—Under proper legislation a municipal corporation may make the sale of spirituuous liquors within its jurisdiction a nuisance. Goddard v. Jacksonville, 15 Ill. 589; Kettering v. Jacksonville, 50 Ill. 39; Harbaugh v. Monmouth, 74 Ill. 367.

Smoking in Street-cars.—In State v. Heidenhain, 42 La. Ann. 483, 21 Am. St. Rep. 388, it was held that the city of New Orleans had the power to adopt an ordinance prohibiting smoking in street-cars as a nuisance.

Wooden Buildings within Certain Limits.—A wooden building is not in itself a nuisance, but it may become so when it injures surrounding property; and a municipal corporation may pass an ordinance providing for the summary removal of such building. Baumgartner v. Hasty, 100 Ind. 575, 50 Am. Rep. 830. See Miller v. Sergeant (Ind. App., 1894), 37 N. E. Rep. 418. Compare Pye v. Peterson, 45 Tex. 312.

Building Erected in Defiance of Ordinance.—Where an ordinance was passed establishing fire limits and determining the kinds of buildings which might be erected therein, and afterward, and in defiance of such ordinance, a wooden building was erected within the limits, it was held that such building was a nuisance per se under the circumstances, and that it might be summarily abated. Miller v. Sergeant (Ind. App., 1894), 37 N. E. Rep. 418. See Baumgartner v. Hasty, 100 Ind. 575, 50 Am. Rep. 830.

Cases of Necessity.—Under the exercise of the police power, it may be conceded that municipalities can declare and abate nuisances in case of necessity, without citation and without adjudication as to whether there is in fact a nuisance. Joyce v. Woods, 78 Ky. 386.

2. Nuisances Per Se.—In North Chicago City R. Co. v. Lake View, 105 Ill. 207, 44 Am. Rep. 788, the court said: "There are many things which courts, without proof, will declare nuisances. Such, for instance, would be the digging of a pit, or the erection of a house or other obstruction, in a public highway; and an ordinance passed by a town or city having, as in the present case, a general power over the subject, declaring such obstructions nuisances, would be valid on its face, and a conviction might properly be had under it, without any extrinsic proof to show that the act complained of was in fact a nuisance. In all such cases it is sufficient to show the existence of the fact constituting the nuisance."

Bowling Alley.—In Tanner v. Albion, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 121, it was held that a bowling alley kept for gain or hire is a public nuisance at common law, and that, therefore, under a village charter authorizing the trustees to pass by-laws relating to nuisances, they have the power to make a by-law prohibiting the keeping of bowling alleys for hire.

In Updike v. Campbell, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 570, the above case was referred to as settling the doctrine, so far as that court was concerned, that a bowling alley kept for gain is tion will lie restraining a city from interference with the use of property which has not been lawfully ascertained and declared to be a nuisance.¹

c. METHOD OF ABATEMENT.—The legislature has power to invest municipal corporations with authority to abate public nuisances without resorting to legal proceedings.² The municipality may take whatever means are necessary to abate a nuisance, even though such means involve the destruction of the property.³ But a city has no power to appropriate private property without a nuisance; but some doubt was expressed as to the correctness of the decision. Compare State v. Hall, 32 N. J. L. 158; People v. Judges, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 129.

Hogpen in City.—In St. Louis v. Stern, 3 Mo. App. 48, the court held that where a nuisance in a city is a nuisance per se—in that particular case a hogpen in the city of St. Louis—the action of the board of health of the city, within the scope of its granted powers in condemning it as a nuisance, is conclusive.

Slaughter-house in City.—It has been held that a slaughter-house in a city is a nuisance per se, and may be abated by municipal corporations without judicial determination. Harrison v. Lewiston, 46 Ill. App. 164. See also Metropolitan Board of Health v. Heister, 37 N. Y. 661.

Floating Storehouse on Public Rivers.—Where an individual constructed, without grant, a floating storehouse, or vessel for receiving and delivering goods and merchandise, in a public river, it was held that he was guilty of maintaining a public nuisance which a corporation might abate summarily. Hart v. Albany, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 571. See People v. Vanderbilt, 28 N. Y. 396, 84 Am. Dec. 351.

Houses of Ill Fame are nuisances which municipal corporations have the authority, usually expressly conferred, to suppress by all proper means, even to forbidding the use of property for this purpose. Rogers v. People, 9 Colo. 450, 59 Am. Rep. 146; State v. Williams, 11 S. Car. 288; State v. De Bar, 58 Mo. 395; State v. Clarke, 54 Mo. 17, 14 Am. Rep. 471; Childress v. Wilson, 14 Tex. App. 592; People v. Miller, 38 Hun (N. Y.) 82.

Under its police power a city may, by ordinance, suppress bawdy houses and prescribe a punishment for the violation of the ordinance, even though the offense is made punishable by the general statutes. Wong v. Astoria, 13 Oregon 538; People v. Hanrahan, 75 Mich. 611, 27 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 605; although it may not have exclusive jurisdiction in such proceedings. State v. Wister, 62 Mo. 592.

Exhibition of Stud Horse.—The exhibition of a stud horse on a street is a nuisance per se, and may be prohibited by ordinance. Nolin v. Franklin, 4 Verg. (Tenn.) 163.

Offensive Odors and Gases.—Where it appears that the odors and gases from a "fat-rendering establishment" produce headache, nausea, and vomiting, and that citizens are therefore compelled to close their doors and windows both by night and by day, and interfered with in the enjoyment of their meals and sleep, such establishment is a nuisance per se, and it is the duty of the board of health in such cases to take the proper measures for its abatement. Board of Health v. Lederer (N. J., 1894), 29 Atl. Rep. 444.

When gas furnished by a gas company becomes a dangerous and offensive nuisance by reason of defective pipes, a municipality has power to prohibit its continuance, and an injunction restraining its officers from abating the nuisance should be dissolved. Butler's Appeal (Pa., 1885), 1 Cent. Rep. 594.

Wells in Streets.—In Ferrenbach v. Turner, 86 Mo. 416, it was held that the city of St. Louis had a right to abolish wells situated within the limits of the public streets.

Obstruction in Highway.—The town's supervisors have power, and it is their duty, to cause a summary removal of any public nuisance found in any highway under their jurisdiction, or any encroachment upon the highway which unnecessarily incommodes or impedes the lawful use thereof by the public; and to this end they may compel the overseer of the proper district to abate such obstruction or other public nuisance. Hubbell v. Goodrich, 37 Wis. 84.

Fencing a Lot.—The board of health have power to fence a lot for the purpose of rethe owner's consent, for the purpose of abating a nuisance existing on adjoining land.¹

Notice.—It is usual to give notice of the nuisance to the wrongdoer, so as to give him an opportunity to appear and be heard before the authorities proceed to abate; but in cases of emergency or gross negligence, notice is not necessary.²

moving the cause of a nuisance. Wistar v. Addicks, 9 Phila. (Pa.) 145.

Destruction of Buildings.—In certain cases buildings may be in such a state as to be common nuisances; where this is so they may be lawfully removed in pursuance of an ordinance to that effect. Ferguson v. Selma, 43 Ala. 398; Harvey v. DeWoody, 18 Ark. 252; Baumgartner v. Hasty, 100 Ind. 575, 50 Am. Rep. 830; Miller v. Sergeant (Ind. App., 1894), 37 N. E. Rep. 418; Green v. Lake, 60 Miss. 451; Meeker v. Van Rensselaer, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 397; Van Wormer v. Albany, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 263; Fields v. Stokley, 99 Pa. St. 306, 44 Am. Rep. 109.

Tenements consisting of two old, intrinsically valueless houses, on a lot in an improving and flourishing part of the city, which are filthy, and crowded with filthy tenants, and which have been occupied by patients affected with the smallpox, and which have also been condemned as a nuisance by the board of health of the city, under the provisions of its charter, may be removed by the city authorities. Ferguson v. Selma, 43 Ala. 398.

An act of the legislature which empowers taxing districts to condemn and abate as nuisances all houses which shall be found unhealthful is not in violation of the provision of the statute which provides that no man's particular service shall be demanded, or property taken or applied to public use, without the consent of his representatives, or without just compensation being made therefor. This inhibition has no application as a limitation of the exercise of those police powers which are necessary to the safety and tranquillity of every well-ordered community. Theilan v. Porter, 14 Lea (Tenn.) 622, 9 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 486, 52 Am. Rep. 173.

The mayor, councilman, and constable of the town of Des Arc, being sued individually in an action of trespass for tearing down the plaintiff's house, justified under an ordinance of the town declaring the house a nuisance in that it was unoccupied by the plaintiff or tenants, but was used by others in such way as to imperil the town by fire, and also in such a manner as to make it offensive to the citizens of the town and to endanger their lives, and providing that if the plaintiff did not, within a specified time after notice, abate the nuisance, the constable should proceed to do so; the justification was held sufficient on demurrer. Harvey v. DeWoody, 18 Ark. 252.

Where certain parties were engaged in manufacturing fertilizers, and it was ascertained that their building contained putrid and decaying animal matter and offensive substances emitting noxious and unwholesome smells, in violation of an ordinance of the city; and the street commissioner, for the purpose of abating the nuisance, took off the eccentric rods of the machinery for grinding baked blood, removed the belting and other parts of the machinery, and committed other damage, it was held that such abatement was justifiable. Manhattan Mfg., etc., Co. v. Van Keuren, 23 N. J. Eq. 251.

Removal of Drains.—It is said by the Supreme Court of Rhode Island, in the case of State v. McCulla, 16 R. I. 196, that Pub. Laws R. I. 1865, c. 580, empowering the board of aldermen of the city of Providence to provide for the summary removal of drains, etc., prejudicial to the public health, and to impose penalties for the violation of the regulation made by them, in pursuance of the authority given, to be recovered upon complaint and warrant before the police court, is repealed by Pub. Laws R. I. 1885, c. 495, which authorizes town councils to order such removal, and imposes a penalty for noncompliance with such order.

1. Appropriating Private Property.—Cavanagh v. Boston, 139 Mass. 426, 9 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 311, 52 Am. Rep. 716, holds that, in the absence of statutory authority, neither the board of health nor the city council can erect a dam on a person's land, without his consent, for the purpose of abating a nuisance on adjacent land. Such acts being beyond the power and authority of the common council of a city, the city cannot be held responsible in damages. But it seems that the liability, if any, rests upon the individuals who perform the acts.

Practically the same conclusion as that reached in the foregoing case was arrived at in New York. A statute was passed in 1871 authorizing the draining of private lots in the city of New York by the department of public works, on the certificate of the board of health that the same was necessary, etc., and providing for collecting the expense by an assessment on the property benefited. It was, however, held unconstitutional in making no provision for compensation to the landowners. Matter of Cheesbrough, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 561. And see Read v. Cambridge, 126 Mass. 427; Cambridge v. Munroe, 126 Mass. 496; Bancroft v. Cambridge, 126 Mass. 438; Welch v. Boston, 126 Mass. 442; Farnsworth v. Boston, 126 Mass. 1; Nickerson v. Boston, 131 Mass. 306.

Supp. 666; People v. Board of Health (Supreme Ct.), 12 N. Y. Supp. 561; Weil v. Ricord, 24 N. J. Eq. 176; Teass v. St. Albans, 38 W. Va. 1; Orlando v. Pragg (Fla., 1893), 12 So. Ordinarily the municipal authorities will serve an order for the removal of a nuisance, upon the occupant or owner of the property upon which it is found, and in case of his disobedience they will proceed to abate of their own motion.¹ But this summary method is not exclusive. Municipal corporations may invoke the aid of the courts.

d. LIABILITY OF MUNICIPALITY.—It is not only the right, but the duty, of a municipal corporation to exercise control over nuisances, and it will be held accountable for any neglect in this respect.² On the other hand, if property is destroyed in order to abate an alleged nuisance, in pursuance of an ordinance, the municipality will be held subject to the same liabilities as an individual if, as a matter of fact, the thing abated is not a nuisance.³ Where the Cases of Necessity.—Baumgartner v. Hasty, 100 Ind. 575, 50 Am. Rep. 830; Miller v. Sergeant (Ind. App., 1894), 37 N. E. Rep. 418; Joyce v. Woods, 78 Ky. 386; Salem v. Eastern R. Co., 98 Mass. 431, 96 Am. Dec. 650; Weil v. Ricord, 24 N. J. Eq. 176.

In Miller v. Sergeant (Ind. App., 1894), 37 N. E. Rep. 418, Lotz, J., said, "When a public nuisance creates an imminent danger, a necessity for immediate action arises. If the public authorities were compelled to give notice and await the action of courts or other bodies, the delay might result in public calamity. The right of self-preservation is one of the first laws of nature, and applies to organized societies as well as individuals."

Gross Negligence.—Where electric wires had become uninsulated and in need of repairs, and were dangerous to human life, it was held that the commissioner of public works might abate them as a nuisance without notice to the owners of the electric plant, since it was the duty of the owners to maintain a proper inspection of such of their apparatus as might become dangerous, and a neglect so to do was gross negligence on their part. U. S. Illuminating Co. v. Grant (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 788.

1. Order for Removal.—Orlando v. Pragg (Fla., 1893), 12 So. Rep. 568; Salem v. Eastern R. Co., 98 Mass. 431, 96 Am. Dec. 650; People v. Board of Health, 58 Hun (N. Y.) 595; Lydecker v. Eells (Supreme Ct.), 3 N. Y. Supp. 323; Philadelphia v. Dungan, 124 Pa. St. 52; Eddy v. Board of Health, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 94. Compare New Rochelle Board of Health v. Valentine (Supreme Ct.), 11 N. Y. Supp. 112.

An order of a board of health, under the Mass. Gen. S. at., c. 26, § 3, for removing a nuisance, need not prescribe a mode for the removal; and if it does prescribe a mode, the occupant or owner of the property on which the nuisance is found is not restricted thereto. If an order of a board of health prescribes a mode for removal, and the occupant or owner of the property upon which the nuisance is found fails to remove it, the board in proceeding to remove it under section 10 is not restricted to that mode, but may adopt any which is suitable, even if, in so doing, it is necessary to subvert soil adjoining that on which the nuisance exists. Salem v. Eastern R. Co., 98 Mass. 431, 96 Am. Dec. 650.

Upon Whom Order Served.—It was held in Philadelphia v. Laughlin, 10 Pa. Co. Ct. 49, that notice to abate a nuisance must be given to the registered owner, if there is one. And see Philadelphia v. Dungan, 124 Pa. St. 52.

Under the N. Y. Laws 1885, c. 207, §§ 3, 4, requiring the order of the board of health for the removal of a special nuisance to be served on the owner and any occupant of the premises where the nuisance exists, and, in case of disobedience, authorizing the abatement of the nuisance and charging the expenses to the occupant, an order for abatement directed to one having an interest in the premises whereon the nuisance exists, and served on his agent who is the occupant of the premises, does not require the agent to abate the nuisance. Lydecker v. Eells (Supreme Ct.), 3 N. Y. Supp. 324.

It is not essential to the validity of the service of a special order made by a municipality, requiring the abatement of a nuisance, that it be served on the occupant of the premises whereon the nuisance exists within the territorial jurisdiction of the board; a service outside of the jurisdiction of the board is sufficient. Gould v. Rochester, 105 N. Y. 46, 19 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 542.

2. Neglect in Matter of Nuisances.—Parker v. Macon, 39 Ga. 725; Riley v. Kansas City, 69 Mo. 102, 33 Am. Rep. 491. See also Bassett v. St. Joseph, 53 Mo. 290, 14 Am. Rep. 446.

A two-story brick wall of a house that has been burned down for some months, standing at the edge of the sidewalk, and so decayed or dilapidated as to endanger the lives of persons passing along the street, is a nuisance which the mayor and council are bound to abate, although it be private property; and if they neglect to have it removed, and injury results to any person in consequence thereof, the city is liable for damages sustained. Parker v. Macon, 39 Ga. 725.

3. Yates v. Milwaukee, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 497; Americus v. Mitchell (Ga., 1888), 5 S. E. Rep. 201; Orlando v. Pragg (Fla., 1893), 12 So. Rep. 368; Clark v. Syracuse, 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 32; Underwood v. Green, 42 N. Y. 140; People v. Board of Health, 140 N. Y. 1.

In Cole v. Kegler, 64 Iowa 59, 5 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 361, it was held that if the authorities of a town abate a supposed nuisance under the authority of an ordinance, they are subject to the same liability therefor as an individual, unless it be established that the property destroyed constituted a nuisance. The owner of the property destroyed has a right to have recourse to either of the nuisance exists, the abatement must be made without inflicting unnecessary injury.¹

legal remedies—to test the validity of the action of the town council by certiorari, or to sue the authorities for damages sustained.

Destruction of Buildings.—The following cases hold that buildings which are not nuisances cannot be destroyed: Colchester v. Brooke, 7 Q. B. 339; Brightman v. Bristol, 65 Me. 426, 20 Am. Rep. 711; Allison v. Richmond, 51 Mo. App. 136; Welch v. Stowell, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 332; Miller v. Burch, 32 Tex. 208, 5 Am. Rep. 242.

Encroachment on Highways.—Where the trustees of a village, empowered by charter to declare and abate nuisances, declared an encroachment on one of the village streets to be a nuisance, and the defendants, being thereupon deputed by them so to do, removed it, and, in an action by the owner to recover damages for such removal, the evidence in the case did not establish a nuisance in fact, it was held that the defendants were not protected by the determination and direction of the trustees. Howard v. Robbins, 1 Lans. (N. Y.) 63.

Removing Dams.—Where the board of health of a city determined that certain dams in the city were nuisances, and ordered them removed, and in doing so acted on its own inspection and knowledge of such nuisances, it was held that the remedy was by an action at law for damages against the members of the board, if such nuisances did not exist. People v. Board of Health, 140 N. Y. 1.

1. Power to be Reasonably Exercised.—Colchester v. Brooke, 7 Q. B. 339; Allison v. Richmond, 51 Mo. App. 136; Brightman v. Bristol, 65 Me. 426, 20 Am. Rep. 711; People v. Board of Health, 140 N. Y. 1; Babcock v. Buffalo, 56 N. Y. 268; Moody v. Niagara County, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 660; Weil v. Ricord, 24 N. J. Eq. 169; Miller v. Burch, 32 Tex. 208, 5 Am. Rep. 242. See also Baker v. Boston, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 184, 22 Am. Dec. 421.

Where the Fact of a Nuisance is Evident, the city is then under the obligation to exercise the power of abatement in a reasonable manner, so as to do least harm to private rights; and if it exercises that power in a careless, negligent, or unreasonable manner, so as to produce unnecessary damage, it will be liable for the damage caused by such negligence. Orlando v. Pragg (Fla., 1893), 12 So. Rep. 368. See also U. S. Illuminating Co. v. Grant (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 794.

A city has no right, without the owner's consent, to raise the grade of a lot higher than is necessary for the abatement of the nuisance caused by water stagnating there. Bush v. Dubuque, 69 Iowa 233.

The power of the board of health does not extend to the removal of tenants in houses and closing up the latter, unless justified by the existence of a pestilential disease; and such action will be restrained by injunction. Eddy v. Board of Health, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 94.

When power is given to the authorities of a city, by its charter, to direct the digging down, draining, filling up, or fencing of lots or parcels of ground, in all cases where such digging down, draining, or filling up or fencing is necessary to abate a nuisance, it is the duty of the court to see that the power conferred is reasonably exercised, and in such mode as to do the least injury to private rights. State v. Newark, 34 N. J. L. 264.

Suppression of Use.—If the use to which a building is being put is so hazardous as to be a nuisance, this would authorize only the suppression of the use, not the destruction of the building; and the city, in undertaking to exercise such power, invades and trespasses upon complainant's rights, and must answer for the consequences. Brightman v. Bristol, 65 Me. 436, 20 Am. Rep. 711.

Thus, where a building was old, and there were stored therein a variety of articles such as coal, kindling-wood, old papers, shavings, boxes, etc., it was held that the city council was not justified in tearing it down on the ground that it was in a dangerous situation and annoying to the public, and that the city was liable to damages. Allison v. Richmond, 51 Mo. App. 137.

Livery Stable.—Where a building which has been used formerly as a livery stable had become old and dilapidated, and was resorted to as a "sink," it was held that it could not be demolished by the authority of the corporation, although the corporation was empowered by charter to remove nuisances. Miller v. Burch, 32 Tex. 208, 5 Am. Rep. 242.

Houses of Ill Fame.—The statute empowering the common council of the city of Detroit "to make all such by-laws and ordinances as may be deemed expedient for the purpose of suppressing houses of ill fame within the limits of the city," does not authorize the common council, by ordinance and resolution, to require the city marshal to demolish a house occupied as a house of ill fame and adjudged by such council to be a common nuisance. The power to abate a nuisance is limited to the removal of that in which the nuisance consists. Welch v. Stowell, 2 Dougl. (Mich.) 332; Moody v. Niagara County, 46 Barb. (N. Y.) 660.

Attorney's Fee Bill.—An attorney in rendering his bill may use such abbreviations as are commonly used in the English language, under the statutes of 2 Geo. II., c. 23, and 12 Geo. II., c. 13, § 5. A bill containing the following abbreviations: "Drawg. declar. ffs. 15, Instruns. for case, attg. you in long confce., preparing aftt.," was held to be clearly intelligible, and therefore good. Frowd v. Stillard, 4 C. & P. 51, 19 E. C. L. 268.

Where the defendant is defaulted, and the cause is heard before the court without a jury, a fee bill will not be rejected as unintelligible if the abbreviations therein can be understood by the court. Myers v. Shoneman, 90 Ill. 80.

"O. F. B. A."—Where a writ was indorsed "Dr. Peter Brudgeman, O. F. B. A.," it was held to be clear, from the remainder of the writ, that "Odd Fellows Building Association" was meant. Odd Fellows Bldg. Assoc. v. Hogan, 28 Ark. 261.

"—Double Comma."—In Steinmetz v. Versailles, etc., Turnpike Co., 57 Ind. 457, it was held that the use of a "—" following the name of a subscriber to articles of association under the name of a town, city, or county, sufficiently designated the subscriber's residence.

III. JUDICIAL NOTICE.—Courts will determine the meaning of customary abbreviations of common words,³ names of places,⁴ and Christian names, without proof.⁵ A judge also takes judicial notice of abbreviations customarily chants' Nat. Bank, 66 Ind. 353, it was held that where a note was made payable at "Citz. Bank of Noblesville, Indiana," the jury might infer that the note was payable at "Citizens Bank," etc. The court said: "One other question is made, which, as it will arise upon another trial, we deem it proper to decide, and that is this: Is the note set forth in the complaint a commercial note; that is, does it appear to be payable at a certain existing bank? It seems to us that the abbreviation 'Citz.' plainly means Citizens, and that the note appeared to be payable at the existing Citizens Bank of Noblesville, Indiana. If the jury might so have found upon it, then it seems to us it was admissible in evidence. In Miller v. Powers, 16 Ind. 410, it was decided that the court, sitting as a jury, might infer from the face of a note payable 'at the Br. at Fort Wayne of the Bk. of the State of Indiana,' that it was intended to be made payable 'at the Branch at Fort Wayne of the Bank of the State of Indiana.' See Parkinson v. Finch, 45 Ind. 122."

Abbreviation of Amount of Note.—It is not error to admit in evidence the note sued on because the amount thereof is written "four hund. and two and $\frac{10}{100}$ dollars." Glenn v. Porter, 72 Ind. 525.

Int. a 6% p. a.—The form "int.," inserted after the words "value received," in a promissory note, is an abbreviation of the word interest, and should be construed the same as if the entire word was written out. The letter "a." when used in a note as above, stands for the word "at," and "6%," when used as here, stands for six per cent, and the letters "p." and "a." when used in the connection here used, mean per annum. Belford v. Beatty, 145 Ill. 414.

"Com." and "Co." are well-understood abbreviations of the word Company, when used as a part of the name of a commercial firm. Keith v. Sturges, 51 Ill. 142.

Dolls. for Dollars.—In Salisbury v. Shirley, 66 Cal. 223, it was held that the use of the abbreviation "dolls." for dollars, in an assessment, was sufficient.

Supt.—The court knows judicially that the abbreviation "supt." stands for the word superintendent, and that a superintendent is a managing officer. South Missouri Land Co. v. Jeffries, 40 Mo. App. 360.

Adm'r.—The appellate court will take judicial notice of the fact that the word "adm'r.," following the plaintiff's name in the complaint, is an abbreviation for the word administrator. Moseley v. Mastin, 37 Ala. 216.

C., B. & Q. R. R. Co.—Courts will not take judicial notice that "C., B. & Q. R. R. Co." stands for Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Co. Accola v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 70 Iowa 185. Compare Ripley v. Case, 78 Mich. 126, 18 Am. St. Rep. 428.

"Ex. A" for Exhibit A.—Dugan v. Trisler, 69 Ind. 555.

Danger of Trusting Courts to Take Judicial Notice of Abbreviations.—In a note to 2 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 231, Mr. Austin Abbott points out the danger of relying upon the courts taking judicial notice of matters of fact. And in Abbott's Trial Brief, p. 2, he refers to this note and illustrates it by the case of Hulbert v. Carver, 37 Barb. (N. Y.) 62, where the court said: "We can easily guess what was intended by the letters 'Ills. cy.,' but that is not the mode which the law adopts to ascertain the meaning of doubtful terms. It was the duty of the party relying on these terms, as affecting the contract of deposit, to show by parol what was intended."

4. "Ind." for Indiana.—In Burroughs v. Wilson, 59 Ind. 536, it was held that a note payable at a certain bank of a certain place in "Ind.," was payable at a bank in the state of Indiana.

Contra—"La." for Louisiana.—In Russell v. Martin, 15 Tex. 238, the court said: "The only point in this case is, Can the court judicially know that a note payable in New Orleans, La., is payable in the state of Louisiana? The question was directly decided in the negative in the case of Ellis v. Park, 8 Tex. 205." Ellis v. Park, 8 Tex. 205, was a case in which the court refused to recognize "Mo." for Missouri. See also Willard v. Conduit, 10 Tex. 213; and see Miller v. Miller (S. Car., 1895), 21 S. E. Rep. 254, set out in the next note.

Bail Bond.—In stating the place where the accused is bound to appear, a bail bond is sufficient if it specifies the name of the court or magistrate, and of the county. The bond in this case was conditioned that the accused "shall be and appear before the honorable District Court on the first day of the next term thereof, to be begun and holden at the court-house in Carrizo Springs, in said county, on," etc. The bond nowhere recited the name of a county, but recited that the accused had been arrested by virtue of a warrant issued by "J. R. Sweeten, J.P., Pr. No. 1 D. C." It was held that the court was not authorized to presume that the initials "D. C." signified "Dimmit county," nor that "Carrizo Springs" was in Dimmit county; in this respect the bond failed to state the name of the county before the District Court of which the accused was bound to appear, and for that reason the motion to set aside the judgment nisi should have prevailed. Vivian v. State, 16 Tex. App. 262.

Time.—Courts take judicial notice of abbreviations ordinarily used to designate time, such as those for month, forenoon, afternoon, etc.²

IV. PAROL EVIDENCE.—Parol evidence is admissible to explain the meaning of abbreviations in written instruments, and to show the words for which they stand.³ Although parol evidence is admissible to show the sense in which

1. "J. P." for Justice of the Peace.—Shattuck v. People, 5 Ill. 477; Livingston v. Kettelle, 6 Ill. 116, 41 Am. Dec. 166; Scudder v. Scudder, 10 N. J. L. 340; Hawkins v. State, 136 Ind. 630; Com. v. Melling, 14 Gray (Mass.) 388.

A certificate of marriage was certified by one Michael Naughton, with the letters "J.P., C. Co., Ga.," written after his name. This was held insufficient to prove the official character of the alleged justice, in the absence of any explanatory evidence. The court said: "It seems that the plaintiff endeavored to prove a fact of marriage and not a marriage in fact. Of course, it being true that the alleged marriage ceremony was observed in the state of Georgia, it became necessary to the establishment of its validity to show what the law of that state is on this subject, and a strict compliance with every requisite in that law to establish a valid marriage. The certificate of Michael Naughton, with the letters 'J.P., C. Co., Ga.,' written after his name, that he had performed the ceremony, was introduced. No explanation was in evidence as to the meaning to be attached to these letters 'J.P., C. Co., Ga.' Of course this was fatal, in the absence of explanation." Miller v. Miller (S. Car., 1895), 21 S. E. Rep. 254.

"N. P." for Notary Public.—Rowley v. Berrian, 12 Ill. 199.

C. P. C. C.—In Buell v. State, 72 Ind. 523, it was held that, as courts take judicial knowledge of the signatures of their officers, where the signature affixed to the jurat in an affidavit on which an information was based was "Rufus P. Wells, C. P. C. C.," the Supreme Court would presume that the court in which such information was filed knew such signature to be that of its clerk.

2. Hedderich v. State, 101 Ind. 564, 51 Am. Rep. 768.

"Dec." for December.—Perdue v. Fraley, 92 Ga. 780.

"Octb." for October.—Kearns v. State, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 336.

"Feby." for February.—Cutting v. Conklin, 28 Ill. 506.

"A. M." and "P. M." for forenoon and afternoon respectively. Hedderich v. State, 101 Ind. 564, 51 Am. Rep. 768.

"A. D." for Anno Domini.—Brown v. State, 16 Tex. App. 245; State v. Hodgeden, 3 Vt. 481; Com. v. Clark, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 596.

"Ms." for Months.—Dana v. Fiedler, 12 N. Y. 40, 62 Am. Dec. 130.

Printer's Marks.—The court cannot know officially the meaning of the printer's marks "Oct. 3, 4t," at the foot of an advertisement, nor can it give interpretation to them without evidence as to their meaning. Johnson v. Robertson, 31 Md. 489. Here the court said: "At the bottom of the printed slip are the following letters and figures, 'Oct. 4, 4t,' which the counsel for the appellee has contended supplies the defect of the certificate, and proves that the publication was made according to the court's order. In support of this argument it has been said that these marks mean 'October 3d, four times,' showing the date of the first insertion to be the 3d of October; and we are asked so to interpret them, and to infer that the publication was made during the four successive weeks next after the 3d of October, 1861. But we are not at liberty to make any such inference, in the absence of further proof on the subject. This court cannot know officially the meaning of the printer's marks at the foot of the advertisement. They most probably indicate merely the directions placed upon the advertisement in the printing office when it went into the compositor's hands, to indicate when and how often it was intended to be published, and cannot show that it was in fact so published. The certificate in plain terms states that the publication was made prior to the first day of March, 1862; this language is susceptible of but one interpretation, and cannot be construed to mean that it was made before the 10th day of November, 1861, as required by the court's order."

Anderson, 104 Ind. 578; Jaqua v. Witham, etc., Co., 106 Ind. 546; Hite v. State, 9 Yerg. (Tenn.) 357.

Abstract of Title.—In Converse v. Wead, 142 Ill. 132, the court admitted a witness, who was familiar with the system of entries and making of abstracts by abstract makers, to explain certain abbreviations used in an abstract of title; citing with approval 1 AM. & ENG. ENCYC. LAW (1st ed.) 15. See, generally, the title ABSTRACT OF TITLE.

Stock Brokers.—In Storey v. Salomon, 6 Daly (N. Y.) 531, 71 N. Y. 420, it was held that the parties were in the habit of using particular abbreviations or characters, and their conventional meaning, it is inadmissible to show the intention of a party in making use of them.⁹ It has been said that in order to introduce parol evidence to explain the sense in which characters or letters which have not acquired a legal signification were used in a contract, it is necessary to aver in the pleading the meaning the party desires to attribute to them.¹

Usage.—Parol evidence of usage and custom may be given to explain abbreviations.²

V. DEEDS, TAX PROCEEDINGS, AND DESCRIPTIONS OF LAND.—In general the principles governing the effect of abbreviations in conveyances, tax assessments, and descriptions of land generally, do not differ from those applicable to the use of abbreviations in other instruments. Reference, therefore, should be made to the preceding sections. As, however, there have been a large number of decisions upon the effect of abbreviated descriptions of land, it has been thought more useful to the practitioner to gather them in one subdivision of this article. Well-known abbreviations may be used in conveyances, and are sufficient; but vague, uncertain, and arbitrary abbreviations are not permissible. In tax proceedings perhaps more strictness is required in description than in an ordinary conveyance.³

the evidence of stock brokers was admissible to explain abbreviated expressions used in a writing of the kind known among stock brokers as a "stock privilege" and of the special nature known as a "straddle."

Contract—Statute of Frauds.—Where a memorandum in writing was to the effect that W. was to deliver to C. and R. a certain number of "C. L. R. P. oats," it was held not error to admit parol evidence to show that the same number of carloads of Texas rust-proof oats was meant. Although, under the statute of frauds, an agreement of this character, where the value of the goods is over fifty dollars, must be in writing to bind the promisor, yet an ambiguity, such as appears in this case, in the writing, may be explained by parol. Wilson v. Coleman, 81 Ga. 297.

Well-known Mercantile Abbreviations which have a fixed meaning known to dealers and understood by the parties using them, may be explained by oral testimony, and may be effectual as a memorial of what was originally agreed. Heideman v. Wolfstein, 12 Mo. App. 366; Salmon Falls Mfg. Co. v. Goddard, 14 How. (U. S.) 446.

Wills.—Where a testator bequeathed to his children the sum of i. x. x. and o. x. x., parol evidence was received to the effect that the testator in his business as a jeweler had used the ciphers in dispute to indicate respectively £100 and £200. Kell v. Charmer, 23 Beav. 195.

The word "mod." occurred in the codicil of the will of a sculptor. Opinions of experts differed as to whether "models" was meant, and Lord Brougham decided that a formal bequest of the models in the will could not be revoked by such an abbreviation in the codicil. Goblet v. Beechey, 3 Sim. 24, 2 R. & M. 624.

A testator devised his real estate under the description:

"Sixty acres Se 25, toon 7, } Jasper County,
"Forty acres Se 24, toon 6, } State of Iowa."
It was held that "Se" meant "section," and that it was competent to prove by parol in what township and range the testator owned the above land, and no other. Chambers v. Watson, 60 Iowa 339, 46 Am. Rep. 70.

A Docket Entry of Justice's Judgment—Parol Inadmissible.—In Rood v. School Dist. No. 7, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 502, it was held that parol evidence was inadmissible to show that the letters "P." and "D." in the docket entry of the judgment, meant "plaintiff" and "defendant." The court says: "It requires no argument or authority to show that an ambiguity apparent on the face of a transcript of judgment cannot be explained by parol evidence. The evidence received for the purpose of explaining the meaning of the letters 'P.' and 'D.' was clearly inadmissible."

Jaqua v. Witham, etc., Co., 106 Ind. 545. In this case the court said: "The defendant offered himself as a witness to prove what his intention was in the use of the abbreviations and characters contained in his order for brackets, set out in the second paragraph of the complaint, and which had been previously read in evidence; but the court refused to permit the proposed proof to be made, allowing the defendant only to testify as to his understanding as to the conventional meaning of the abbreviations and characters in question."

1. American Express Co. v. Lesem, 39 Ill. 333; U. S. v. Hardyman, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 179. See also Barry v. Coombe, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 653.

2. Barton v. Anderson, 104 Ind. 578; Jaqua v. Witham, etc., Co., 106 Ind. 545; Collender v. Dinsmore, 55 N. Y. 200, 14 Am. Rep. 224. See the title USAGES AND CUSTOMS.

Contracts.—Where a written contract called for the delivery of "one hundred and fifty casks, 'of one ton each,' best EXFF madder, 12 1-4, 6 ms.;" it was held that the plaintiff might prove by parol the meaning, in commercial usage, of the letters and abbreviations employed. Dana v. Fiedler, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 464.

3. Sufficient Descriptions.—A deed described

VI. ABBREVIATIONS OF THE REPORTS, TEXT-BOOKS, AND COMMON LEGAL TERMS.
—In the notes is given a complete list of the abbreviations commonly used to the lands conveyed, as follows: "The following tracts or parcels of land, all of which lying and being in the military tract in the state of Illinois, that is to say, the northwest $\frac{1}{4}$ section 27, 11 S. 2 W." following with the numbers of several other tracts, describing them thus: "N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ 17, 15 N. 6 E." without the use of the word "section" preceding the quarters. It was held that the description of the tracts succeeding the first one was sufficient, and that the word "section" would be understood, as though it were expressed, before the numerals representing all the other quarters. Bowen v. Prout, 52 Ill. 354.

"Pt." for part, "frm." for from, are allowable in tax proceedings. Blakeley v. Bestor, 13 Ill. 715. Here the court said: "Some objection was taken on the argument to the abbreviations, such as 'pt.' for part, 'frm.' for from, and 'ft.' for feet, used in describing the premises in the various tax-title proceedings, but the objection was not much relied upon, and is scarcely worthy of serious consideration. Such abbreviations are well understood, and no one is misled by them."

While such letters or characters are used, under the statutes for the collection of taxes, as clearly convey their meaning, either as to description of land or amount of money, they will be sustained. As "$" for dollar; "tx" for tax, etc. Jackson v. Cummings, 15 Ill. 449.

A description of land, in a tax receipt or deed, as the "north side S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of block 2," etc., is not void for indefiniteness and uncertainty. Those words mean the north half of the southwest quarter of the lot. Mathematical accuracy is not indispensable, and descriptions are not to be rejected because they are awkwardly and inaptly expressed. If, taking the language in the connection in which it is used, the meaning is reasonably clear to the ordinary apprehension, it is sufficient. Winslow v. Cooper, 104 Ill. 236.

Where a debtor owns ten acres, on the west side of a forty-acre tract which is a quarter of a quarter-section, a levy upon the same, described as the "west side of the N. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of sec. 23," etc., is not void for uncertainty, it meaning the west half of the tract, which includes the ten acres off the west side thereof. Hill v. Blackwelder, 113 Ill. 284.

The courts will take notice, without proof, of the meaning of initials commonly used in the description of land in tax receipts, such as "W. $\frac{1}{2}$ " for "west half," "N. W." for "northwest quarter," "T. 37 N." for "township thirty-seven north," etc. Paris v. Lewis, 85 Ill. 597. See Olcott v. State, 10 Ill. 481; Jackson v. Cummings, 15 Ill. 449; Blakeley v. Bestor, 13 Ill. 714.

In People v. Miller, 80 Ill. 268, the following description of land in an assessment: "S. $\frac{1}{2}$ ex. W. 12 rods of E. 40 rods of N. $\frac{1}{4}$ of N. $\frac{1}{4}$, and N. 10 rods, S. 13 rods of E. 28 rods of N. $\frac{1}{4}$ of N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ of sec. 23, etc., 74 $\frac{1}{100}$ acres," was held sufficient, as the property could be located by a competent surveyor, without extrinsic aid.

A description of land for the purposes of taxation, "W. side N. $\frac{1}{4}$, S. E. N. W. 10 acres, sec. 8, T. 23, R. 10," is sufficiently certain. The "W. side" means the west side. Taylor v. Wright, 121 Ill. 455.

A description of land in an assessment roll as "Spanish Claim, Sec. 13, T. 4, R. 1 E., 640 acres," is good, and sufficiently certain to support a sale of the land for taxes. Havard v. Day, 62 Miss. 748.

A description of land, in the assessor's book and the tax-list, by the common abbreviations used to designate government subdivisions of land, sufficiently identifies it. Jenkins v. McTigue, 22 Fed. Rep. 148.

In relation to the abbreviations on a tax duplicate, the treasurer and a deputy auditor were both permitted to testify that "ft." meant "feet," that "Washt. St." meant "Washington Street," that "S. W. cor." meant "southwest corner," and that "out. 66" stood for "out-lot 66." Barton v. Anderson, 104 Ind. 582.

In Jordan Ditching, etc., Assoc. v. Waggoner, 33 Ind. 50, it was held that a description of defendant's land in a local assessment by abbreviations and figures, as follows: "Matthias Waggoner S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ Sec. 18, T. 21, N. R. 7 E., 40 acres," was sufficient.

A deed is not invalid because of the description of the lands being in figures and well-understood abbreviations. Harrington v. Fish, 10 Mich. 415.

The description of lands assessed or sold for taxes, by the use of initial letters, abbreviations, and figures, is a valid description. Sibley v. Smith, 2 Mich. 487.

Eminent Domain.—Where the commissioners in their report use only numerals to express the valuation of the land taken and the damages to that not taken, and it is evident from the report that the commissioners intended that such numerals should represent dollars and cents, the report is not void because the commissioners omitted to use either the dollar mark or the words "dollars" and "cents," or some abbreviation of the same. Hunt v. Smith, 9 Kan. 95.

Insufficient Descriptions.—In Power v. Bowdle, 3 N. Dak. 107, it was held, following Power v. Larabee, 2 N. Dak. 141, and Keith v. Hayden, 26 Minn. 212, that the description of parts of sections of land in a tax assessor's book, as "NW 4; NE 4; NE SW; W 2 SW, etc.," was invalid and insufficient.

In a tax judgment a description of the land against which the judgment purports to be rendered, as S. 2 N. E. 4 and N. W. 4 S. E. 4 of a designated section, township, and range, is fatally defective, and the judgment is, upon its face, of no effect. Keith v. Hayden, 26 Minn. 212.

The judgment must show definitely the designate the American, British, and Canadian reports, together with those of the classic text-books. It has not been thought necessary to go further than this, as a complete list of the ephemeral text-books would be of no value, and would only serve to encumber the really useful abbreviations. To this list of reports and text-books have been added the more common abbreviations of legal terminology; such as have received judicial construction will be found in their alphabetical order in the body of this Encyclopædia.¹

amount of tax for which it was rendered; figures without some mark indicating for what they stand, in a column, at the head of which are the words Tax, Coll., Clerk, Pri., are not sufficient. Randolph v. Metcalf, 6 Coldw. (Tenn.) 401.

Under Wagner's Statutes (Missouri), p. 1212, § 240, authorizing certain abbreviations in describing land in tax deeds and proceedings relating to the same, abbreviations can be used only as provided in said section; and when used they will be insufficient, under said section, unless the land intended to be designated by their use is so designated thereby that it may be identified or located. Abbreviations used in the description of land in the tax deed and anterior proceedings in this case were held to be insufficient. Lowe v. Ekey, 82 Mo. 286.

Mere abstracts of title which are unintelligible without the aid of some proof to explain the meaning of abbreviations and initial letters used in them, introduced in evidence under a stipulation which does not determine what effect shall be given to them, are insufficient of themselves to establish title to lands. Weeks v. Downing, 30 Mich. 4.

1. Where a policeman, appointed under the Act of 1853 by the legislature of New York, was by virtue of the Act of 1857 continued on the police force, but while obeying the commissioners under the Act of 1853, refused to act under the new board of police on the ground that the Act of 1857 was unconstitutional, it was held that such conduct did not amount to an abdication. People v. Board of Police, 26 Barb. (N. Y.) 487. The court said: "Lord Somers, in his speech delivered in 1688, when James II. vacated the throne, said: 'The word abdicate doth naturally and properly signify entirely to renounce, throw off, disown, relinquish any thing or person, so as to have no further to do with it; and that whether it be done by express words, or in writing, or by doing such acts as are inconsistent with the holding and retaining of the thing.'  But, nevertheless, whatever may be the manner by which the incumbent of an office indicates his intention of resigning or abdicating it, whether by acts inconsistent with the retention of the office, or by a formal renunciation of it, it is never consummated—he is never legally out of office—until his resignation is accepted, either expressly or by the appointment of another in his place."

DUCTION*.

I. DEFINITION.—Abduction is the unlawful taking or detention, by force, fraud, or persuasion, of a person, as a wife, a child, or a ward, from the possession, custody, or control of the person legally entitled thereto.¹

II. ABDUCTION OF WIFE—1. Rights of Husband—General Rule.—Whoever by fraud, persuasion, or violence entices or takes a man's wife away from him is liable to the husband for the injury thereby done him.²

1. Definition.—Cent. Dict.; Webster's Dict.; Anderson's L. Dict.; State v. George, 93 N. Car. 567; Carpenter v. People, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 606; Rob. El. Law, §§ 233, 236, 237; 3 Black. Com. 139; 2 Addison on Torts (4th ed.), p. 1099; Cooley on Torts (2d ed.), p. 225.

In State v. Chisenhall, 106 N. Car. 679, the court said: "'Our statute' (says Ashe, J., in State v. George, 93 N. Car. 567) 'is broad and comprehensive in its terms, and embraces all means by which the child may be abducted.' The crime is defined in the statute by the term 'abduction,' which is a term of well-known signification, and means, in law, 'the taking and carrying away of a child, a ward, a wife, etc., either by fraud, persuasion, or open violence.' Webster's Dict."

In People v. Seeley, 37 Hun (N. Y.) 192, the court in defining "abduction" says: "As the unlawful act mentioned in the statute constitutes the crime of abduction, we are aided in giving construction to the statute by the definition and meaning of the phrase 'abduction' as the same is used by jurists, law writers, and lexicographers. Blackstone defines abduction to be the taking or carrying away of the child of a parent, or the wife of a husband, either by fraud, persuasion, or open violence. (3 Black. Com. 139, 140.) When the word is used as a law phrase, Webster adopts and approves of this definition."

The word "abduction" is applied to the unlawful seizure or detention of a female for the purpose of marriage, concubinage, or prostitution. Brown's Law Dict., § 2; N. Y. Rev. Stat. 553, §§ 24, 26; 1 Russell on Crimes (9th Am. ed.) 940; 3 Black. Com., 139, 141.

2. Remedies of Husband.—By the common law the husband's remedy was by writ of ravishment or by an action of trespass vi et armis, de uxore rapta et abducta. 3 Steph. Com. 437; Fitzherbert Nat. Brev. 87; 3 Black. Com. 139.

The remedy did not lie in recovering possession of the wife, but in damages for taking her away. 3 Black. Com. 139; 2 Inst. 434.

The husband may also bring an action on the case to recover damages against whomsoever persuades or entices his wife to live separate from him without sufficient cause. 3 Black. Com. 139; Law of Nisi Prius 78. See Bro. Abr., tit. Trespass, 213; Bro. Abr. 207, 440; Winsmore v. Greenback, Willes 577; Higham v. Vanosdol, 101 Ind. 160; Hutcheson v. Peck, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 196; Michael v. Dunkle, 84 Ind. 544, 43 Am. Rep. 100; Remsen v. Hay, N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 443; Friend v. Thompson, Wright (Ohio) 636; Perry v. Lovejoy, 49 Mich. 529; Heermance v. Janus, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 120. Even if it be her own father. Bennett v. Smith, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 439; Holtz v. Dick, 42 Ohio St. 23, 51 Am. Rep. 791.

Enticement must be Active.—The enticement must be caused by the defendant knowingly, and by direct and active interference. Schuneman v. Palmer, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 225; Perry v. Lovejoy, 49 Mich. 529.

But it is not necessary that the defendant's conduct should be the sole cause of the wife's desertion; it is enough to support the action for enticing away if it is the controlling cause. Hadley v. Heywood, 121 Mass. 239.

Consent of Wife.—In Higham v. Vanosdol, 101 Ind. 160, the court, by Mitchell, J., said: "The husband's right of action is complete against any stranger who has lent countenance to the breaking up of his household, and it is no defense for such person to show that the wife consented, or that he did not otherwise persuade or entice her away, except to furnish the means and opportunity for the elopement, he himself carrying and keeping her away until at his pleasure she was returned. The wife had no power to consent." See White v. Murtland, 71 Ill. 250, 22 Am. Rep. 100; 1 Chit. Pl. 168; Lawyer v. Fritcher, 130 N. Y. 239.

Action Barred.—A recovery in an action of trespass de uxore rapta et abducta is a bar to an action on the case for enticing the wife

2. Gist of the Action.—The gist of the action by the husband lies in the loss of the consortium—the conjugal fellowship and comfort of his wife's society—which he is entitled to in law.¹

3. When Action does not Lie.—But where another harbors a man's wife in good faith, from motives of humanity, the husband has no right of action against him.² Nor has he any cause of action where the loss of his wife's society is due to his own brutality or tortious acts,³ or where she leaves him on away. Gilchrist v. Bale, 8 Watts (Pa.) 355, 34 Am. Dec. 469.

This ruling is in accordance with the maxim nemo debet bis vexari pro eadem causa.

1. Loss of Wife's Society Gist of the Action.—1 Robinson's Elementary Law 233; Cooley on Torts (2d ed.) 224; Perry v. Lovejoy, 49 Mich. 531; Bennett v. Smith, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 439; Barnes v. Allen, 1 Keyes (N. Y.) 394; Winsmore v. Greenbank, Willes 577; Schuneman v. Palmer, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 227. See also Bigaouette v. Paulet, 134 Mass. 123.

In Weeden v. Timtrell, 5 T. R. 360, the court, by Ashurst, J., said: "The gist of the action is the loss of the comfort and society of the plaintiff's wife; that is always inserted in declarations of this kind as a material and substantial allegation, and the forms of pleading are evidence of the law."

The principle was carried further in Bennett v. Smith, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 441, where the court by Strong, J., said: "The wife owes to the husband the duty of living with him, and seeking to promote his interests and happiness, and by preventing the performance of that duty a wrong is done to him, involving a pecuniary loss as well as a loss of peace and comfort in the marriage relation. Whoever is the wrongdoer, whether the father of the wife or any other person, he should be subject to an action for damages by the husband."

2. Harboring Wife in Good Faith.—Philp v. Squire, Peake 82; Schuneman v. Palmer, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 225; Turner v. Estes, 3 Mass. 317; Hutcheson v. Peck, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 196. See Hilliard on Torts 509, 510; Cooley on Torts (2d ed.) 265.

Where a third person harbors a man's wife the burden is upon the husband, in an action against such person, to establish the unworthy motives from which it was done, for when the defendant acts from motives of humanity and in good faith towards the wife the action will not lie; because the wife is an individual, having separate rights which the law will uphold and protect against her husband, amongst which is the right to invoke and receive shelter and protection against his cruelty and oppression. Barnes v. Allen, 1 Keyes (N. Y.) 390, 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 111.

In order to determine whether any wrong has been done the husband, for which an action will lie, the quo animo of the defendant's act is the material point of inquiry. Hutcheson v. Peck, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 196. See Heermance v. Janus, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 124; Schuneman v. Palmer, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 225; Perry v. Lovejoy, 49 Mich. 529. But in Bennett v. Smith, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 441, it was held that a person is liable without reference to his motives or intentions.

In Tasker v. Stanley, 153 Mass. 148, where an action was brought by a husband against certain persons for procuring and enticing his wife to live separately from him, the court, by Holmes, J., said: "In order to make a man who has no special influence or authority answerable for mere advice of this kind because it is followed, we think that it ought to appear that the advice was not honestly given, that it did not represent his real opinions, or that it was given from malevolent motives; and so are all the cases." See Modisett v. McPike, 74 Mo. 636; Rinehart v. Bills, 82 Mo. 534, 52 Am. Rep. 385; Hoard v. Peck, 56 Barb. (N. Y.) 202; Gilchrist v. Bale, 8 Watts (Pa.) 355, 34 Am. Dec. 469; Campbell v. Carter, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 165; 2 Hilliard on Torts (3d ed.) 510.

Notice by Husband not to Harbor his Wife.—In Philp v. Squire, Peake 82, the plaintiff's wife came to the house of the defendant, to whose wife she was related, and represented that she was ill treated and that her husband had turned her out of doors. The plaintiff notified the defendant not to harbor her. Actual ill treatment was not proven. Lord Kenyon held that the action would not lie, and that it was of no consequence whether the wife's representations of ill treatment were true or not. Notice from the husband forbidding an outsider to harbor his wife is sufficient to show that it is against his will; and where one harbors the wife of another under a previous agreement, if he continues to harbor her after such notice by the plaintiff, it will amount to abduction. Barbee v. Armstead, 10 Ired. (N. Car.) 530, 51 Am. Dec. 404. See Schuneman v. Palmer, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 225; Hutcheson v. Peck, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 196; Turner v. Estes, 3 Mass. 317.

The Old Law.—The modern decisions modify the severity of the old law, which "was so strict on this point that if one's wife missed her way upon the road it was not lawful for another man to take her into his house unless she was benighted and in danger of being lost or drowned." 3 Black. Com. 139; Bro. Abr., tit. Trespass, 213. See Bro. Abr. 207, 440.

3. Harboring Wife who Leaves Husband because of Ill Treatment.—Winsmore v. Greenbank, Willes 577; Houlston v. Smyth, 2 C. & P. 22, 12 E. C. L. 9; Barnes v. Allen, 1 Keyes (N. Y.) 394; Johnson v. Allen, 100 N. Car. 140; Gilchrist v. Bale, 8 Watts (Pa.) 355, 34 Am. Dec. 469. But see Hadley v. Heywood, 121 Mass. 236, where it was held that the fact that the plaintiff's cruelty con-account of indifference to him, and not through the active interference of another.¹ The law also, basing its conclusions on the law of nature, allows larger privileges to parents in harboring a married daughter than it gives to strangers to shelter her, and they will be protected against the husband for doing so, especially where his conduct is such as to endanger his wife's safety, or is so immoral and indecent as to render him grossly unfit for her society.²

4. Remedy by Habeas Corpus.—Where a man's wife is kept in custody away from him and against her will, he is entitled to a writ of habeas corpus for the purpose of liberating her.³

tributed to his wife's leaving him was no defense to an action brought by the husband against the person who enticed her away.

Where a drunken husband neglects and abuses his wife, her father may recover and protect her and her children, and no action lies against him on the part of the husband. Rabe v. Hanna, 5 Ohio 530.

In Berthon v. Cartwright, 2 Esp. 480, it was held that any person may safely harbor a wife and not be liable to an action for abduction if the wife has been forced to leave her husband's house through ill treatment or fear of bodily injury. And see Hutcheson v. Peck, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 196; Smith v. Lyke, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 204.

It has been held that parents will be justified in interfering if the appearances seem to indicate ill treatment or necessity for interference, although no occasion for interference really exists. Holtz v. Dick, 42 Ohio St. 23, 51 Am. Rep. 792.

In Johnson v. Allen, 100 N. Car. 140, the court, by Merrimon, J., said: "Mere ill treatment of the wife did not warrant the defendant in entertaining her, thus keeping and encouraging her to stay away and apart from her husband. The purpose and policy of the law are, that husband and wife shall live harmoniously together, and, if need be, that each shall endure the shortcomings of the other. They may not separate because of slight, or even serious, differences and disagreements, and mere ill treatment of one towards the other; and it is only when the husband treats his wife with violence—endangers her personal safety—that a stranger shall be justified in giving her continued shelter, support, and protection against the husband's will. Otherwise the strength and permanency of the marriage relation would be impaired, to the great detriment of family ties and the good order and wellbeing of society."

1. Perry v. Lovejoy, 49 Mich. 529. See Barnes v. Allen, 1 Keyes (N. Y.) 392; Houlston v. Smyth, 2 C. & P. 22, 12 E. C. L. 9.

2. Right of Parents to Harbor and Protect Child.—In White v. Ross, 47 Mich. 172, the facts were that there was a clandestine marriage between the plaintiff and the defendants' daughter, the daughter continuing to live with her parents; when the defendants heard of the marriage they were very angry and threatened violence if the daughter was taken away, but after a week's delay said she might go and live with the plaintiff if she wanted to, and no obstacle should be interposed; she expressed repugnance to her husband, and determined to stay with her parents; there was no further evidence of solicitation or compulsion than as above. It was held that on these facts the parents would not be liable.

In Bennett v. Smith, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 442, the court said: "In respect to what facts will support an action by a husband for depriving him of his wife, there is, in principle, a clear distinction between the cases where the action is against a parent of the wife, and where it is against a stranger. Parents are under obligations, by the law of nature, to protect their children from injury and relieve them when in distress. * * * Where the conduct of a husband is such as to endanger the personal safety of his wife, or is so immoral and indecent as to render him grossly unfit for her society, so much so that she would be justified in abandoning him, her parents ought to, and I have no doubt have, the right not only to receive her into and allow her the comforts of their house, which even a stranger may do in such a case, but also to advise her to come and remain there." To the same effect are Turner v. Estes, 3 Mass. 317; Hutcheson v. Peck, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 196; Payne v. Williams, 4 Baxt. (Tenn.) 583; Glass v. Bennett, 89 Tenn. 478; Smith v. Lyke, 13 Hun (N. Y.) 205; Barnes v. Allen, 1 Keyes (N. Y.) 390; Burnett v. Burkhead, 21 Ark. 77, 76 Am. Dec. 358; Friend v. Thompson, Wright (Ohio) 636; Schoul. Dom. Rel. (3d ed.) 57, 58. And a clear case of want of justification on the part of the parents should be required to be shown before they should be held responsible. Cooley on Torts (2d ed.) 265; Hutcheson v. Peck, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 196.

Malice must be Proved.—Before an action will lie against the parents, the husband must prove malice on their part in enticing his wife away from him; not necessarily spiteful, malicious, or revengeful conduct, but such conduct injurious to the husband and intentionally personal as malice in law would be inferred from. Hutcheson v. Peck, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 196; Westlake v. Westlake, 34 Ohio St. 635, 32 Am. Rep. 397. See Holtz v. Dick, 42 Ohio St. 23, 51 Am. Rep. 792; Friend v. Thompson, Wright (Ohio) 639; Rabe v. Hanna, 5 Ohio 530; Bennett v. Smith, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 439; Campbell v. Carter, 3 Daly (N. Y.) 165. The burden of proving malice is on the plaintiff. Barnes v. Allen, 1 Keyes (N. Y.) 390.

III. ABDUCTION OF HUSBAND—1. Remedies of Wife—Common-law Rule.—At common law the wife could not maintain an action for the abduction or enticement of her husband, because her legal being was merged entirely in his, and she had no standing in court; and also because all damages recovered belonged to him absolutely.¹

2. Modern Decisions.—It is held generally now that a wife may bring an action for damages against any one who in any way deprives her of the society, support, or protection of her husband. Such is the law in those states where by statute the wife has the right to sue in her own name for personal injuries and is otherwise freed from her common-law disabilities.²

Strā. 445; Sanders v. Rodway, 13 Eng. L. & Eq. 463, 16 Jur. 1005. See 1 Frās. Dom. Rel. 240, 241; Schouler Dom. Rel. (3d ed.) 48.

But where a wife is voluntarily, of her own desire and without any restraint, living apart from her husband, the court will not grant a habeas corpus on his application for the purpose of restoring her to his custody. Ex p. Sandilands, 12 Eng. L. & Eq. 463; Reg. v. Leggatt, 18 Q. B. 781, 83 E. C. L. 781; Rex v. Mead, 1 Burr. 542.

In Reg. v. Leggatt, 18 Q. B. 781, 83 E. C. L. 781, the court, by Lord Campbell, C. J., in refusing to grant the writ, said: "We have always felt great tenderness in dealing with writs of habeas corpus. * * * The object of a habeas corpus is to restore to liberty a person who has been unjustly deprived of it. * * * But here the wife is under no restraint whatever, and is by her own desire living with her son, from whom it is proposed to take her. Whether the husband has a right to the custody of her or not is a question alieni fori; we have no jurisdiction over it. If a writ of habeas corpus were to issue and the wife were to be brought before us, we could not compel her to return to her husband. She would be at liberty to go where she chose. If she has no good cause for remaining away from her husband, he may obtain a decree of the ecclesiastical court ordering her to return to him. This case is quite different from that of an infant. There the parent has a right to the custody of the child. * * * But a husband has no such right at common law to the custody of his wife."

1. Sir William Blackstone states the rule at common law thus: "We may observe that in these relative injuries notice is only taken of the wrong done to the superior of the parties related, by the breach and dissolution of either the relation itself, or at least the advantages accruing therefrom." 3 Black. Com. p. 142; Postlewaite v. Postlewaite, 1 Ind. App. 475. See also cases in succeeding notes in this section; and 26 Am. Law Rev. 36-49.

Conflicting Judgments.—Although the weight of authority seems to be in favor of placing the wife on an exact equality with the husband in this particular, and of giving her the right to bring an action on the case against whomsoever entices him away from her, yet there are many judgments which deny her this right. See Van Arnan v. Ayers, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 544; Mulford v. Clewell, 21 Ohio St. 191; Logan v. Logan, 77 Ind. 558; Duffies v. Duffies, 76 Wis. 374, 20 Am. St. Rep. 79; Doe v. Roe, 82 Me. 503, 17 Am. St. Rep. 499.

In Duffies v. Duffies, 76 Wis. 374, 20 Am. St. Rep. 79, it was held that the wife had no right, either at common law or under the statutes freeing her from her common-law disabilities, to the society, support, and affection of her husband, and that she could not maintain an action for damages for enticing him away. It would seem from the opinion that such right, together with the right to sue therefor, must be conferred expressly by statute.

In Doe v. Roe, 82 Me. 503, 17 Am. St. Rep. 499, the court, by Walton, J., said: "It is true that a husband may maintain an action for the seduction of his wife. But such an action has grounds on which to rest that cannot be invoked in support of a similar action in favor of the wife. A wife's infidelity may impose upon her husband the support of another man's child. And what is still worse, it may throw suspicion upon the legitimacy of his own children. A husband's infidelity can inflict no such consequences on his wife. An action in favor of the husband for the seduction of his wife has been regarded as of doubtful expediency. It has been abolished in England. * * * If such actions were maintainable by wives, such a power would furnish them with the means of inflicting untold misery upon others, with

3. Gist of the Action.—The gist of the action is the loss of the consortium or conjugal society of the husband.¹

4. When Action does not Lie.—In order to maintain the action the wife must affirmatively prove that the defendant was the abductor and enticer. The action will not lie when the loss of conjugal fellowship is due to her own or her husband's misconduct.²

5. Wife's Right to Habeas Corpus.—A wife may sue out a writ of habeas corpus for the unlawful abduction or detention of her husband.³

IV. ABDUCTION OF CHILD—1. Rights of Parents—General Rule.—A father has a right of action against every person who knowingly and wittingly interrupts the relation subsisting between himself and his child by enticing or abducting such child away from him, or by harboring the child after he has left the father's house.⁴ The action lies also on behalf of the mother after the little hope of redress for themselves. At any rate we are satisfied that the law never has, and does not now, secure to wives such a power, and if it is deemed wise that they should have it, the legislature and not the court must give it to them."

(Ohio) 418; Baker v. Baker, 16 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 293; Warner v. Miller, 17 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 221; Churchill v. Lewis, 17 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 226; Jaynes v. Jaynes, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 40; Biglow on Torts 153; Cooley on Torts 228, note.

In Lynch v. Knight, 9 H. L. Cas. 588, the court, by Campbell, L. C., said: "If there be shown a concurrence of loss and injury from the act complained of, we are bound to say this action lies. Nor can I allow that the loss of consortium or conjugal society can give a cause of action to the husband alone. I think it may be a loss which the law may recognize, to the wife as well as to the husband."

"If at common law the husband could maintain an action for the loss of the consortium of the wife, I can see no reason why, under our law, the wife cannot maintain an action for the loss of the consortium of the husband." Gilmore, C. J., in Westlake v. Westlake, 34 Ohio St. 621, 32 Am. Rep. 397.

In Clark v. Harlan, 1 Cinc. Super. Ct. Rep. (Ohio) 422, the court, by Storer, J., said: "If the husband's right to claim damages for the loss of his wife's society, his solatium, as the civilians term it, arise by virtue of the contract of marriage, the same result, for stronger reasons, should follow the loss of the husband's consortium by the wife. His care of her whole social life, his protection from injury of her person, of her property, and of her good name, are alike demanded by the marital tie and the first principles of justice. He cannot lightly disregard the obligations he has solemnly assumed, or ignore the relation he bears to her to whom he has pledged his affections until the bond is severed by death or the judgment of the law."

2. Misconduct of the Parties.—Warner v. Miller, 17 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 221; Churchill v. Lewis, 17 Abb. N. Cas. (N.

Y. Supreme Ct.) 226; Buckel v. Suss, 28 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 21.

Where a man frequents a bawdy-house it is held that the action of abduction or enticement will not lie against the keeper on mere evidence of such frequenting. Churchill v. Lewis, 17 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 226.

A wife cannot maintain an action for enticing away her husband where the evidence shows that she herself left him and applied for a divorce. Buckel v. Suss, 28 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 21.

3. Right of Wife to Writ of Habeas Corpus.—Spelling Extra Rel., § 1314; Cobbett v. Hudson, 15 Q. B. 988, 69 E. C. L. 988; Ex p. Cobbett, cited in 15 Q. B. 181, note (b), 69 E. C. L. 181.

In the Matter of Ferrens, 3 Ben. (U. S.) 445, the court, by Blatchford, J., said: "It has never been understood that, at common law, authority from a person unlawfully imprisoned or deprived of his liberty was necessary to warrant the issuing of a habeas corpus to inquire into the cause of his detention. In the case of People v. Mercein (3 Hill (N. Y.) 407) the Supreme Court of New York intimate that such authority from the person detained is not ordinarily necessary. In the case of Ashby and White (14 Howell's State Trials 814) the House of Lords in England, in 1704, resolved 'that every Englishman, who is imprisoned by any authority whatsoever, has an undoubted right, by his agents or friends, to apply for and obtain a writ of habeas corpus in order to procure his liberty by due course of law.' This resolution was assented to by the House of Commons (page 826). In the present case the petitioner states, in her petition, that she is the wife of the recruit, and is dependent upon him for support. This is, I think, sufficient to authorize her to prosecute the writ."

4. Right of Father in Case of Abduction of Child.—Schouler Dom. Rel. (3d ed.), § 260; 2 Hilliard on Torts (3d ed.) 519, 521; Kirkpatrick v. Lockhart, 2 Brev. (S. Car.) 276; *Sargent v. father's death,¹ or on behalf of one standing in loco parentis.²

2. Gist of the Action.—The gist of the action for the abduction of a child would seem to be not the loss of service, but the loss to the parent of the comfort and society of the child, though the authorities are not in harmony upon the question.³

v. Showers, 71 Ind. 451; Thompson v. Howard, 31 Mich. 308; Emerson v. Howland, 1 Mason (U. S.) 45; Hills v. Hobert, 2 Root (Conn.) 48; Caughey v. Smith, 47 N. Y. 244.

It is doubtful whether under the old law a father had a right of action for the abduction of any of his children other than his son and heir. The question was raised in Barham v. Dennis, Cro. Eliz. 770, where it was held that he had not, though the opposite view was also set forth. However, since the abolition of military tenures the action for the abduction and marriage of an heir is gone, and a parent now, in the same manner as a husband for the abduction of his wife, may proceed against the abductor of any of his children by writ of ravishment or action of trespass vi et armis de filio vel filia raptio vel abducto. 3 Black. Com. 140, 141; Fitzherbert Nat. Brev. 90; Gray v. Jefferies, Cro. Eliz. 55.

1. Mother's Right of Action.—Jones v. Tevis, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 25, 14 Am. Dec. 98.

The action must be on the case and not trespass vi et armis. In the analogous case of an action for seduction, the same doctrine is held. Gray v. Durland, 50 Barb. (N. Y.) 100; Dedham v. Natick, 16 Mass. 135; Hammond v. Corbett, 50 N. H. 501, 9 Am. Rep. 288; Matthewson v. Perry, 37 Conn. 435, 9 Am. Rep. 339; Furnam v. Van Sise, 56 N. Y. 435, 15 Am. Rep. 441.

On habeas corpus proceedings it has been held that a mother has no legal authority over her minor child and no right to his services. This is placed on the ground that at common law she was not bound to support him. Com. v. Murray, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 487, 5 Am. Dec. 412; Logan v. Murray, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 175, 9 Am. Dec. 422; South v. Denniston, 2 Watts (Pa.) 477; Coon v. Moffit, 3 N. J. L. 169, 4 Am. Dec. 392; Bartley v. Richtmyer, 4 N. Y. 38, 53 Am. Dec. 338.

In Worcester v. Marchant, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 510, it was held that under Massachusetts Stat. 1784, c. 72, § 11, which provides that every master of a ship who shall carry or transport out of Massachusetts an infant, etc., without the consent of his parent, etc., shall be liable for the damages sustained by the parent, etc., in a special action on the case, no action could be maintained by an infant's mother or stepfather, because they have no legal right to the minor's society or services.

2. One in Loco Parentis.—In Clark v. Bayer, 32 Ohio St. 299, 30 Am. Rep. 593, the court, by Ashburn, J., said: "To recognize the doctrine that one standing in loco parentis, clothed with the lawful custody of an infant under five years old, has no legal capacity to sue or maintain an action for damages, either general or special, against the child thief, would be an unwarranted restriction upon the common-law rights of the citizen. It would be no less restrictive to hold that no action can be maintained for such cause, by reason of the fact that the infant, because of its tender years, is unable to render any valuable services. The action rests upon the right to service, and not upon actual services."

A person standing in loco parentis is entitled to maintain this action the same as one who is actually the parent. Whitaker v. Warren, 60 N. H. 20, 49 Am. Rep. 302.

Guardian.—A guardian has the same right of action as a father when his ward is stolen or ravished away from him. 3 Black. Com. 141; Fitzherbert Nat. Brev. 90, 139; 2 P. Wms. (Eng.) 108; 12 Car. II. c. 24.

Stepfather.—But the rule does not extend to a stepfather. See Worcester v. Marchant, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 510; Tubb v. Harrison, 4 T. R. 118; Freto v. Brown, 4 Mass. 676. Unless he voluntarily assumes the care and support of a stepchild. The test of the relationship is whether a person holds the child out as a member of his own family. St. Ferdinand Loretto Academy v. Bobb, 52 Mo. 357; Cooper v. Martin, 4 East 77; Sharp v. Cropsey, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 224. As to an adopted child, see Brown v. Welsh, 27 N. J. Eq. 429.

Master and Apprentice.—An indictment will not lie against a man for enticing an apprentice to leave his master's service; for such wrong is of a private nature, and to the prejudice of a single person only. The remedy is by action on the case. Reg. v. Daniell, 6 Mod. 99.

3. Abduction of Child—Gist of the Action.—In Kirkpatrick v. Lockhart, 2 Brev. (S. Car.) 276, a father was held entitled to damages in an action of trespass vi et armis for the abduction of his daughter, although it was not laid in the declaration that he thereby lost the services of his child, and although there was no evidence of a forcible taking. The court, by Brevard, J., said: "I mention these cases to exhibit the true foundation of these kinds of actions, and to show that the allegation of special damage per quod is founded on a mere fiction, which seems to have been suggested by a narrow technical mind, or to have originated in a base and sordid principle of pecuniary interest. In truth and justice it forms no essential ingredient in the cause of action, and is unworthy of the notice of an enlightened and feeling judicatory. We are, therefore, of opinion there is no necessity to resort to this absurd fiction to support an action so well founded in justice, reason, and policy. The true ground of action cannot be the loss of service, for a child may be of an age so tender or of a constitution so delicate as to be incapable of rendering any service. The true ground of action is the outrage and deprivation; the injury the father sustains in the loss of his child; the insult offered to his feelings; the heart-rending agony he must suffer in the destruction of his dearest hopes, and the irreparable loss of that comfort and society which may be the only solace of his declining age." See also Redford v. McKowl, 3 Esp. 119.

3. When Action does not Lie.—The fact that persons who harbor and employ a child know that he wrongfully left his father's service will not support the father's action against them for enticing him away; the father must prove that inducements were presented to the child, while in his custody and service, which caused him to leave it.¹

Emancipation or Abandonment of Child.—A parent may lose his right of action by emancipating his child or by turning him away or abandoning him.²

In Clark v. Bayer, 32 Ohio St. 299, 30 Am. Rep. 593, it was held that the action rested upon the right to service, and not upon actual service.

There seems to be no reason why a parent or one standing in loco parentis may not sue on either ground, but he cannot do so upon both. In Thompson v. Howard, 31 Mich. 308, it was held that a person cannot take contradictory positions, and where he has a right to choose one of his modes of redress his election of one will preclude him from adopting the other. Therefore where the father brought an action on the case for the unlawful enticing away and harboring his minor son, after he had first brought assumpsit for the son's wages during the same period on the basis of an implied contract, and after a trial had submitted the case to the jury and upon their disagreeing had discontinued the suit, it was held that the action on the case would not lie.

In Evans v. Walton, L. R. 2 C. P. 615, where the plaintiff's daughter, who was about nineteen years of age, resided with him as a member of his family, and assisted him in his business, procured her mother's consent to her quitting her home for a few days by means of a fictitious letter of invitation dictated by the defendant, and the defendant then took her to a lodging-house, where she cohabited with him for nine days and then returned home, it was held that there was a sufficient continuing relation of master and servant de facto, and sufficient evidence of a wrongful enticing away of the daughter by the defendant, to entitle the father to maintain the action, although there was no allegation that the defendant debauched her or that there was any binding contract of service between her and the plaintiff. See Hall v. Hollander, 4 B. & C. 660, 10 E. C. L. 436.

1. Butterfield v. Ashley, 2 Gray (Mass.) 254, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 249. In this case a minor ran away from his parent and went to Boston. He told the defendant, a ship-owner, that he had run away and wanted to ship with him. The defendant at first refused, but consented later on the representation that the boy had his father's consent. He signed shipping articles, and afterwards requested to be released. In a suit for damages for enticing away a minor servant, it was held that the facts presented did not constitute an enticement, as there was no active interference on the part of the defendant to cause the original leaving. 1 Black. Com. 429; 3 Black. Com. 142; Reeve Dom. Rel. (3d ed.) 6291; 2 Chit. Pl. (6th Am. ed.) 546.

In Stuart v. Simpson, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 376, it was held that the defendant must have knowledge that the persons he employed were the servants of another, and that such facts must be shown by the plaintiff. See 3 Stark. Ev. (Met. ed.) 1310.

Child Harbored, etc., by Defendant with Knowledge.—But where the action is for harboring the child, if the defendant knows that he has run away from his father, and boards him and allows him to work on his farm as he pleases, and does so with the intention of encouraging him, or with the knowledge that he was aiding or encouraging him, to remain away from his father, the person so harboring the child becomes liable to the father. Sargent v. Mathewson, 38 N. H. 54. See Cutting v. Seabury, Sprague (U. S.) 522.

Notice from the Parent.—The action will lie also after notice has been given the defendant that he is employing the minor child of another, if he so continues to employ him. Sherwood v. Hall, 3 Sumner (U. S.) 127. See Ferguson v. Tucker, 2 Har. & G. (Md.) 182; Blake v. Lanyon, 6 T. R. 221; Everett v. Sherfey, 1 Iowa 356.

In Conant v. Raymond, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 243, which is in pari materia, it was held that if a master whose apprentice has wrongfully left his service gives out that he will not receive him again, others may lawfully employ him, although specially notified by the master not to harbor him, unless the master also makes known a change of resolution and signifies a willingness to receive the apprentice back again.

2. Parent Emancipating or Abandoning Child.—Everett v. Sherfey, 1 Iowa 356; Wodell v. Coggeshall, 2 Met. (Mass.) 89, 35 Am. Dec. 391; Clark v. Bayer, 32 Ohio St. 299, 30 Am. Rep. 593. Father and Mother Living Apart—Child in Care and Custody of Mother.—In Steele v. Thacher, Ware (U. S.) 91, the facts showed that the plaintiff's son was living away from home and had made a verbal apprenticeship with another to learn the barber's trade; that he had been discharged and had shipped with the defendant as the emancipated apprentice of the barber. The plaintiff brought a libel in admiralty for the wrongful abduction of his minor child. The defendant, among other things, denied the relationship of parent and child. Ware, J., in speaking of the parents' right to the custody and control of their minor children, said: "But these parental rights may, like other rights, be waived or renounced, and that either expressly or by implication. The parent may renounce his right to the earnings of his child, by a special agreement with the child that he shall have the exclusive enjoyment of them himself. Besides, these parental rights are connected with parental duties, and may be forfeited by a neglect of these duties. The parent is bound to maintain, to protect, and to educate his child. * * * His right of control over the person of his child * * * has its foundation in the performance of these duties." If the parent turns his child out of his house and refuses to maintain him, or if he abandons all care of him, suffers him to go at large, * * * he forfeits his right of control over his person."

In Wodell v. Coggeshall, 2 Met. (Mass.) 89, 35 Am. Dec. 391, the father brought an action of trespass on the case for enticing his minor child from his care, custody, and control. The defendant denied that the father had the care, custody, and control of the child at the time of the alleged enticement. The evidence showed that the son had not lived with his father for several years, nor had he received any aid or support from him; that the father and mother lived apart, and the son had made his home with his mother, and that at her solicitation the defendant had shipped him for a whaling voyage. There was also evidence to show that the father had a boarding-place; that the son might have resided with him; and that the father had not consented to his living with his mother; also, that before the vessel put to sea he had forbidden the defendant to take away his son. The jury were instructed that to maintain an action for enticing away a minor "it must appear that the son was under the care and custody of the father, and that the defendants took him from the father's employment; that if he actually suffered his son to remain under the custody of the mother, to be supported and employed by her, he could not aver that the son was enticed from his care and custody; and that if the defendant found the boy in the care and custody of the mother, as far as she could control him, and so far as he was under the care and control of any one, then the plaintiff could not aver that the defendants seduced the son from his service. * * * Also, that proof of notice to the defendant * * * that the boy was his son, and forbidding him to take him, was not alone sufficient to enable him to maintain this action; and that he must show something more, namely, that the boy was under his custody and care when he shipped." The jury returned a verdict for the defendants. It was held that there was no error in the instructions. See 2 Kent Com. (13th ed.) 192 and note; Com. v. Dougherty, 1 Pa. Leg. Gaz. 63.

Reassertion of Control after Emancipation.—In Everett v. Sherfey, 1 Iowa 356, the facts showed that the father and son had a quarrel, and that the son left home and worked for various people for some time without any objections from his father; that the father had by publication in the newspapers warned all persons against trusting the son on his credit; that the son went to live with the defendants, and after he had been there several months, the plaintiff gave notice to the defendants not to harbor or employ his son. It was held that the father had emancipated his son, and the defendants were not liable for any acts up to the time of the notice; but that a father might reassert his control over his son, and that the defendants were liable for harboring after notice from the plaintiff. See also 2 Kent Com. (13th ed.) 194.

1. Enticement for Purpose of Marriage.—Jones v. Tevis, 4 Litt. (Ky.) 25, 14 Am. Dec. 98. The reason for this rule is that the action being founded on the right of the parent to the control of his child, where there is a valid marriage the rights of the husband are superior to those of the parent. Goodwin v. Thompson, 2 Greene (Iowa) 329; Aldrich v. Bennett, 63 N. H. 415, 56 Am. Rep. 529; Hervey v. Moseley, 7 Gray (Mass.) 479, 66 Am. Dec. 515; Parton v. Hervey, 1 Gray (Mass.) 119; Holland v. Beard, 59 Miss. 161, 42 Am. Rep. 360.

In Hills v. Hobert, 2 Root (Conn.) 48, the evidence showed that the defendant was being prosecuted by the plaintiff and his daughter for seducing her; that he hired another person to court and marry her, fraudulently representing him to be a man of property, and after they were married to give a joint discharge of all liability under the bastardy prosecution. In an action by the father against the defendant for procuring the enticement and marriage of his daughter, it was held on demurrer that the action would lie.

V. MEASURE OF DAMAGES—1. In Action by Husband.—Where an action is brought by a husband for the abduction of his wife, the measure of damages must depend upon the previous relations of the parties; and this is a question for the jury.¹

Mother's Consent Procured by Fraud.—Consent of the mother to the child's leaving home, if obtained by fraud, is no defense to an action for enticing away such a child. Kreag v. Anthus, 2 Ind. App. 482; Evans v. Walton, L. R. 2 C. P. 615.

Request of Mother.—Nor is it a defense that the defendant took the child at the request of its mother whom he believed to be the lawful custodian. Rice v. Nickerson, 9 Allen (Mass.) 478, 85 Am. Dec. 777.

Immorality on the Part of the Father and Family, or previous sexual intercourse by the child, is no defense for enticing away the child. Dobson v. Cothran, 34 S. Car. 518.

1. Dependent upon Prior Relations of the Parties.—Cooley on Torts (2d ed.) 263, 264.

In Holtz v. Dick, 42 Ohio St. 23, 51 Am. Rep. 791, the court, by Okey, J., said: "A man properly demeaning himself is entitled to the society and assistance of his wife against all the world. Whoever unlawfully deprives him of such society or assistance is liable to an action. In estimating damages, however, each case must be determined by the circumstances attending it, and the motive of the intervening person must be ever kept in view. The cases may be properly divided into two classes: one where a villain interferes for the purpose of seduction, or the sole ground of interference is malice; the other where friends, usually parents, interfere for the protection of the wife and the offspring, if any. In the first class the husband, if without fault, is always entitled to damages; in the latter, if the motive of the intervening person was pure, and the appearances seemed to indicate necessity for interference, there can be no recovery, though no occasion for interference really existed. Much will be forgiven the parents of a wife who honestly interfere in her behalf, though the interference was wholly unnecessary, and may have been detrimental to her interest and happiness, as well as that of her husband; still, where the motive is not protection of the wife, but hatred and ill-will of the husband, it is no answer to his action for such interference that the offenders were his wife's parents. Friend v. Thompson, Wright (Ohio) 639; Rabe v. Hanna, 5 Ohio 530." See Johnson v. Allen, 100 N. Car. 131.

Reason of the Rule.—Any unhappy relations existing between the plaintiff and his wife, not caused by the conduct of the defendant, may affect the question of damages, and are properly submitted to the jury; but they are in no sense a justification or palliation of the defendant's conduct. They are allowed to affect the damages, not because the acts of the defendant are less reprehensible, but because the conduct of the husband is such that the injury which such acts occasion is less than it otherwise might have been. Hadley v. Heywood, 121 Mass. 239.

Previous Relations Shown by Statements of Letters of Wife.—Statements made or letters written by the wife may be proved to show the previous state of their relations. Willis v. Bernard, 8 Bing. 376, 21 E. C. L. 325. See Palmer v. Crook, 7 Gray (Mass.) 418; Gilchrist v. Bale, 8 Watts (Pa.) 355, 34 Am. Dec. 469; White v. Ross, 47 Mich. 172.

What may be Shown in Mitigation of Damages—Common Drunkard.—The fact that the husband is a common drunkard or otherwise a man of bad character will not mitigate damages. Norton v. Warner, 9 Conn. 172. See, contra, — v. Moor, 1 M. & S. 284.

Connivance.—But it is competent to show that he had suffered no damage by reason of his conniving at his wife's wantonness or allowing her to prostitute herself: volenti non fit injuria.

Turning Wife out of Doors—Association by her with Lewd Women.—Or if he turns her out of doors, or she associates with lewd women, it shows that her society was of no value to him. Norton v. Warner, 9 Conn. 172; Duberley v. Gunning, 4 T. R. 651.

Ill Temper.—Intolerable ill temper may be proved in mitigation. 1 Selw. N. P. 30.

Husband's Infidelity.—So, also, may the man's infidelity to his wife be proved in mitigation. Bromley v. Wallace, 4 Esp. 237; Hodges v. Windham, Peake 39; Wyndham v. Wycombe, 4 Esp. 16.

Husband's Social Position.—It has been held in the United States that the rank or quality of the plaintiff will not affect the question of damages. Norton v. Warner, 9 Conn. 174; Buford v. M'Luny, 1 Nott & M. (S. Car.) 277. See Decl. Ind., § 1.

But a different opinion seems to prevail in England. 3 Black. Com. 140; Esp. Dig. 343 (ed. 1794).

Pecuniary Circumstances of Defendant as Enhancing the Damages.—And it has been held that evidence of the pecuniary circumstances of the defendant may be given in order to enhance the damages. Johnson v. Allen, 100 N. Car. 139. See Adcock v. Marsh, 8 Ired. (N. Car.) 360; Howell v. Howell, 10 Ired. (N. Car.) 84; McAulay v. Birkhead, 13 Ired. (N. Car.) 28, 55 Am. Dec. 427; Reeves v. Winn, 97 N. Car. 246, 2 Am. St. Rep. 287; Bradley v. Morris, Busb. (N. Car.) 395; Smithwick v. Ward, 7 Jones (N. Car.) 64, 75 Am. Dec. 453.

Punitive Damages.—Punitive damages may be recovered when abduction is accompanied by seduction. Johnson v. Allen, 100 N. Car. 131.

But a man who estranges a wife's affections is liable, although there is no elopement or adultery. Rinehart v. Bills, 82 Mo. 534, 52 Am. Rep. 385. Or if he takes her with her own consent, but against her husband's. Higham v. Vanosdol, 101 Ind. 160.

Excessive Damages.—The court will not set aside the verdict of the jury because the

2. In Action by Wife.—The measure of damages in an action by the wife for alienating her husband's affection and causing him to abandon her is based on the actual injury done her by the loss of her husband's affection and support, and on the pecuniary circumstances of the defendant.¹

3. In Action by Parent—General Rule.—Where a parent brings an action for the abduction of a child the jury may grant actual compensatory damages estimated on the basis of loss of service, and in their discretion punitive damages also.²

No Claim Made for Special Damage.—If no claim is made for special damage the parent may recover actual damage, and also the expenses incurred in getting possession of the child.³

Exemplary Damages may be recovered where aggravating circumstances are shown. It is not necessary that there should be fraud, malice, or oppression; the manner in which the wrong is done and the consequences attending it will determine the amount.⁴

damages were excessive, except in extreme cases. Winsmore v. Greenbank, Willes 577; Duberley v. Gunning, 4 T. R. 651.

1. Principle upon which Damages Estimated.—In Waldron v. Waldron, 45 Fed. Rep. 315, the court, by Bunn, J. (charging the jury), said: "If you find for the plaintiff, you will return a verdict that you find the defendant guilty, and you will assess the damages the plaintiff will be entitled in that case to recover. These should be apportioned and assessed according to the extent and character of the injury sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the wrongful act of the defendant, from a consideration of all the circumstances in evidence in the case. If the injury caused by the wrongful act of the defendant has been great, the damages should be proportionately great. If the injury has been small, the damages should be proportionately small. If the jury should find from the evidence that the marital relations of the plaintiff and Waldron were unhappy; that when he left her and came to Chicago on June 6, 1886, he had already lost his respect and affection for the plaintiff; that on account of the infelicity of their relations he then deserted and abandoned her without any hope of condonement or reconciliation; and that by reason of these things the marital relation existing between them was of little or no value to the plaintiff; the jury, in such case, may, in the exercise of a sound discretion, if they think they are justified on a full consideration of all the evidence, return a verdict for a very small sum, or for nominal damages; but this is a question of fact wholly for the jury. The ground of damages will be mainly the injury to the plaintiff's feelings, the loss of her husband's support, his affections, his aid, society, and companionship, caused by the wrongful acts of the defendant, and should be fairly and dispassionately assessed according to the nature and extent of the injury so sustained by the plaintiff, from a full and careful consideration of all the evidence and circumstances in the case, including, of course, the evidence given you of the pecuniary circumstances of the defendant; and, in addition to the damages compensatory in character, if the jury believe that the injury was inflicted wantonly and maliciously, they may, in their discretion, add thereto such sum as you may think just and proper as exemplary or punitive damages, as a punishment to the defendant."

Common-law Idea—Loss of Service.—The right of action at the common law appears to have been limited to the right to recover damages for loss of service, which led to the conclusion that when the child was so young as to be incapable of rendering service no action would lie. Hall v. Hollander, 7 D. & R. 133, 4 B. & C. 660; Eager v. Grimwood, 1 Exch. 61; Grinnell v. Wells, 7 M. & G. 1033, 49 E. C. L. 1033, 8 Scott N. R. 741.

Modern Doctrine.—But this is no longer the law. See Kirkpatrick v. Lockhart, 2 Brev. (S. Car.) 276; Clark v. Bayer, 32 Ohio St. 299, 30 Am. Rep. 593.

He may also recover expenses incurred by reason of sickness caused by the defendant's wrongful act. Clark v. Bayer, 32 Ohio St. 299, 30 Am. Rep. 593.

The father may recover for his mental suffering caused by the injury, though he may not introduce evidence thereof distinct from and in addition to that which shows the nature and extent of the injury. Stowe v. Heywood, 7 Allen (Mass.) 118.

VI. ABDUCTION AS A CRIME—1. Common-law Rule.—Where minor children are taken from their parents, or from those standing in loco parentis, by sinister means, whether by violence, deceit, conspiracy, or any corrupt or improper practice, as by intoxication, for the purpose of marrying them, such criminal means will render the act an offense at common law, although the parties themselves may consent to the marriage.¹

Marrying Female under Age, without Consent of Parent or Guardian.—But merely marrying a woman under age, without the consent of her parent or guardian, is not a crime.²

2. Under the Statutes—a. IN GENERAL.—The statutes in the various jurisdictions constitute the taking or detaining of a woman against her will with intent to marry her, or to have her married to another, or to have carnal knowledge of her or that another shall have such knowledge, a crime, and provide adequate punishment. So the taking away, detaining, or alluring a woman, under an age limited by the local law, by fraud or otherwise, out of the possession and against the will of her father or other person having the lawful charge or care of her, with the same intent, is made a felony and punished accordingly.³

1. Abduction as a Crime at Common Law.—1 East P. C. c. 11, § 9, p. 459; 1 Russell on Crimes 940; 3 Chit. Com. Law 713; Rex v. Grey Mich., 34 Car. 2, 3 St. Tr. 519; Rex v. Moor, 2 Mod. 130; Reg. v. Blacket, 7 Mod. 39; Rex v. Twisleton, 1 Lev. 257, 1 Sid. 387, 2 Keb. 432; Rex v. Thorp, Carth. 384, 5 Mod. 221, Com. 27, 12 Mod. 516; Rex v. Pierson, Andr. 310; Rex v. Story, 3 Keb. 101; Rex v. Ossulston, 2 Stra. 1107; Rex v. Ward, 1 W. Bl. 386; Rex v. Furas, B. R. temp. W. & M., MS. Tracy; Rex v. Harris, 4 T. R. 202; Rex v. Sainsbury, 4 T. R. 457. See Stat. Westm., 2113 Edw. I. c. 35; 2 Inst. 440; 2 P. Wms. 110; Reg. v. Mears, 2 Den. C. C. 79; Rex v. Pigot, 12 Mod. 516. In Rex v. Twisleton, 2 Keb. 432, which was an information for conspiracy and the deceitful and riotous taking away of a girl of fifteen without her father's consent, the court conceived it to be an offense at common law and held that the statutes 4 and 5 Ph. & Mary and 3 Hen. VII. (relating to abduction) were but for aggravation of punishment and did not create an offense originally. But see Rex v. Marriot, 4 Mod. 145.

A conspiracy to seduce would be an offense at common law, or to induce a woman to become a prostitute. Reg. v. Howell, 4 F. & F. 160.

In New Hampshire an indictment at common law may be sustained for an assault and false imprisonment and for kidnapping. State v. Rollins, 8 N. H. 550.

In Virginia the statute made it a crime to abduct a girl under sixteen years of age; it was held that an indictment could not be supported, at common law, for abducting a girl over sixteen. Anderson v. Com., 5 Rand. (Va.) 627, 16 Am. Dec. 776.

In North Carolina the statute against abducting children fixes the age at fourteen years. It was held that an indictment would not lie at common law for the abduction of a child fifteen years of age. State v. Sullivan, 85 N. Car. 506.

In State v. Rice, 76 N. Car. 194, an indictment was found against the defendant for enticing a minor servant from the service of its parent. It was held that the statute applied only to servants by contract or indenture; and that the indictment could not be supported under the common law, because abduction of a child was not a public offense unless made so by statute.

The court in these North Carolina cases decided that there is no authority for the proposition that the abduction of a female is an indictable offense at common law. As it is a disputed question, the benefit of the doubt has been given in the text in favor of the elastic energy of the common law.

Where the common-law method of indictment is superseded by statutory method, see Rex v. Marriot, 4 Mod. 144; Hartley v. Hooker, Cowp. 524. Where it is cumulative, see Rex v. Robinson, 2 Burr. 803; Rex v. Davis, Sayer 133; Rex v. Boyall, 2 Burr. 832; Rex v. Balme, Cowp. 648; Cates v. Knight, 3 T. R. 442; Rex v. Harris, 4 T. R. 202; Rex v. Sainsbury, 4 T. R. 451.

The law is now settled in England by 24 and 25 Vict., c. 100, § 53; and for the provision of similar enactments in the United States see the various local statutes.

Georgia.—Under the Georgia Code, inveigling children is, under § 4338, as much kidnapping as forcible abduction under § 4367. Dowda v. State, 74 Ga. 12.

Under the Georgia Code, § 4368, one who persuades a girl of sixteen to leave her parents and without their knowledge or consent to go with him into another county, is guilty of kidnapping. Thweatt v. State, 74 Ga. 821.

To carry off with her consent, for the pur-

b. THE TAKING—(1) What Constitutes—Force or Violence Unnecessary.—It is not necessary in order to constitute a taking that force or violence be used. It may be accomplished by persuasion, enticement, or device; but it must be accomplished by the active influence of the accused, and for the illicit purpose forbidden by the statute.¹

But Active Influence for the Illicit Purpose Necessary.—There must be some positive act to get the female away from the person having the legal charge of her; mere seduction does not amount to a taking, nor does receiving or affording protection to a girl who has left her parents of her own accord.²

pose of marriage, a girl of fourteen, is not kidnapping under Georgia Code, § 4368. Cochran v. State, 91 Ga. 763.

Kentucky.—As to facts showing guilt under the Kentucky statute, see Malone v. Com., 91 Ky. 307. Under this statute the offense may be complete though the woman is insane. Higgins v. Com., 94 Ky. 54. Under this statute the gravamen of the offense is the detention against the woman's will. Payner v. Com. (Ky., 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 927. And the indictment must allege the fact of detention. Krambiel v. Com. (Ky., 1887), 2 S. W. Rep. 555.

New York.—For facts held to justify a conviction of the crime of abduction of a girl by a Chinaman, see People v. Wah Lee Mon (Supreme Ct.), 13 N. Y. Supp. 767.

Pennsylvania.—The offense defined by the Pennsylvania statute, which is equivalent to the common-law offense of kidnapping, has no application to contests between parents for the possession of their children. Burns v. Com., 129 Pa. St. 138. See also Com. v. Myers, 146 Pa. St. 24.

Texas.—Under the Texas statute, nonconsent is essential to a conviction. Castillo v. State, 29 Tex. App. 127.

1. Persuasion, Enticement, or Device Sufficient; Force Unnecessary.—State v. Johnson, 115 Mo. 480; State v. Jamison, 38 Minn. 21; State v. Keith, 47 Minn. 559; Mason v. State, 29 Tex. App. 24; People v. Demousset, 71 Cal. 611; People v. Seeley, 37 Hun (N. Y.) 190; Reg. v. Manktelow, 6 Cox C. C. 143; People v. Carrier, 46 Mich. 422; Reg. v. Timmons, 8 Cox C. C. 401; Reg. v. Olifier, 10 Cox C. C. 402.

In State v. Gordon, 46 N. J. L. 432, the defendant persuaded a girl in New York to go away with him, and they went to New Jersey; while there he interposed his will to prevent her from returning. It was held that the abduction was complete in New Jersey by his detaining her, and that he could be indicted in that state, albeit the original taking was done out of the jurisdiction. It will not amount to abduction within the meaning of the statute if the girl's mother allows or encourages the girl in a lax course of life, as it is held to amount to a consent to the taking away of her daughter. Reg. v. Primelt, 1 F. & F. 50.

It has been held that a conviction under the Mississippi statute cannot be had unless the female was taken away unlawfully, against her will, and by force, menace, fraud, deceit, stratagem, or duress, compelled or induced to be defiled. Lampton v. State (Miss., 1892), 11 So. Rep. 656.

It was held in People v. Carrier, 46 Mich. 422, that enticement need not necessarily involve a direct proposition, but that the defendant's conduct might be equivalent thereto, even though, for the purpose of evading the statute, he attempted himself to avoid a proposition, and even though he so managed the matter that the proposition appeared to come from the girl or from somebody else. See, further, Beyer v. People, 86 N. Y. 369; Schnicker v. People, 88 N. Y. 194; Kauffman v. People, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 82.

In State v. Jamison, 38 Minn. 21, the defendant had been criminally intimate with the girl previously, and she was pregnant by him. He took her away and sent her home to his mother's for the purpose of hiding her disgrace, and that she might be cared for. The court, by Vanderburgh, J., said: "It must not only appear that the female was taken away or induced to leave through the active influence or persuasion of the accused, but it must also appear that it was done for the illicit purpose defined, and without such proof the prosecution must fail." It was held that the purpose of the taking was not the one forbidden by the statute.

2. Instances.—People v. Parshall, 6 Park Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 129. In this case the defendant met the girl on the street, but not by any previous agreement, and took her away to a place where he seduced her. The evidence showed that he had never been to the girl's house, nor did he even know that she had any parents, and that he had not influenced her in any way to leave her parents. It was held that he was not guilty of taking the girl within the statute.

In People v. Plath, 100 N. Y. 590, 53 Am. Rep. 236, upon the trial of an indictment for abduction, it appeared that the defendant kept a dance-hall or concert saloon in the city of New York. The testimony of K., the female alleged to have been abducted, was to the effect that she was about fifteen years of age, of somewhat dissolute character, living with her parents in Newark; that in company with a young companion, a former inmate of a house of prostitution, she went to New York without the consent of her parents, and in strolling about came to and entered the defendant's saloon; after sitting in the bar-room for a while she asked the defendant "how much it was to see the entertainment." He answered, "Nothing, my little dear; come in," and asked if they had come to stay, to which K. replied that she had. He then invited them upstairs, took indecent liberties with their persons, and offered K. a dress, which she refused.

(2) Gist of the Offense.—The gist of the offense is the taking with intent to marry or carnally know; it is immaterial what kind of inducements are held out.¹ It will amount to abduction and a taking within the meaning of the

She remained in the place voluntarily for about a month, leading the life of a prostitute. No evidence was given that the defendant knew K.'s true name, her place of residence, or that he had any previous acquaintance with her or her family, their circumstances, or condition. Other witnesses testified that they visited the saloon while K. was there; that there were a number of men and women dancing and drinking, and among them K.; that they asked the defendant if he had a young girl from Newark, by the name of K., but he denied any knowledge of such a girl, and offered to allow them to search the premises. While they were talking K. disappeared. They inspected the upper rooms, the appearance of which, as described, indicated that they were used for purposes of prostitution. A physical examination of K.'s person showed that attempts at sexual intercourse had been made, but that it had not been accomplished. It was held that the evidence failed to sustain a conviction for enticing away within the statute.

In Reg. v. Miller, 14 Moak Rep. 633, the girl was in the lawful charge of her master, who gave her permission to visit her family. While away with his permission she met the defendant, but not in pursuance of any previous agreement, and they went away and cohabited together for a day or two. It was held not to amount to a taking.

In Reg. v. Hibbert, 11 Cox C. C. 246, the prisoner met the girl on the street and took her to a house and seduced her, and afterward took her back to where he found her. He did not know that she had a parent. It was held that he had not taken the girl within the meaning of the statute.

A fraudulent detention will amount to abduction. Reg. v. Johnson, 15 Cox C. C. 481.

Where a wife separates from and leaves her husband and takes their two-year-old child with her, the person aiding and assisting her to leave is not guilty of abduction in taking the child from its father's control or possession. The mother has equal rights with the father to the control of their children. State v. Angel, 42 Kan. 216.

1. What Amounts to a "Taking"—Instances.—Under the North Carolina statute, the act of taking is the gist of the offense, and may be accomplished by persuasion or any verbal inducements. State v. Chisenhall, 106 N. Car. 676.

In Slocum v. People, 90 Ill. 274, the defendant met the girl by appointment a short distance from her father's house, about twice a week, and took her away a short distance and had intercourse with her; she returning to the house almost immediately after the act. It was held that there had been a taking from her father's possession.

In Reg. v. Hopkins, C. & M. 254, 41 E. C. L. 143, the prisoner fraudulently gained the consent of the girl's parents to his taking her away, by representing that he had secured a place for her at service. He took her to his house and cohabited with her for ten days. It was held that he was guilty of taking within the statute.

In People v. Brown, 71 Hun (N. Y.) 601, the female was at service, and, in pursuance of an agreement between the defendant and another man and his wife, all four went to a neighboring town, ostensibly to attend the county fair. After visiting several saloons and a show during the day, they went to a hotel, and late at night the woman of the party sent the girl to bed, and shortly afterward the defendant came to her room and she let him in and he stayed all night. This was repeated two or three nights. It was held that he was guilty within the New York statute.

It does not relieve the prisoner of the guilt of taking the female, even if she proposed the going and he simply aided her in getting away. Thus, in Reg. v. Robins, 1 C. & K. 456, 47 E. C. L. 456, the prisoner, at the solicitations of the female, agreed to elope with her; at night he brought a ladder and put it under her window and aided her to descend, and they went away. It was held that he was guilty of taking under the English statute.

In Reg. v. Tinkler, 1 F. & F. 513, the facts showed that the girl was an orphan; her sister had placed her with the prosecutrix. The defendant, who was the husband of one of the girl's sisters, promised her father on his deathbed to take care of her, and, believing that he was entitled to her possession, he forcibly took her out of the possession of the prosecutrix. It was held that it was not error to direct the jury to find for the defendant.

In England, at one time, motives of lucre constituted a material part of the offense, and unless the female was an heir apparent, the taking was held not within the statute. 12 Coke 100; 1 Russell on Crimes 942; Burton v. Morris, Hob. 182; Cro. Car. 485; Brown's Case, 1 Ventr. 243. But see 24 and 25 Vict., c. 100, § 54.

The taking alone did not constitute the offense under the early English law; it was necessary that the woman should have been married or seduced by the abductor. Wakefield's Case, 2 Lew 1; Fulwood's Case, Cro. Car. 493; Swendsen's Case, 5 St. Tr. 452; Rex v. Gordon, R. & R. C. C. 48. But this is not now the law. 1 Russell on Crimes 942.

In People v. Fowler, 88 Cal. 138, it was held that the gist of the offense was the taking away of the child against the will of the person having lawful charge of her, for the purposes of prostitution, and that one who did so acted at her peril and could not defend herself on the plea of ignorance of the age of the child. Necessarily the gist of the offense will vary more or less with the provision of the local statutes.

statute if the female leaves in pursuance of inducements held out to her, although such inducements were held out some time previous to the act of leaving, and the person who held them out disapproved of her leaving at the time she actually left.¹

(3) When Offense Complete.—The offense is complete when the taking with the intent to marry or carnally know is actually effected; it is immaterial whether the marriage or defilement takes place subsequently or not.²

(4) From Parent's Custody.—A female, under the statutes relating to the abduction of women, is, in contemplation of law, in the charge of her father, whether she is living with him or not, and even though she may not know that her father is alive.³ His care of her is not broken unless she leaves home with the intention of not returning.⁴ Where the girl is living with other per-

1. Reg. v. Olifier, 10 Cox C. C. 402. In this case, the defendant, a married man, paid attentions to the young woman alleged to have been abducted, and it was understood between them that they were to be married as soon as he could secure a divorce from his wife, and it was agreed that they should go away together. While he was away some facts, discreditable to the person at whose house she had met the defendant, came to the knowledge of her parents, and, fearing that she might be forcibly deprived of her visits to see him, she ran away and went to this person's house. When the defendant learned of this he was displeased, and said she had done wrong, but finally they went away together to London and Paris. It was held that, as the evidence showed that the girl had left in pursuance of a previous understanding or inducements held out to her by the defendant, he was guilty of enticing within the statute. Reg. v. Robbins, 4 F. & F. 59.

2. When the Offense Complete—Gravamen of Offense.—1 Russell on Crimes 941; 24 and 25 Vict., c. 200, §§ 53, 54.

In State v. Johnson, 115 Mo. 480, where it was held that the fact that the female was unchaste was no defense to the action, the court, by Burgess, J., said: "It was the 'taking away' for the purpose of concubinage that constituted the offense and violated the law, whether sexual intercourse followed or not." See also State v. Gibson, 108 Mo. 575; Slocum v. People, 90 Ill. 274; State v. Gibson, 111 Mo. 92; Henderson v. People, 124 Ill. 607, 7 Am. St. Rep. 391.

Under a statute against stealing a child with the intention of concealing it from its parents, the intent to unlawfully conceal is the gist of the action, and it is erroneous to instruct the jury that the taking is the gist. Mayo v. State, 43 Ohio St. 567. The intent with which the act is done may be inferred from the subsequent acts of the parties. Beyer v. People, 86 N. Y. 369.

In Henderson v. People, 124 Ill. 607, 7 Am. St. Rep. 391, the court said: "The gravamen of the offense is the purpose or intent with which the enticing and abduction is done, and hence the offense, if committed at all, is complete the moment the subject of the crime is removed beyond the power and control of her parents, or of others having lawful charge of her, whether any illicit intercourse ever takes place or not. Subsequent acts are only important as affording the most reliable means of forming a correct conclusion with respect to the original purpose and intention of the accused."

3. When Child in Custody of Parent, in Legal Contemplation.—People v. Cook, 61 Cal. 478; State v. Round, 82 Mo. 679. See Reg. v. Boswell, 2 Cox C. C. 279; Reg. v. Olifier, 10 Cox C. C. 402.

In State v. Round, 82 Mo. 679, the female went to visit an uncle in the adjoining state, with the permission of her parents. While there, the defendant called for her and represented that her mother was ill and that her parents wanted her to come home. On the way home they stayed together over night in the woods, and he accomplished her seduction. It was held that the girl was in the possession of her father, in the contemplation of the law, at the time of the taking, and that the crime was committed in Missouri.

A girl under eighteen was placed by her father in the employ of C. She left the service in about a week without the knowledge or consent of her father. She then led an immoral life until she met the defendant. An improper intimacy at once commenced between the defendant and herself; and, at its beginning, he proposed that she should go into a house of prostitution and support him out of the money made by her as an inmate of such house. It was held that the defendant was guilty, as the girl, when taken, was, in contemplation of the law, in charge of her father. People v. Cook, 61 Cal. 478.

In Reg. v. Timmins, 8 Cox C. C. 401, the girl, with whom the prisoner had previously stayed overnight, met him on the street by previous agreement and went away with him and stayed three days. It was held that she was in her father's possession when the taking or enticing was accomplished. The mother is equally with the father entitled to the custody of her children. State v. Angel, 42 Kan. 216.

The parent has the right to the services and control of his child during his minority, by operation of law, and it is no objection to a prosecution that the child had not contracted in writing to serve the parent. Gandy v. State, 81 Ala. 68. See also People v. Congdon, 27 Mich. 351.

4. Leaving Parent—Intention to Return.—Reg. v. Mycock, 12 Cox C. C. 28. In this case the evidence showed that the defendant was a barman at a tavern opposite sons with her parents' consent, or where she has been given a home by charitable persons, such persons have charge of her in contemplation of law.¹

(5) Purpose of the Taking must be Proved.—Where the defendant is charged under a criminal statute with abducting a female for the purpose of prostitution, concubinage, or otherwise, the indictment must be brought and proved in accordance with the terms of the statute.²

the residence of the girl alleged to have been abducted; that he became acquainted with the girl in question, and they were accustomed to meet and go for a walk together. On the day on which the abduction was said to have taken place, the girl and the prisoner met by previous appointment and went for a walk as usual; while walking they passed the railway station, and the defendant proposed that they should go in, and she consented. He took tickets, and they went to Manchester by the next train, staying there together two nights. The girl testified that she thought the defendant intended to marry her when he took her to Manchester. It was contended for the defendant that he was not guilty because he had not taken her out of the possession of her father, as the evidence showed that she left her father's house of her own free will, and that the crown had not proved that the defendant knew the girl was under age. The court, by Willes, J., said: "The girl was just as much in the possession of her father when she was walking in the streets, unless she had given up the intention of returning home, as if she had actually been in her father's house when taken off. Lastly, the prisoner was bound to ascertain the girl's age; or, failing that, to take the consequences of abducting her, if it turned out that she was under age." See Reg. v. Olifier, 10 Cox C. C. 402.

1. Living Separate and Apart from Parent, but with Latter's Consent.—People v. Carrier, 46 Mich. 442; State v. Ruhl, 8 Iowa 452.

In Reg. v. Miller, 13 Cox C. C. 179, the facts showed that the girl was out at service and had her master's permission to go home for a few days. On the way home she stopped and called out the prisoner, who walked part of the way home with her, and she agreed to meet him the next day and go away with him, which she did for several days. It was held that there was not a taking from her father's possession within the statute, and that it was not a taking from her master's possession, as she had permission to go away.

Where the custody of the child has been awarded to the wife on a divorce, the husband may be convicted of abducting under the New Hampshire statute, if he forcibly takes away his child, as in such a case the wife's custody is paramount. State v. Farrar, 41 N. H. 53.

All girls under sixteen years of age are presumptively in charge of some one. People v. Carrier, 46 Mich. 442.

2. Object for Which Female was Taken must be Proved.—State v. Brow, 64 N. H. 577; State v. Stoyell, 54 Me. 24, 89 Am. Dec. 716; Carpenter v. People, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 603; People v. Parshall, 6 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 129.

In State v. McCrum, 38 Minn. 154, the prosecution was under a statute containing a clause against enticing a female "into a house of assignation, ill-fame, or elsewhere for the purpose of prostitution." It was held that the place to which the female was enticed was an important element of the offense, and must be proven to be a house of ill-fame or one of similar character.

In State v. Gibson, 108 Mo. 575, a prosecution under a statute against taking for "concubinage or prostitution," the defendant proved that his purpose in taking the female away was to save his son from prosecution for getting her with child, and also to hide the girl from disgrace. It was held that he was not guilty of the offense charged.

An attempt to commit this crime is not within the statute; but where another statute allows a conviction for an attempt, such conviction may be properly had when the evidence does not prove the crime named in the indictment. People v. Milne, 60 Cal. 71.

Prostitution.—Prostitution means common, indiscriminate intercourse with men. Haygood v. State, 98 Ala. 61; Nichols v. State, 127 Ind. 406; Com. v. Cook, 12 Met. (Mass.) 93; State v. Ruhl, 8 Iowa 447; Carpenter v. People, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 603.

A forcible abduction and intercourse is not abduction for the purpose of prostitution. U. S. v. Zes Cloya, 35 Fed. Rep. 493.

If the original intention of the defendant was to render the girl a prostitute, she is guilty even though she did not succeed. Slocum v. People, 90 Ill. 280.

Concubinage.—In some cases it has been held that a single act of cohabitation will constitute the offense; in others that it will not, but that there must be several. State v. Johnson, 115 Mo. 480; State v. Gibson, 111 Mo. 92 (Thomas, J., dissenting); State v. Wilkinson, 121 Mo. 485. The case of State v. Feasel, 74 Mo. 524, which holds the contrary view, was overruled by State v. Gibson, 111 Mo. 92.

It was held in State v. Gibson, 111 Mo. 92, that a count in an indictment which charged three men with abducting a female for the purpose of concubinage by having intercourse with them charges no offense, as she could not be the concubine of all three.

In State v. Richardson, 117 Mo. 586, the defendant was shown to be a teacher and a minister with a family; he made love to the prosecutrix, and they planned an elopement, which was carried out, they going away and staying in different places for two nights, when they were apprehended and brought back. It was held that the prisoner was rightly convicted of taking away the girl for the purpose of concubinage.

* In State v. Overstreet, 43 Kan. 299, evi-

When the chastity of the woman is a material element in the offense charged, it must be proved by the prosecution.¹ But the state is not bound to prove that the defendant knew that a female whom he had abducted was under age.²

3. Defenses—a. WHAT ARE—(1) Connivance of Parent.—Where the parent encourages or connives at a lax course of life and conduct in the daughter, it will amount to a constructive consent to the abduction, and may be pleaded in defense by the person charged with such crime.³ But the consent of the parent is no defense where it is obtained by fraud.⁴

(2) Justifiable Taking—Marriage.—The defendant will be justified also where it appears that the taking was for purposes other than those forbidden by the statute, as, for instance, where the defendant is engaged to marry the woman, and they go off to consummate the engagement.⁵

b. WHAT ARE NOT—(1) Consent of Female.—The consent of the female to the taking, her voluntary going away, or even the fact that she proposed to the defendant that they should go away, and declared her intention of leaving her father's house, are no defense to the charge of abduction.⁶

dence that the defendant stayed overnight alone in a club-room with the prosecutrix; that she went to his house when his wife was away; and that he showed her attentions, gave her presents, and wrote letters to her, was held sufficient to justify a conviction for enticing away for the purpose of concubinage.

In Slocum v. People, 90 Ill. 274, the evidence showed that the defendant was in the habit of meeting the prosecutrix a short distance from her father's house and taking her to his house and having connection with her three or four times a week; also that his wife frequently called her into the house for the same purpose. It was held to amount to a taking for the purpose of concubinage.

In People v. Parshall, 6 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 129, it was held that a purpose of concubinage would not be inferred where the defendant, when the offense was charged to have been committed, was a married man, living with his wife at the place where the acts of concubinage were alleged to have occurred, and when the girl was under fourteen years of age and physically undeveloped.

In Michigan, the rule laid down by the courts is that the word "concubinage" has no established common-law meaning, but covers any lewd intercourse between the parties. People v. Cummons, 56 Mich. 544.

A statute against enticing away a female "for the purpose of prostitution, concubinage, or marriage," covers every purpose of unlawful enticement. People v. Bristol, 23 Mich. 118.

1. Chastity of the Woman.—Com. v. Whitaker, 131 Mass. 224. But see Slocum v. People, 90 Ill. 274, where it was said that the presumption of law was in favor of chastity, and that it was for the defendant to prove the contrary.

2. Reg. v. Mycock, 12 Cox C. C. 28; Reg. v. Robins, 1 C. & K. 456, 47 E. C. L. 456.

3. Consent of Parent.—Reg. v. Primelt, 1 F. & F. 50. The facts in this case showed that the female abducted was very attractive; that her mother allowed her to go where she pleased and with whom she pleased; that she stayed out late nights and went to dances at public houses; that her mother left the door unlocked to facilitate her entrance at any time she chose to come in. It was held that the mother had so encouraged the girl in a lax course of life as constructively to amount to a consent. In summing up, the court told the jury that if "they thought the mother had, by her conduct, countenanced her daughter in a lax course of life, by permitting her to go out alone at night, and to dance at public inns, this was not a case that came within the intent of the statute, but was one where what had occurred, though unknown to her, could not be said to have happened against her will." This ruling was followed in Brown v. State, 72 Md. 477. See State v. Stone, 106 Mo. 1; State v. Chisenhall, 106 N. Car. 676.

In People v. Fowler, 88 Cal. 136, it was held that where the mother had the actual custody of a minor female, she had the legal charge of her person within the California Penal Code, § 267, and that it was no defense to a charge of abducting such female minor that, as between the father and mother, the latter may have had the better right to the custody of the child, and may have given her consent to the abduction.

4. Consent of Parent Procured through Fraud.—Reg. v. Hopkins, C. & M. 254, 41 E. C. L. 143.

5. Justifiable Taking.—People v. Marshall, 59 Cal. 386. In this case the defendant showed that he was engaged to be married to the girl alleged to have been abducted, and that they went away for the purpose of being married, and that he in good faith intended to marry her. This was held to be a good defense.

6. Consent of Female.—Reg. v. Keppers, 4 Cox C. C. 167; Reg. v. Mankletow, 6 Cox C. C. 143; Rex v. Twisleton, 2 Keb. 432; State v. Stone, 106 Mo. 1; People v. Cook, 61 Cal. 478; People v. Dolan, 96 Cal. 315; Tucker v. State, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 633.

In Reg. v. Biswell, 2 Cox C. C. 279, the girl proposed to the defendant that they should

(2) Ignorance of Age.—Ignorance of the girl's age, or even a strong reason for believing from her appearance or statements that she was over the age limited by statute, is no defense.¹

(3) Previous Unchastity.—Where the local statute does not so provide or intend, the previous unchastity of the female is no defense to a charge of abduction.²

(4) Parent's Harsh Treatment.—The parent's harsh treatment of his family is no defense to one who fraudulently entices and carries away his daughter.³

(5) Merger of Offense.—A defendant cannot plead, in defense to a charge of abduction, that when such abduction for the purpose of concubinage is complete it amounts only to seduction.⁴

VII. EVIDENCE—1. On Abduction of Wife—a. STATEMENTS OF WIFE.—Statements by the wife, at and before the time of the alleged enticement, to the effect that her husband ill treated her, are admissible to prove a reason for leaving him in justification of the defendant's harboring her against the husband's will.⁵ Such statements may be given in evidence by the husband also go away together, and, at the same time, made the statement that she intended to leave her father's house for good. It was held that the fact that she consented to the going, and even proposed it, was no defense.

1. Ignorance of Age of Female.—People v. Fowler, 88 Cal. 136; State v. Johnson, 115 Mo. 480; People v. Dolan, 96 Cal. 315; Reg. v. Prince, 13 Cox C. C. 138; Reg. v. Robins, 1 C. & K. 456, 47 E. C. L. 456.

Any one dealing with an unmarried female does so at his peril, and if she turns out to be under age, he is liable, notwithstanding the fact that she stated that she was over the age mentioned in the statute. Reg. v. Olifier, 10 Cox C. C. 402.

However, under a Texas statute enacting that a person is guilty of no offense who, laboring under a mistake of fact, commits an act that would otherwise be criminal, it was held that if the defendant had reason to believe, on diligent inquiry, that the girl was over age required by statute, he could not be convicted. Mason v. State, 29 Tex. App. 24.

2. Previous Unchastity of Woman.—People v. Demoussset, 71 Cal. 611; State v. Johnson, 115 Mo. 480. But see State v. Feasel, 74 Mo. 524; People v. Carrier, 46 Mich. 442; People v. Cook, 61 Cal. 478; Brown v. State, 72 Md. 468; State v. Gibson, 111 Mo. 92; Lyons v. State, 52 Ind. 426.

Under the Tennessee statute, previous intercourse is no defense to a prosecution, where it is proven that the female was leading a chaste life at the time of the alleged abduction. Scruggs v. State, 90 Tenn. 81. Contra, in Jenkins v. State, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 674, it was held that it was a good defense that the female abducted was lewd or a prostitute at the time of the alleged abduction. The court, by Cooke, J., said: "The object the legislature had in view in the passage of this * * * statute was to prevent the taking or enticing innocent and virtuous young females away from their parents, guardians, etc., for the purpose of making them prostitutes or concubines. We cannot conceive that the legislature could have had the purpose of visiting such punishment upon a person who merely goes with a prostitute, by an arrangement which, it may be, was contrived and proposed by her, to some place where they can more conveniently indulge in illicit intercourse." (This statute did not make the previous chastity of the female an element of the offense.)

And in State v. Gibson, 111 Mo. 92, the court, by Sherwood, C.J., said: "The intention of the statute was to prevent virtuous girls under a certain age from being taken away from under parental or other legitimate control and converted into concubines or prostitutes. If, however, before being thus taken away a girl has already lost her virtue, she is not within the protection of the statute; it came to save the virtuous, not the unchaste and the harlot." Where previous chastity is required by the statute, it is an important element of the offense, and must be proven by the state. Evidence tending to prove that the female did not possess actual personal virtue, or evidence of previous illicit intercourse with other men, may be shown. Lyons v. State, 52 Ind. 426.

3. Gravett v. State, 74 Ga. 191.

4. People v. Bristol, 23 Mich. 118.

An objection to the verdict because there is evidence that the defendant was guilty of rape is not well taken. State v. Stone, 106 Mo. 1.

5. Statements of Wife as to Husband's Ill Treatment.—Gilchrist v. Bale, 8 Watts (Pa.) 355, 34 Am. Dec. 469. See Palmer v. Crook, 7 Gray (Mass.) 420; Coleman v. White, 43 Ind. 429.

But statements made by a wife to a third person, and not part of the res gesta, and not accompanying the leaving, and which do not impute any violence or ill treatment, are not admissible even in mitigation of damages. In Glass v. Bennett, 89 Tenn. 482, Turney, C.J., said: "The declarations of Mrs. Bennett, made at the time she left her home, explanatory of her troubled mental condition and of her reasons for going to her father's house with her child, are competent as parts of the res gesta. * * * Mrs. Bennett's declarations to her father, mother, and brother, or others, assigning causes for to show the state of her feelings towards him at the time of the alleged seduction;¹ but the wife's statements concerning the words and acts of the defendant are not admissible in order to prove the charges against him.²

b. ACTS OF HUSBAND.—Parents who harbor their married daughter may prove in justification that the husband is immoral, abusive, a drunkard, and that he ill treated his wife.³

c. DECLARATIONS OF THIRD PERSON.—Statements of a person not a defendant in an action for abduction, but charged with having conspired with the defendants for that purpose, are admissible to show his connection with the conspiracy if the conspiracy is proved, but they are not evidence against the defendants unless they were made in furtherance of the common design.⁴

2. On Abduction of Husband.—A father, in justification of the abduction of his son and in mitigation of damages, may adduce evidence to prove that his son married the plaintiff while drunk, and that he never had any affection for her either before or after marriage.⁵

3. On Abduction of Child—a. AGE OF CHILD.—Statements of the father and mother as to the age of their child are the best evidence of that fact. Entries of birth, in the family Bible, are only secondary evidence.⁶

leaving her home and returning to her father's and remaining there, are competent, going to establish or disprove a justification on the part of the defendants, or either of them, in advising her, if they did so, to remain away from her home and husband. * * * Everything that can legitimately inculpate or exculpate the father and brother on the one part, or the husband and his sisters and brothers-in-law on the other, is competent for the consideration of the jury in the trial of the facts raised by the issues." And in Winsmore v. Greenbank, Willes 577, it was held that the declarations of the wife in such a case are not evidence on either side.

1. Statements, Letters, etc., of Wife Admissible to Prove State of her Feelings toward Husband.—Preston v. Bowers, 13 Ohio St. 1, 82 Am. Dec. 430; Starkie Ev. (10th ed.) 89.

The wife's letters and statements may be proved to show the state of her feelings. Cooley on Torts (2d ed.) 263.

Declarations of the wife within a few days after the marriage, expressing her wishes in relation to living with the plaintiff as his wife, are admissible. Bennett v. Smith, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 447, 1 Greenl. Ev. (14th ed.), § 108, and notes.

Where the claim is that the plaintiff's wife left voluntarily through dislike of her husband, he may produce letters from her to him in evidence to rebut such a defense. See Perry v. Lovejoy, 49 Mich. 531; Cooley on Torts (2d ed.) 225, note 2; Willis v. Bernard, 8 Bing. 376, 21 E. C. L. 325; Gilchrist v. Bale, 8 Watts (Pa.) 355, 34 Am. Dec. 469; Preston v. Bowers, 13 Ohio St. 1, 82 Am. Dec. 430.

In White v. Ross, 47 Mich. 172, the facts showed a clandestine marriage between the plaintiff and the defendant's daughter which was never consummated by cohabitation; and no force was used by the parents to keep their daughter from the plaintiff. It was held that without evidence tending to show improper interference by the parents with the plaintiff's affairs, letters from the plain-tiff's wife, written after marriage, showing affection for him, were not admissible, as the state of her feelings at this stage of the case was immaterial.

2. Preston v. Bowers, 13 Ohio St. 1, 82 Am. Dec. 430.

3. Bennett v. Smith, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 439.

4. Preston v. Bowers, 13 Ohio St. 1, 82 Am. Dec. 430.

5. Bassett v. Bassett, 20 Ill. App. 543. In this case the court, by Pillsbury, J., said: "We are of the opinion that this evidence was admissible on the ground, first, that it should be considered in mitigation of damages. The plaintiff claims that by the act of the defendant she was deprived of the love and affection of her husband, for which she claims damages. Marriage of itself cannot be considered as conclusive proof of that mutual regard and love which should be entertained by husband and wife, and where one of them seeks to recover damages for the loss of love and affection, we know of no case that goes so far as to deprive the defendant of the right of showing the real feelings of the other to the plaintiff. So it has been held in cases brought by the husband for criminal conversation, that evidence as to the terms on which the plaintiff and his wife lived together was competent in mitigation of damages. * * * We are unable to see why the same principle should not apply in this case."

But declarations of the husband, made in the absence of the defendant, to the effect that the defendant was doing all he could to bring about a separation between the plaintiff and the husband, are not admissible. Westlake v. Westlake, 34 Ohio St. 634, 32 Am. Rep. 397.

6. Statements of Parents as to Age of Child.—Dobson v. Cothran, 34 S. Car. 518; Taylor v. Hawkins, 1 McCord (S. Car.) 164.

An entry in a family Bible as to the age of a female is inadmissible to show that she was under sixteen, unless a case is made justifying the introduction of hearsay evidence. People v. Sheppard, 44 Hun (N. Y.) 565.

b. OF PARENTS' CONSENT.—Evidence of acts showing the consent of the parent to the child's abduction is admissible on behalf of the defendant;¹ and so the statements and acts of the parents are admissible to prove that they did not consent, and that they tried to find and bring their daughter back.²

c. OF LEGAL CUSTODY.—Proof of legal custody is required only when the child is taken from one other than the parent or guardian.³

d. OF FEMALE'S MORAL CHARACTER.—Evidence of the previous unchastity of the female has in some cases been held admissible and in others not, according to what is made the gist of the offense under the local statutes.⁴ But evidence of illicit intercourse with other men subsequent to the alleged abduction is not admissible, nor is evidence of the immoral character of the female members of the abducted girl's family admissible in favor of the defendant.⁵

e. IN MITIGATION OF DAMAGES.—In an action for harboring and seducing the plaintiff's child, evidence in mitigation of damages may be given to prove that the plaintiff and his family were of dissolute character.⁶

4. Evidence of Intent and Motive.—The subsequent conduct of the parties is admissible in evidence in order to prove the original intention and motive of the defendant in making the abduction.⁷

5. Statements and Acts of Defendant.—Voluntary confessions of the defendant are admissible against him.⁸ So are letters in his handwriting without date or signature, but similar in character to other letters written by him and re-

1. Evidence Showing Consent of Parent.—The defendant, in order to prove that a girl had been encouraged by her parents to lead a lax course of life, and that she was not taken from them without their consent, may give evidence of the fact that she was an inmate of a bawdy-house at the time of her abduction. Brown v. State, 72 Md. 477. See Gravett v. State, 74 Ga. 191.

In a suit for abducting a minor child, if the father does not claim special damages, the defendant cannot show that he took the child at the request of its mother, who had been awarded the custody in divorce proceedings had in another state. Rice v. Nickerson, 9 Allen (Mass.) 478, 85 Am. Dec. 777.

2. Evidence that there was no Consent.—The mother may testify that she did not consent to the defendant's taking her daughter, and also to her efforts to find her. State v. Stone, 106 Mo. 1.

The declarations of the father are also admissible to prove that he did not consent to his daughter's abduction. State v. Chisenhall, 106 N. Car. 676. The precautions that he took to prevent her being taken may also be shown. Gravett v. State, 74 Ga. 191. But where the action is against a father for enticing away his daughter, the declarations of the defendant's wife that she took her daughter away by force and without her consent are not admissible, as they would in effect be making the mother a witness to charge her husband. Burnett v. Burkhead, 21 Ark. 77, 76 Am. Dec. 358; Funkhouser v. Pogue, 13 Ark. 295; Holtz v. Dick, 42 Ohio St. 23, 51 Am. Rep. 791.

3. Ex p. Estrado, 88 Cal. 316.

4. Evidence of Previous Unchastity.—Such evidence was held immaterial and rejected in People v. Demoussset, 71 Cal. 611. See State v. Johnson, 115 Mo. 480; State v. Gib- son, 111 Mo. 92. But it was admitted in justification in Brown v. State, 72 Md. 468; Jenkins v. State, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 674.

5. Evidence of Subsequent Illicit Intercourse.—Scruggs v. State, 90 Tenn. 81.

6. Evidence of Dissoluteness of Plaintiff and Family in Mitigation of Damages.—Dobson v. Cothran, 34 S. Car. 518. Evidence of good treatment of a child after abduction is not admissible, where no damages are claimed for injury done after removal. Magee v. Holland, 27 N. J. L. 86, 72 Am. Dec. 341. Nor is a statement by a child abducted for immoral purposes, that she would not leave the house of the defendant until paid the money she had earned. Dobson v. Cothran, 34 S. Car. 518.

7. People v. Carrier, 46 Mich. 442. The fact of subsequent sexual intercourse is evidence of the original intention of the defendant in taking. State v. Johnson, 115 Mo. 480.

Evidence that the defendant took the female to a house of prostitution will justify a conviction of taking for "purposes of prostitution." People v. Marshall, 59 Cal. 386.

Under an indictment for abducting an heiress for motives of lucre, it has been held to be evidence to establish the motive, to show that the defendant had told third persons that he knew the girl would have a certain sum of money when she attained her majority. Reg. v. Barratt, 9 C. & P. 387, 38 E. C. L. 167.

Under a statute providing for the punishment of one who abducts a female infant for the purpose of prostitution, there need not be direct evidence of the purpose; if the fact and circumstances sufficiently indicate the purpose, this is enough. Ex p. Estrado, 88 Cal. 316.

8. Confession of Defendant.—State v. George, 93 N. Car. 567.

ceived by the girl.¹ But evidence that the defendant committed other offenses similar to the one charged is not admissible against him.²

6. Corroborative Evidence.—Where a conviction cannot be had under the statutes without corroborative evidence, such evidence must extend to every material element of the offense, but it need not be in itself sufficient to establish the guilt of the defendant.³

ABET. (See also the title AIDER AND ABETTOR, where the subject of aiding or abetting crimes is fully treated.)—The words “aid” and “abet” in legal phraseology are pretty much the synonyms of each other; they comprehend all assistance rendered by acts, words of encouragement or support, or by presence actual or constructive to render assistance should it become necessary. No particular acts are necessary.⁴

ABEYANCE. (See also the title REAL PROPERTY.)—This word as applied to real property, whether estates or dignities, denotes that the same are in expectation, remembrance, or intendment of the law. Abeyance is said to be of two sorts, being either (first) abeyance of the fee simple, or (second) abeyance of the freehold. The first is where there is an actual estate of freehold in esse, but the right to the fee simple is suspended, and is to revive upon the happening of some event; e.g., in the case of a lease to A for life, remainder to the right heirs of B, who is alive, the fee simple is in abeyance until B dies.⁵ Similarly, during the incumbency of each successive incumbent of a church, he having only a freehold interest therein, the fee simple is in abeyance.⁶ The

1. Letters.—State v. Overstreet, 43 Kan. 299.

But on the trial of an indictment charging the defendant with abducting a woman for the purpose of marrying her, evidence that after the affair he wrote her letters threatening to kill her if she did not marry him, was held to be incompetent. State v. Maloney, 105 Mo. 10.

2. Evidence of the Commission of Other Like Offenses.—People v. Gibson, 6 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 390. In this case it was held error to admit evidence of the fact that other girls had been seen to enter the defendant's rooms, to show that he was in the habit of enticing young girls in there. Cargill v. Com. (Ky., 1890), 13 S. W. Rep. 916.

3. State v. Keith, 47 Minn. 560; People v. Plath, 100 N. Y. 590, 53 Am. Rep. 236.

A medical examination of a young girl eight months after the commission of the alleged offense is admissible. State v. Keith, 47 Minn. 560.

4. Raiford v. State, 59 Ala. 108, citing Bouv. and Webster Dict. See also Frantz v. Lenhart, 56 Pa. St. 366.

A statute providing that any one abetting in a crime might be prosecuted as principal was held not to apply to a purchaser of liquors. The court said: “But we are satisfied that the purchaser is not an abettor of the offense within the meaning of the statute. The abetting intended by it is a positive act in aid of the commission of the offense, a force, physical or moral, joined with that of the perpetrator in producing it. This is clear from the context, where abetting is classed with ‘assisting,’ ‘causing,’ ‘hiring,’ and ‘commanding.’ The abettor, within the meaning of the statute, must stand in the same relation to the crime as the criminal—approach it from the same direction, touch it at the same point. This is not the case with the purchaser of liquor. His approach to the crime is from the other side; he touches it at wholly another point. It is somewhat like the case of a man who provokes or challenges another to fight with him. If the other knocks him down, he has induced, but in no proper sense abetted, this act of violence. He has not contributed any force to its production. He touches the offense wholly on the other side. The purchaser of liquor, by his offer to buy, induces the seller of the liquor to make the sale, but he cannot be said to ‘assist’ him in it. The whole force, moral or physical, that went to the production of the crime as such, was the seller's.”

5. Co. Litt. 342b.

6. “The Fee, or Inheritance, being in Abeyance.—That is (as the word signifies) in expectation, remembrance, and contemplation in law, there being no person in esse in whom it can vest; though the law considers it as always potentially existing, and ready to vest whenever a proper owner appears. Thus, in a grant to John for life, and afterwards to the heirs of Richard, the inheritance is plainly granted neither to John nor to Richard, nor can it vest in the heirs of Richard till his death, nam nemo est hæres viventis; it remains, therefore, according to Littleton and earlier writers, including Blackstone, in waiting or abeyance during the life of Richard. 2 Bl. Com. 107; 3 Th. Co. Litt. 102, 103.” 2 Minor Ins. (3d ed.) 74.

“Mr. Fearn, however, considers that the inheritance can in no case be properly said to be in abeyance, but that it remains in the grantor, or, in the case of a will, in the deviser's heirs, until the contingency occurs on which it is to vest. 2 Bl. Com. 107, note 8; Fearn's Rem. 351, 360, 363.” 2 Minor Ins. (3d ed.) 75, 388, 389.

second species of abeyance, i.e., an abeyance of the freehold itself, occurs on the death of an incumbent, and until the appointment of his successor.¹

It was customary in speaking of a thing in abeyance to say that it was in nubibus, which was rather a profane expression, or in gremio legis,² the latter phrase denoting that the fee simple or freehold which was in abeyance was meanwhile under the care or protection of the law.

There is no abeyance either of the fee simple or of the freehold in the case of conveyances operating under the statute of uses, for in these what is not given away remains in the grantor until it is so given.³

If a freehold could commence to pass in futuro, there would be an abeyance and want of a tenant against whom to bring a præcipe, and the law will not suffer the land to be in abeyance a single day, if possible to prevent this.⁴

ABIDE. (See also the title EVENT.)—To abide a judgment, order, or award, is to perform it, to execute it, to conform to it.⁵

When contingent remainders began to be allowed, a question arose, which is yet scarcely settled, what becomes of the inheritance, in such a case as this, during the life of J. S.? A. the tenant for life, has but a life interest; J. S. has nothing, and his heir is not yet in existence. The ancient doctrine that the remainder must vest at once or not at all, has been broken in upon; but the judges could not make up their minds also to infringe on the corresponding rule, that the fee simple must, on every feoffment which confers an estate in fee, at once depart out of the feoffor. They, therefore, sagely reconciled the rule which they left standing, to the contingent remainders which they had determined to introduce, by affirming that, during the contingency, the inheritance was either in abeyance, or in gremio legis, or else in nubibus. Co. Litt. 342a; 1 P. Wms. 515, 516; Bac. Abr., tit. Remainder and Reversion (c). Modern lawyers, however, venture to assert that what the grantor has not disposed of must remain in him, and cannot pass from him until there exists some grantee to receive it. Fearn, Cont. Rem. 361. See, however, 2 Prest. Abst. 100-107, where the old opinion is maintained. And when the gift is by way of use under the statute of uses, there is no doubt that, until the contingency occurs, the use, and with it the inheritance, result to the grantor. So in the case of a will, the inheritance, until the contingency happens, descends to the heir of the testator. Fearn, Cont. Rem. 351; Egerton v. Massey, 3 C. B. N. S. 338, 91 E. C. L. 337; Williams on Settlements, 207-210. See the title CONTINGENT REMAINDERS.

In Wallach v. Van Riswick, 92 U. S. 212, the court said: "It is argued on behalf of the defendant, that because, under a confiscation sale of land, or of estate therein, the purchaser takes an interest terminable with the life of the person whose property has been confiscated, the fee must be somewhere; for it is said that a fee can never be in abeyance; and as the fee cannot be in the United States, they having sold all that was seized, nor in the purchaser, whose interest ceases with the life, it must remain in the person whose estate has been seized. The argument is more plausible than sound. It is a maxim of the common law that a fee cannot be in abey- ance. It rests upon reasons that now have no existence, and it is not now of universal application. But if it were, being a common-law maxim, it must yield to statutory provisions inconsistent with it; and it is therefore of no weight in the inquiry what was intended by the Confiscation Act and concurrent resolution. Undoubtedly there are some anomalies growing out of the congressional legislation, as there were growing out of the statutes of 5th and 18th Elizabeth; but it is the duty of the court to carry into effect what Congress intended, though it must be by denying the applicability of some common-law maxims, the reasons of which have long since disappeared. It has not been found necessary in England to hold that a reversion remained in a traitor after his attain, though the statutes declared that the forfeiture shall be during his natural life only."

1. "The Freehold being in Abeyance.—This, at common law, is never admitted, at least by the act of the party, for two reasons: first, that if it were allowed there would be none to render the military service; second, that there would be none to sue or to be sued for the title during such abeyance." 2 Bl. Com. 107, note 7; 3 Th. Co. Litt. note G. But by the statutes of uses, wills, and grants, which dispense with actual livery of seisin, a conveyance of the freehold does not put the freehold in abeyance, and is therefore freely allowed."

4. The necessity under the feudal system that there should be always some one ready to perform the lord's services was not the only reason which introduced the maxim of the common law that a freehold can never be placed in abeyance. It had a better foundation, which continues still to exist, that there should be always some person to answer the real action brought for the recovery of the property. Lyle v. Richards, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 322.

Arbitration. (See also the title ARBITRATION AND AWARD.)—The meaning of the term abide by is not the same as to "acquiesce in" or "not dispute." To abide by an award is the same as to abide an award, to stand to the determination of the arbitrators, and to take the consequences of the award. It means simply to await the award without revoking the submission. It can never be construed to mean that the defendant should not be at liberty to dispute the validity of any award that might be made. Shaw v. Hatch, 6 N. H. 162. See Marshall v. Reed, 48 N. H. 36.

Where a bond was conditioned to pay stipulated damages in case defendant did not abide by and perform an award, it was held that an averment of an award in favor of plaintiff, and a refusal of defendant to pay the award on demand, showed a breach of the bond. Sleeper v. Pickering, 17 N. H. 461.

Abide the Judgment.—In McGarry v. State, 37 Kan. 9, it was held that a provision to abide the judgment and orders of the court did not mean that the plaintiff or his sureties should pay or satisfy the judgment, but that he should surrender himself to the custody of the court. The court said: "Does the word abide mean pay or satisfy, or does it mean endure, or suffer, or acquiesce in, or something else? It is believed that the word abide never means pay or satisfy, while it does sometimes mean endure or suffer. And to construe the word to mean to pay or satisfy is to give the statute in which it is found a harsh and needlessly severe construction. It would compel a party to enter into a recognition with sufficient sureties to pay or satisfy a judgment, if any should ever be rendered against him, or to go to jail and be imprisoned possibly for months before any trial could be had, and although he might be ever so innocent."

Abide and Perform.—Where a bond in ne exeat was given conditioned "to abide and perform the judgment of the court," and the surety on the bond, having placed his principal in the custody of the court, petitioned to be released from the bond, his attorney contending that the effect of the bond was to abide the event of the suit, the motion was denied, the court stating that it could not regard a bond to perform, etc., as equivalent to one to abide the event of the suit, and further holding that in ne exeat a surety had no right to surrender his principal. Griswold, Petitioner, 13 R. I. 126.

Await and Abide.—A condition of a recognition on an appeal, which is conditioned for the defendant's appearance, "to await the action of the court," is not sufficient when the statute prescribes the words "to abide the judgment of the court." Wilson v. State, 7 Tex. App. 38.

"Abide the Decision."—The plaintiff in a bill in equity, praying for a discovery, for an account of the rents and profits of real estate, to which he claimed title as tenant in common with the defendant, who denied his title, and for general relief, petitioned at law for partition of the premises, and by agreement, with consent of the court, a docket entry was made in the action at law that it was "to abide decision" in the suit in equity. A verdict was afterwards returned by a jury on an issue framed in the suit in equity to try the title in the premises, and at the argument of exceptions taken at the trial an amendment of this verdict was agreed to, and the case was sent to a master to state an account. It was held that the docket entry did not require the petitioner at law to await the final decree in equity, but partition should be ordered in conformity with the title so determined. The court said that the question was not the abstract meaning of the term, but its meaning as applied to the two cases to which it referred. Hodges v. Pin-gree, 108 Mass. 585.

Abiding the Event.—For definition see supra, this title; see also the title EVENT; for complete treatment of the subject see 1 ENCYC. OF PL. & PR. 53.

Where it was stipulated that several suits should abide the event of one, it was held that after being refused judgment on one ground, taking it on another ground was no waiver of the right to take judgment upon the ground which was refused. The court said: "What was meant by the words 'abide the event'? Certainly not that the same order of proceedings should be taken, step by step, in the succeeding cases as in the first. The parties had in view no such parrot-like repetition of forms without meaning, if the end was predestined. They meant the final outcome and the end of the litigation; that the side finally successful in the first case should be successful in all." Commercial Union Assur. Co. v. Scammon, 35 Ill. App. 659.

Costs Abiding Event.—See 1 ENCYC. PL. & PR. 59.

1. Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 439. In this case it was held that a charge to the jury in a criminal case, "that if, after an impartial comparison and consideration of all the evidence, they can truthfully say that they have an abiding conviction of the defendant's guilt, they have no reasonable doubt," was not erroneous. The court, by Field, J., said: "The word abiding here has the signification of settled and fixed, a conviction which may follow a careful examination and comparison of the whole evidence. It is difficult to conceive what amount of conviction would leave the mind of a juror free from a reasonable doubt, if it be not one which is so settled and fixed as to control his action in the more weighty and important matters relating to his own affairs. exact sciences and actual observation there is no absolute certainty. The guilt of the accused, in the majority of criminal cases, must necessarily be deduced from a variety of circumstances leading to proof of the fact. Persons of speculative minds may in almost every such case suggest possibilities of the truth being different from that established by the most convincing proof. The jurors are not to be led away by speculative notions as to such possibilities."

And in Battles v. Tallman, 96 Ala. 403, it was held that an instruction that the jury must have an abiding conviction implies such a degree of certainty as would justify a verdict of guilt in a criminal case, and is, therefore, erroneous in a civil one. See also Griffiths v. State, 90 Ala. 588.

1. Construed Equivalent to "Pecuniary Ability"—Statute of Frauds.—An English statute, 9 Geo. IV., c. 14, § 6, provides that no action could be brought to charge a person by reason of a representation given concerning the ability of another person unless reduced to writing and signed. It was held that the representation should relate to the ability of the other person effectually to perform and satisfy the engagement of a pecuniary nature into which he has proposed to enter. Lyde v. Barnard, 1 M. & W. 101.

Ability to Support Wife. (See also the title DIVORCE.)—Under the Vermont statute authorizing a divorce on the ground of cruel neglect to support the wife when the husband has sufficient pecuniary ability to provide for her, it was held that it must be shown, to entitle the wife to a divorce, that the husband had sufficient property to provide suitable maintenance, and that it was not sufficient to show that he had the capacity to acquire ample means. And see Washburn v. Washburn, 9 Cal. 475.

But in Wisconsin, under a statute providing a penalty for abandonment of the wife, where the husband has sufficient ability to support her, it was held that the words "being of sufficient ability" referred as well to the husband's capacity or skill to earn or acquire money as to property actually owned by him. See also Keller v. Keller, 24 Wis. 522.

2. In Mead v. Hughes, 15 Ala. 141, 50 Am. Dec. 123, the court said: "The decision of this court in Arthur v. Broadnax, 3 Ala. 557, 37 Am. Dec. 707, affirms that if the husband has abjured the state and remains abroad, the wife meanwhile trading as a feme sole could recover on a note which was given to her as such. We must consider the term abjure, as there used, as implying a total abandonment of the state, a departure from the state without the intention of returning; and not a renunciation of one's country, upon an oath of perpetual banishment, as the term originally implied."

3. A Maine statute declares that expenses incurred for providing nurses, etc., to an infected person shall be at the charge of the person sick, "if able." It was held that the possession of six hundred dollars in available personal securities rendered a person able in the meaning of the statute, where the charges were one hundred and seventy-six dollars. Hampden v. Newburgh, 67 Me. 370.

4. Darling v. Bowen, 10 Vt. 148, in which case it was held that a physical disability or bodily infirmity, not apparent, does not exempt a person from enrolment in the militia. The enrolling officer is the judge, and error of judgment cannot be inquired into collaterally, such as in a suit for a trespass for taking and selling a mare, the property of the plaintiff, or in an amercement for nonappearance at training.

There being no exception made by the charter of a city or the ordinance imposing a tax, in favor of persons not able-bodied, and no constitutional restriction upon legislation in this respect, the fact that a citizen upon whom the tax is imposed is not able-bodied constitutes no defense to the imposition of the tax. Maccomb v. Twaddle, 4 Ill. App. 254.

A statute of Vermont, in force in 1797, provided that every healthy, able-bodied person residing within that state, and being of peaceable behavior, should be deemed to be legally settled in the town in which he should have first resided for the space of one year. It was held that in determining whether a person was healthy and able-bodied within the intent of the statute, the test is not his ability or inability during the time to perform ordinary labor and thereby support himself and family, but that a person is to be deemed not to have been healthy and able-bodied who during the year received an injury which afterward resulted in permanent disability, although not incapacitating him during the year for ordinary labor. *Marlborough v. I. DEFINITION.—By abortion is understood the act of miscarrying or producing young before the natural time; before the fœtus is perfectly formed; and to cause or produce an abortion is to cause or produce this premature bringing forth of the fœtus.¹

1. Abrams v. Foshee, 3 Iowa 278, 66 Am. Dec. 77; Butler v. Wood, 10 How. Pr. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 224.

"The act of bringing forth what is yet imperfect, and particularly the delivery or expulsion of the human fœtus prematurely or before it is yet capable of sustaining life. Also, the thing prematurely brought forth, or product of an untimely process." Abb. Law Dict., quoted in Belt v. Spaulding, 17 Oregon 130.

Abortion — Miscarriage — Premature Labor.—

"The expulsion of the ovum or embryo, within the first six weeks after conception, is technically miscarriage; between that time and the expiration of the sixth month, when the child may by possibility live, it is termed abortion; if the delivery be soon after the sixth month, it is termed premature labor. But the criminal attempt to destroy the fœtus, at any time before birth, is termed in law a miscarriage, varying as we have seen

II. THE OFFENSE—HOW REGARDED—1. At Common Law—With Consent of Woman and before Quickening.—According to some authorities, it never was an act punishable at common law to commit abortion with the consent of the mother, provided it was done before the child became quick;¹ but others are not disposed thus to restrict the criminal act, and hold that it may be committed at any stage of pregnancy.²

After Quickening.—If the abortion was committed after quickening, it was punishable only as a misdemeanor; and the attempt to commit abortion after quickening was likewise punished as a misdemeanor.³

in degree of offense and punishment, whether the attempt were before or after the child had quickened.' Chitty's Med. Jur. 410. Other writers on the subject give a similar definition of the term 'miscarriage.' Hoblyn's Dictionary. The converse of this last proposition cannot be true, as there are undoubtedly many miscarriages involving no moral wrong." Smith v. State, 33 Me. 59, 54 Am. Dec. 607.

Miscarriage, both in law and philology, means the bringing forth the fœtus before it is perfectly formed and capable of living; and is rightfully predicated of the woman, because it refers to the act of premature delivery. The word "abortion" in its primary meaning is synonymous with and equivalent to "miscarriage." It has a secondary meaning, in which it is used to denote the offspring. Mills v. Com., 13 Pa. St. 632.

Whether Abortion Necessarily Imports a Crime.—In Belt v. Spaulding, 17 Oregon 130, the court said: "It will be observed, the word 'abortion' does not occur in the section, and there is no statute defining or punishing it as a crime. The term itself does not import a crime; it simply means, according to Webster, the act of miscarrying; the expulsion of an immature product of conception; miscarriage; the immature product of an untimely birth." See also People v. Aiken, 66 Mich. 484, 11 Am. St. Rep. 512.

1. Abortion, with Mother's Consent and before Quickening.—Com. v. Parker, 9 Met. (Mass.) 263, 43 Am. Dec. 390; Com. v. Bangs, 9 Mass. 387; Com. v. Jackson, 15 Gray (Mass.) 187; Mitchell v. Com., 78 Ky. 204, 29 Am. Rep. 227; State v. Cooper, 22 N. J. L. 53, 51 Am. Dec. 248; Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48, 54 Am. Dec. 607; People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594; Abrams v. Foshee, 3 Iowa 274, 66 Am. Dec. 77; Hatfield v. Gano, 15 Iowa 178.

In 1 Arch. Crim. Pr. & Pl. 951 the following language is used: "Abortion as a crime is to be found only in modern treatises and modern statutes. No trace of it is to be found in the ancient common-law writers. * * * It is perfectly certain, by the unanimous concurrence of all the authorities, that that offense could not be committed unless the child had quickened."

"Quick with Child."—In one instance a distinction was taken between the phrases "quick with child" and "with quick child," it being held that the former means simply having conceived. Reg. v. Wycherley, 8 C. & P. 262, 34 E. C. L. 381. See also Evans v. People, 49 N. Y. 86. The court, in State v. Cooper, 22 N. J. L. 57, 51 Am. Dec.

248; said in reference to the above: "There is no foundation whatever in law for this distinction. The ancient authorities show clearly that the terms are synonymous, both importing that the child had quickened in the womb, and that the period had arrived when the life of the infant, in contemplation of law, had commenced. Baynton's Case, 14 State Trials 634; 1 Hale P. C. 368; 4 B. C. 395." According to common understanding, a woman is not "quick with child" until she has felt the child move within her. Com. v. Parker, 9 Met. (Mass.) 263, 43 Am. Dec. 396; Mitchell v. Com., 78 Ky. 204, 29 Am. Rep. 227.

2. The question was so determined by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in Mills v. Com., 13 Pa. St. 630. The court observes: "It is a flagrant crime at common law to attempt to procure the miscarriage or abortion of the woman, because it interferes with and violates the mysteries of nature in the process by which the human race is propagated and continued. It is a crime against nature, which obstructs the fountains of life, and therefore it is punished. The next error assigned is that it ought to have been charged in the count that the woman had become quick. But although it has been so held in Massachusetts and in some other states, it is not, I apprehend, the law in Pennsylvania, and never ought to have been the law anywhere. It is not the murder of a living child which constitutes the offense, but the destruction of gestation by wicked means and against nature. The moment the womb is instinct with embryo life and gestation has begun, the crime may be perpetrated."

The Supreme Court of North Carolina, following the doctrine of the case, said in reference to the above extract: "This enunciation of the law, so careful and distinct in expression, dispenses with the necessity for further discussion." State v. Slagle, 83 N. Car. 630. To the same effect is Com. v. Demain, 6 Pa. L. J. 29.

And Mr. Bishop observes in regard to the same language: "This, in principle, seems to be the reasonable and just doctrine." Bishop Stat. Crimes, § 744.

Mr. Wharton regards the question as doubtful. Wharton Cr. L. (8th ed.), § 592.

3. State v. Reed, 45 Ark. 334; Holliday v. People, 9 Ill. 111; Com. v. Parker, 9 Met. (Mass.) 263, 43 Am. Dec. 396; Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48, 54 Am. Dec. 607; State v. Cooper, 22 N. J. L. 52, 51 Am. Dec. 248; Evans v. People, 49 N. Y. 86; State v. Slagle, 82 N. Car. 630.

Without Consent of Woman.—If done without the woman's consent, the act was held to constitute an aggravated assault.¹

2. By Statute.—The statutes enacted on this subject in most of the states fail to draw any distinction between the commission of the offense, or attempt at commission, before and after the quickening of the child in the womb, making it a felony in either case. But some states still retain the distinction, punishing the act or attempt more severely when done after quickening.²

III. ELEMENTS OF THE OFFENSE—1. Pregnancy—Quick with Child.—Under the statutes in most of the states it is immaterial whether the woman be quick with child or not, the criminal act being complete if done at any time during pregnancy.³ In Michigan, however, it is essential that the fœtus be quickened.⁴

2. Intent.—It is essential to prove the evil intent, as specified in the statutes, or implied from the nature of the case, in order for the crime to be complete, since that is the gravamen of the offense.⁵ The intent to produce an abortion must exist when the means are used.⁶

How Shown.—This intention may be shown by circumstances, and by either direct or indirect testimony.⁷

1. Abortion without Consent of Woman.—In Com. v. Parker, 9 Met. (Mass.) 263, 43 Am. Dec. 396, Shaw, C.J., delivering the opinion of the court, used this language: "The use of violence upon a woman, with an intent to procure her miscarriage, without her consent, is an assault highly aggravated by such wicked purpose, and would be indictable at common law." See also Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48, 54 Am. Dec. 607; State v. Cooper, 22 N. J. L. 52, 51 Am. Dec. 248.

2. See the various local statutes. And see State v. Watson, 30 Kan. 281.

3. Stage of Pregnancy Immaterial.—State v. Fitzgerald, 49 Iowa 260, 31 Am. Rep. 148; Wilson v. State, 2 Ohio St. 319; Com. v. Tibbetts, 157 Mass. 519; Com. v. Taylor, 132 Mass. 261; Com. v. Wood, 11 Gray (Mass.) 86. In this latter case the court was inclined to the view that an indictment on Massachusetts Stat. 1845, ch. 27, for procuring a miscarriage, could not be maintained if the fœtus had previously lost its vitality so that it could never have matured into a living child.

Under the Vermont statute it is not essential that the fœtus should be alive at the time the attempt at abortion is made. State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380. See also State v. Stewart, 52 Iowa 284; Com. v. Grover, 16 Gray (Mass.) 602; Eckhardt v. People, 83 N. Y. 462, 38 Am. Rep. 462.

When Pregnancy Ceases.—It seems that pregnancy ceases when the child has come forth from the womb, though it is still attached by the umbilical cord, and though the afterbirth has not been removed. Com. v. Brown, 14 Gray (Mass.) 415.

4. People v. McDowell, 63 Mich. 229.

5. Intent the Gravamen of Offense.—Reg. v. Isaacs, L. & C. 220; Reg. v. Hillman, L. & C. 343; Reg. v. Titley, 14 Cox C. C. 502; People v. Josselyn, 39 Cal. 393; Dougherty v. People, 1 Colo. 514; Slattery v. People, 76 Ill. 217; State v. Fitzgerald, 49 Iowa 260, 31 Am. Rep. 148; Com. v. Wood, 11 Gray (Mass.) 85; State v. Owens, 22 Minn. 238; State v. Murphy, 27 N. J. L. 112; State v. Drake, 30 N. J. L. 422; State v. Gedicke, 43

N. J. L. 86; People v. Lohman, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 216; Wilson v. State, 2 Ohio St. 319.

6. Slattery v. People, 76 Ill. 217. In this case a husband assaulted and beat his wife, she being then about three months pregnant. Shortly afterwards she had a miscarriage. It was not proved that the husband desired or intended such a result. It was held that a conviction for abortion could not be sustained.

7. Evidence of Intention—Knowledge of Pregnancy.—Evidence relating to the accused's possession of instruments to produce an abortion, and her use of them, and her knowledge upon the subject, and that she held herself out for the performance of such service, with the instruments, for hire, is admissible to show knowledge and intent. People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594.

Acts of the defendant tending to show knowledge of a woman's pregnancy and his intention to commit an abortion on her, whether prior or subsequent to the particular act charged, may be proved. Scott v. People, 141 Ill. 195.

In Hatchard v. State, 79 Wis. 357, proof that the defendant said she had operated on hundreds of other girls was held to be admissible to show intent.

In Com. v. Holmes, 103 Mass. 440, in order to show the intent and purpose of the act, it was admitted in evidence that the defendant had told A.'s mother to send A. to her, to get rid of her child, adding that she had operated already five times on one person.

Proof of the examination of the girl by the defendant as to her pregnancy is admissible in evidence against him. People v. Josselyn, 39 Cal. 393.

It was held in Powe v. State, 49 N. J. L. 34, that where there exists a fully formed belief in the existence of pregnancy, there may exist as fully formed an intent to cause a miscarriage, even without absolute knowledge of pregnancy.

Letters of the prisoner to the woman and evidence of conversations with her are admissible to show intent. Hays v. State, 40

Criminal Intent Implied.—The production of an abortion implies a criminal intent.¹

3. Means.—The means denounced by the various statutes are the unlawful or malicious supplying, or administering to a pregnant woman, or causing or procuring to be taken by her,² any drug, poison, substance, or noxious thing,³

Md. 633; Jones v. State, 70 Md. 326, 14 Am. St. Rep. 362.

A woman testified that she was enccinte by defendant and that he gave her "Dr. Lyon's Spanish Drops." The prisoner testified that he did not know that she was enccinte, but that he gave her the medicine to restore menstruation. It was held that it was not reasonable to suppose that the defendant would have taken the trouble he did to procure the medicine, which he doubtless knew and believed would cause a miscarriage, unless he had known the woman was enccinte, and furnished it to her with the intention of producing an abortion. State v. Montgomery, 71 Iowa 630.

Proof of mere advice to take medicine, where no medicine, drug, or substance of any kind is taken, is not sufficient to convict of the crime of abortion, under New York Pen. Code, § 294, providing that any person who, with intent thereby to procure the miscarriage of a woman, advises her to take any medicine, is guilty of abortion. People v. Phelps, 15 N. Y. Supp. 440.

It is often important in determining the intent to show who the father of the child was, and so the state may prove that a certain person never had intercourse with the woman. Dunn v. People, 29 N. Y. 523, 86 Am. Dec. 319.

At a trial upon the charge of having used a certain instrument with intent to produce an abortion, evidence that the defendant also administered other unlawful treatment to the same woman on two occasions other than that named in the indictment is admissible to show his intent, and his knowledge that the woman was enccinte. Com. v. Corkin, 136 Mass. 429.

Evidence showing that ergot was administered to the deceased shortly before her death was held to be admissible to prove that, according to popular opinion, ergot would produce abortion, since the fact proved might show a motive for administering it, and the intention with which it was done. Carter v. State, 2 Ind. 617.

1. Criminal Intent Implied.—Where an act is unlawful in itself, proof of justification must be shown by the defendant, and if he should fail in this the law implies a criminal intent. Scott v. People, 141 Ill. 195; Dougherty v. People, 1 Colo. 514; State v. Glass, 5 Oregon 73.

2. Administering.—To constitute an administering there need not be an actual manual delivery of the substance. Rex v. Cadman, 1 M. C. C. 114; Rex v. Harley, 4 C. & P. 369, 19 E. C. L. 423; Robbins v. State, 8 Ohio St. 131; State v. Morrow, 40 S. Car. 221.

The accused may cause the drug to be taken, although it is in fact taken out of his presence. State v. Morrow, 40 S. Car. 22; Reg. v. Wilson, 7 Cox C. C. 190.

In Jones v. State, 70 Md. 326, 14 Am. St. Rep. 362, on an indictment under Maryland Acts 1868, ch. 179, § 2, charging that the accused "did knowingly use and cause to be used certain means" for the purpose of unlawfully causing a miscarriage and abortion, letters from him to the woman, one of which contained minute directions as to how a bottle of ergot that accompanied it should be taken, and proof by the woman that she administered to herself the drug sent, and in other respects also followed the instructions given by him, were held to be admissible in evidence, although the accused was not present when the woman took the drug and did the other things which he advised her to do.

But in order to convict under an indictment for abortion charging "an administering or causing to be taken," some of the drug must be actually swallowed by the woman. Rex v. Cadman, 1 M. C. C. 114; Rex v. Harley, 4 C. & P. 369, 19 E. C. L. 423; Reg. v. Wilson, 7 Cox C. C. 190; People v. Phelps, 133 N. Y. 267; Lamb v. State, 66 Md. 285.

But under the New Jersey statute it is not necessary to aver that the poison, drug, etc., advised to be taken was actually taken or swallowed, nor is it necessary to prove it on the trial, as the advising to take the potion is the overt act made criminal by the statute. State v. Murphy, 27 N. J. L. 112. See also State v. Hyer, 39 N. J. L. 600.

3. Noxious Thing.—If a drug is dangerous to a pregnant woman, it is held to be "a noxious thing." Reg. v. Cramp, 5 Q. B. Div. 307; Dougherty v. People, 1 Colo. 517.

Whether a thing is noxious is often a matter of circumstance and quantity, and is a question for the jury. Reg. v. Hillman, 9 Cox C. C. 386; Dougherty v. People, 1 Colo. 517.

In Reg. v. Hennah, 13 Cox C. C. 547, it was held that a thing must be noxious in itself, and not merely when taken in excess.

In Reg. v. Isaacs, L. & C. 220, it was held that a small quantity of savin and featherfew, sufficient only to produce a slight disturbance in the stomach, was not a noxious thing.

In State v. Gedicke, 43 N. J. L. 86, Scudder, J., delivering the opinion, said: "The poison, drug, medicine, or other thing must be noxious or hurtful in itself. If it possesses this quality, and is administered, prescribed, advised, or directed to be taken with the intent to cause or procure a miscarriage when the woman is pregnant with child, the crime is complete, whether in the opinion of others it is capable of producing this result or not."

or unlawfully using or causing to be used any instrument or other methods whatsoever,¹ with intent to procure or cause an abortion.²

4. Results—Death of Mother—Death of Child.—At Common Law, if the death of the woman resulted from the measures used to procure an abortion, it was murder.³

By Statute in most of the states of the Union, where the death of the woman ensues from the means used, the offense has been reduced to murder in the second degree, or to manslaughter.⁴

Death of Child.—At common law, according to the weight of authority, to cause the destruction of the child before it had quickened in its mother's womb was no offense, if done with the mother's consent. Although the common law for many civil purposes recognizes the existence of a child from its conception, it does not for the purpose of punishing its destruction recognize it as a living being until it has quickened and stirred in its mother's womb.⁵

1. Mode of Accomplishment not Material.—The means which may be used are various, and it is sufficient to prove that the crime was committed by one of the means alleged in the indictment. Navarro v. State, 24 Tex. App. 378 (where the means used were striking, beating, and kicking); Com. v. W—, 3 Pittsb. (Pa.) 463 (where the defendant advised excessive exercise, and it was taken 'n his absence); Com. v. Brown, 14 Gray (Mass.) 419; Scott v. People, 141 Ill. 195; Com. v. Snow, 116 Mass. 47.

2. Means need not be Effectual.—Under the statutes of many of the states, the drug or substance need not be effectual in causing an abortion, it being only necessary that the accused should believe it to be effectual. State v. Fitzgerald, 49 Iowa 260, 31 Am. Rep. 148; Dougherty v. People, 1 Colo. 514; Com. v. Morrison, 16 Gray (Mass.) 224; State v. Gedicke, 43 N. J. L. 86.

Texas Statute.—Where it was charged that the accused administered cotton-root tea in order to procure an abortion, and expert witnesses introduced by the state testified that while medical books claimed that an abortion could be produced by such treatment, they had no personal knowledge of it, but were of the opinion that cotton-root tea could not produce abortion as it was administered in the case, it was held that under the Texas Penal Code, art. 538, requiring the evidence in support of such a charge to show that the means used were calculated to produce abortion, no conviction could be had. Williams v. State (Tex. App., 1892), 19 S. W. Rep. 897. See also Watson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 237.

3. At Common Law.—Russell on Crimes 540; Wharton on Homicide, § 41; 1 East Pleas of the Crown 230; 1 Hale 430; 2 Bish. on Crim. Law, § 691; 4 Black. Com. 201; Tinckler's Case, 1 East P. C. 354; Reg. v. Fretwell, L. & C. 161, 9 Cox C. C. 153; State v. Moore, 25 Iowa 128, 95 Am. Dec. 776; Montgomery v. State, 80 Ind. 338, 41 Am. Rep. 815; State v. Thurman, 66 Iowa 693; State v. Baldwin, 79 Iowa 714; Peoples v. Com., 87 Ky. 487; Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48, 54 Am. Dec. 607; Com. v. Hersey, 2 Allen (Mass.) 173; Com. v. Parker, 9 Met. (Mass.) 263, 43 Am. Dec. 396; People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594; Com. v. Keeper of Prison, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 227; State v. Dickinson, 41 Wis. 299.

In Com. v. Parker, 9 Met. (Mass.) 263, 43 Am. Dec. 396, Shaw, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the court, used this language: "So where, upon a similar attempt by drugs or instruments, the death of the mother ensues, the party making such an attempt, with or without the consent of the woman, is guilty of the murder of the mother, on the ground that it is an act done without lawful purpose, dangerous to life, and that the consent of the woman cannot take away the imputation of malice any more than in the case of a duel, where in like manner there is the consent of the parties."

4. Under Statute.—State v. Dickinson, 41 Wis. 299; Hatchard v. State, 79 Wis. 357; Solander v. People, 2 Colo. 48; Com. v. Leach, 156 Mass. 99; People v. Olmstead, 30 Mich. 431; People v. McDowell, 63 Mich. 229; People v. Aikin, 66 Mich. 460, 11 Am. St. Rep. 512; State v. Moore, 25 Iowa 128, 95 Am. Dec. 776.

In Maine, if the death of the mother results from an attempt to destroy the child after it has become quick in its mother's womb, it is murder; if it results from an attempt at miscarriage prior to the quickening of the child, it is manslaughter. Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48, 54 Am. Dec. 607.

Under the Illinois statute, if death is caused by producing abortion, it is murder. Beasley v. People, 89 Ill. 571.

In Yundt v. People, 65 Ill. 373, the defendant produced an abortion upon a woman who was quick with child, and a fatal sickness followed in consequence thereof, which resulted in her death. The indictment was for manslaughter, and not for producing an abortion, under the common law or the statute. The defendant was adjudged guilty as charged.

5. At Common Law.—Mitchell v. Com., 78 Ky. 204, 29 Am. Rep. 227; State v. Cooper, 22 N. J. L. 52, 51 Am. Dec. 248; Com. v. Parker, 9 Met. (Mass.) 263, 43 Am. Dec. 391; Com. v. Bangs, 9 Mass. 387; Com. v. Jackson, 15 Gray (Mass.) 187; Abrams v. Foshee, 3 Iowa 274, 66 Am. Dec. 77; Hatfield v. Gano, 15 Iowa 178; Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48, 54 Am. Dec. 607; People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594.

Contra.—There are, however, cases maintaining the contrary view. See State v. Slagle, 82 N. Car. 630; Com. v. Demain, 6

The wilful killing of an unborn child after it has quickened is not a felony, except as it is rendered so by statute, but is a misdemeanor.¹

According to the better authority, if a person in attempting to commit an abortion causes a child to be born so much earlier than the natural time that it is much less capable of living, and it afterwards dies by reason of exposure to the external world, such person is guilty of murder.²

IV. WHO MAY BE CRIMINALLY LIABLE—1. As Principals—a. THE WOMAN HERSELF.—In most of the states of the Union a woman who commits an abortion on herself is guilty of no crime, she being regarded rather as the victim than the perpetrator of the crime.³ But in some of the states, and in England, she is liable to the same punishment as one who commits an abortion on another.⁴

b. OTHERS AS PRINCIPALS.—Under the statutes any one who unlawfully or maliciously supplies, or administers to a pregnant woman, or causes or procures to be taken by her, any drug, poison, substance, or noxious thing, or unlawfully uses or causes to be used any instrument or other means whatsoever, with intent to procure or cause an abortion, is a principal.⁵

2. As Accessories and Accomplices—a. THE WOMAN HERSELF.—According to the weight of authority, both in England and the United States, a pregnant

By the general laws of New York, the killing of a quick child is manslaughter in the first degree when caused by an injury to the mother which would be murder if it resulted in the death of the mother. Evans v. People, 49 N. Y. 88.

2. Death of Child after Birth.—Reg. v. West, 2 C. & K. 784, 61 E. C. L. 784; Rex v. Senior, 1 M. C. C. 344; Reg. v. Trilloe, 2 M. C. C. 260; *Com. v. 3. Generally Woman not Criminally Liable.—Com. v. Wood, 11 Gray (Mass.) 85; State v. Cooper, 22 N. J. L. 52, 51 Am. Dec. 248.

It is not criminal for a woman to swallow a potion, or to consent to an operation or other means being used to procure an abortion. No act of hers is made criminal by statute. Her guilt or innocence remains as at common law, and her offense at common law is against the life of the child. State v. Murphy, 27 N. J. L. 112; State v. Hyer, 39 N. J. L. 598; Com. v. Boynton, 116 Mass. 343; Solander v. People, 2 Colo. 48; Smith v. Gaffard, 31 Ala. 45.

It was held in Hatfield v. Gano, 15 Iowa 177, that it was the person who used the means with the pregnant woman to procure the abortion, and not the woman herself, whom the legislature intended to punish. Abrams v. Foshee, 3 Iowa 274, 66 Am. Dec. 77.

4. New York.—In Dunn v. People, 29 N. Y. 523, 86 Am. Dec. 319, it was held that a woman could not be indicted for procuring an abortion on herself, the law regarding her rather as the victim than the perpetrator of the crime.

But by § 295 of the New York Penal Code of 1891 a pregnant woman who takes any medicine, drug, or substance, or uses or submits to the use of any instrument or other means, with intent thereby to produce her own miscarriage, unless the same is necessary to preserve her life, or that of the child whereof she is pregnant, is punishable by imprisonment for not less than one year nor more than four years. See People v. Meyers, 5 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 120. See also Frazer v. People, 54 Barb. (N. Y.) 306.

California.—The penal code of this state, § 275, makes it a felony for a woman to solicit of any person any medicine, drug, or substance whatever, and take the same, or to submit to any operation, or to the use of any means whatever, with intent thereby to procure a miscarriage, unless the same is necessary to preserve her life.

England.—In England, by 24 and 25 Vict., c. 100, § 58, a person who commits an abortion on herself is equally guilty with the person who commits an abortion on another, and subject to the same punishment.

5. State v. Owens, 22 Minn. 238; Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48, 54 Am. Dec. 607; State v. Murphy, 27 N. J. L. 112.

In Com. v. Brown, 14 Gray (Mass.) 419, where one defendant advised, ordered, and commanded two other defendants to administer ergot to a pregnant woman, with intent to cause a miscarriage, it was held that he was a principal and not an accessory.

Where it was proven that a woman offered to produce an abortion on a girl, stating that she had operated on hundreds of others, and afterwards assisted her husband in the operation, it was held that she did not act under the compulsion of the husband, but voluntarily, and was therefore a principal. Hatchard v. State, 79 Wis. 357.

woman who takes medicine or submits to other means to produce an abortion is not an accomplice, even though she solicits the use of the means employed.¹ And it is held that, not being an accomplice, the woman does not need corroboration in her testimony.² But her moral implication is a proper question for consideration by the jury in weighing her testimony.³

b. OTHERS AS ACCESSORIES AND ACCOMPLICES.—Any person who aids, abets, or assists the woman or any other person to procure an abortion, is an accessory or accomplice.⁴ It is essential, however, that the person so acting have knowledge that the object of the person whom he assists is to procure an abortion.⁵

3. Persons Selling, Advertising, or Giving Away Instruments or Drugs, etc.—In many of the states of the Union it is made a misdemeanor to sell, give away, or advertise any instrument, drug, or other means for the purpose of procuring an abortion.⁶

1. Woman not an Accomplice—England.—Reg. v. Boyes, 1 B. & S. 311; Rex v. Hargrave, 5 C. & P. 170.

Kentucky.—Peoples v. Com., 87 Ky. 487.

Massachusetts.—Com. v. Boynton, 116 Mass. 343; Com. v. Brown, 121 Mass. 69; Com. v. Drake, 124 Mass. 21; Com. v. Follansbee, 155 Mass. 274.

Minnesota.—State v. Owens, 22 Minn. 238; State v. Pearce, 56 Minn. 226.

New Jersey.—State v. Hyer, 39 N. J. L. 598.

New York.—People v. Meyers, 5 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 120; Dunn v. People, 29 N. Y. 523, 86 Am. Dec. 319; People v. Vedder, 98 N. Y. 630; People v. McGonegal, 136 N. Y. 62.

Texas.—Watson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 237.

In Com. v. Wood, 11 Gray (Mass.) 85, the court said: "We think the court rightly instructed the jury that the woman was not, under the statute, technically an accomplice, for she could not have been indicted with him."

Wharton's Crim. Ev., § 440, maintains that the woman is an accomplice provided she submits willingly to the operation, but is not if fraud or force is used; citing People v. Josselyn, 39 Cal. 393, to support the proposition. This case, however, does not support the contention. The decision was rendered under the California statute of 1861, in which it was expressly provided that no physician or surgeon should be convicted on the uncorroborated testimony of the woman upon whom the abortion was alleged to have been performed. This statute has since been repealed.

2. Corroboration not Necessary.—Com. v. Wood, 11 Gray (Mass.) 85; State v. Hyer, 39 N. J. L. 598; People v. Lohman, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 216; People v. Meyers, 5 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 120; Dunn v. People, 29 N. Y. 523, 86 Am. Dec. 319; Watson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 239.

Ohio.—The Ohio Rev. Stat., § 6804, punishes the woman as an aider and abettor, if she voluntarily participates in the unlawful act; and in such a case, if, on the trial of the principal, she is introduced as a witness by the state, her evidence should be regarded as that of an accomplice, and would therefore need corroboration. State v. McCoy (Ohio, 1894), 39 N. E. Rep. 316.

3. Weight of Testimony Question for Jury.—Com. v. Brown, 121 Mass. 69; Com. v. Drake, 124 Mass. 21; People v. Lohman, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 216; People v. Vedder, 98 N. Y. 630; Watson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 239; Wandell v. State (Tex. Crim. App., 1894), 25 S. W. Rep. 27.

The fact that the abortion was committed by the solicitation or consent of the woman herself does not in the slightest degree lessen the criminality of the act, after it has been proved. Com. v. Snow, 116 Mass. 47; Com. v. Wood, 11 Gray (Mass.) 85.

4. Third Persons as Accomplices and Accessories.—Solander v. People, 2 Colo. 48; Crichton v. People, 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 467; State v. Pearce, 56 Minn. 226; Willingham v. State (Tex. Crim. App., 1894), 25 S. W. Rep. 424.

Encouragement.—The father of the woman upon whom an abortion was performed testified that the accused had told him of his daughter's pregnancy, and that he (the accused) could give her a drug that would remove it. The father replied, "All right; anything to save my child." It was held that this was sufficient encouragement to constitute the father an accomplice. Watson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 237.

Procuring Physician.—Where the defendant received a woman to board for the purpose of having an abortion performed, and afterwards procured a physician to operate on the woman, it was held that such defendant was an accessory before the fact. Com. v. Adams, 127 Mass. 15.

Accompanying Woman to Place of Performance.—Where a woman who had been an intimate companion of the deceased, knew of her pregnancy, and her intention to have an operation performed to produce abortion, accompanied her to the house of the accused, and remained in another room while the alleged operation was being performed, it not being charged that she aided or abetted the defendant in any way in the commission of the alleged crime, it was held that she was not an accomplice of the accused. People v. McGonegal, 136 N. Y. 62. See also Com. v. Drake, 124 Mass. 21.

5. Knowledge of the Object in View Necessary.—Com. v. Follansbee, 155 Mass. 274.

In Texas, any person who furnishes the means for procuring an abortion, knowing the purpose intended, is guilty as an accomplice. Tex. Pen. Code, § 532.

6. Statutes.—See, for example, the statutes

V. ATTEMPTS.—It is a punishable offense to attempt to commit an abortion, whether the effort is successful or not.¹ An attempt implies both a purpose and an actual effort to effect that purpose.²

VI. EVIDENCE—The Woman.—The evidence of the woman upon whom the abortion is committed is admissible, and conviction may be had upon her uncorroborated testimony; her credibility as a witness being a question for the jury.³

Dying Declarations—The courts are divided as to whether or not the dying declarations of the woman are admissible in evidence against the accused.⁴ It is held, under the common-law rule, that where the death of the woman is not the subject of the charge, her dying declarations are not admissible.⁵

Res Gestæ.—Certain acts and declarations which are contemporaneous with the main fact under consideration, and so connected with it as to illustrate its character, are properly admissible in evidence as being part of the res gestæ.⁶

of Indiana, Iowa, Massachusetts, Ohio, Rhode Island, and Vermont.

Where the statute against supplying instruments for the purpose of procuring abortion requires the instrument to be of a character fitted for that purpose, the defendant cannot be convicted where he gives a pregnant woman a common English catheter, even though he told her at the time that it would procure a miscarriage, as that is not the purpose for which that instrument is made. State v. Forsythe, 78 Iowa 595.

1. Failure of Attempt Immaterial.—It is not necessary that the attempt should have the effect intended, nor that the drug administered should be likely to produce the result. The criminal intention is the main consideration. State v. Owens, 22 Minn. 238.

The guilt is not determined by the success or failure of the effort. State v. Reed, 45 Ark. 333; Slatery v. People, 76 Ill. 217; Scott v. People, 141 Ill. 195; Bassett v. State, 41 Ind. 303; State v. Fitzgerald, 49 Iowa 260, 31 Am. Rep. 148; Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48, 54 Am. Dec. 607; Com. v. Taylor, 132 Mass. 261; State v. Murphy, 27 N. J. L. 112; State v. Cooper, 22 N. J. L. 52, 51 Am. Dec. 248; State v. Geddicke, 43 N. J. L. 86; State v. Slagle, 82 N. Car. 630; Bishop on Statutory Crimes, § 744.

2. Attempt Defined.—"An attempt is an intent to do a particular thing, with an act toward it falling short of the thing intended." 1 Bish. Crim. L., § 728; Scott v. People, 141 Ill. 195. See, generally, the title ATTEMPT TO COMMIT CRIME.

3. Woman upon whom the Abortion is Committed as a Witness.—It was held in People v. Vedder, 98 N. Y. 30, that the woman upon whom an abortion is committed is not an accomplice, and, therefore, the provision of the code prohibiting a conviction upon the testimony of an accomplice, unless corroborated, does not apply to her testimony. Dunn v. People, 29 N. Y. 523, 86 Am. Dec. 319; Watson v. State, 9 Tex. App. 237; Com. v. Wood, 11 Gray (Mass.) 85; State v. Hyer, 39 N. J. L. 568; People v. Meyers, 5 N. Y. Crim. Rep. 120; People v. Lohman, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 216.

In State v. Dyer, 59 Me. 303, the victim of the abortion was held to be a competent witness, even though her husband was indicted as an accessory. Com. v. Reid, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 385; Navarro v. State, 24 Tex. App. 378.

If the woman is not technically an accomplice, she may, nevertheless, conspire with others to produce the abortion, and the conspiracy being shown, her acts and declarations in furtherance of the common design are evidence against others engaged with her in the criminal act. Solander v. People, 2 Colo. 48.

In Ohio, the woman is regarded as an accomplice, and her testimony therefore needs corroboration. State v. McCoy (Ohio, 1894), 39 N. E. Rep. 316. See, generally, the title ACCOMPLICES.

4. Admissibility of Dying Declarations.—Rex v. Hutchinson, 2 B. & C. 608, note; Storer & Heard Crim. Abor. 208; People v. Davis, 56 N. Y. 95; State v. Harper, 35 Ohio St. 78, 35 Am. Rep. 596.

In Railing v. Com., 110 Pa. St. 100, overruling Com. v. Bruce, 5 Crim. L. Mag. 680, it was held that death considered in and of itself is not a constituent element of the offense of abortion; therefore dying declarations are inadmissible against the defendant in a prosecution charging that crime.

Dying declarations of the woman have been received in evidence in the following cases: Montgomery v. State, 80 Ind. 338, 41 Am. Rep. 815; State v. Leeper, 70 Iowa 748; Maine v. People, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 113; Rhodes v. State, 128 Ind. 189; State v. Baldwin, 79 Iowa 714; Peoples v. Com., 78 Ky. 487.

In Minnesota, the dying declarations of the woman have been held admissible as evidence, even where her husband was charged as an accomplice. State v. Pearce, 56 Minn. 226.

5. Com. v. Homer, 153 Mass. 343; People v. Davis, 56 N. Y. 95; State v. Harper, 35 Ohio St. 78, 35 Am. Rep. 596; Reg. v. Hind, 8 Cox C. C. 300.

Generally.—The general rule is, that dying declarations are admissible only when the death of the woman is the subject of the charge, and the circumstances of the death are the subject of the dying declarations. Rex v. Mead, 2 B. & C. 605, 9 E. C. L. 196; 1 Greenl. Ev., § 156; Rex v. Lloyd, 4 C. & P. 233, 19 E. C. L. 360; Runyan v. Price, 15 Ohio St. 8, 86 Am. Dec. 459; People v. Davis, 56 N. Y. 95. See the title DYING DECLARATIONS.

6. Res Gestæ.—1 Greenl. Ev., § 108; Solander v. People, 2 Colo. 48; People v. Mc-

Death of the Woman.—The death of the woman may be proved as a part of the history of the case,¹ and then the procurement of the abortion is the corpus delicti.² Evidence may also be introduced as to the cause of death.³

Experts.—It is allowable to introduce physicians as medical experts, in order to prove whether or not an abortion has been committed on the woman, and, in case of death, whether or not death was the result of an abortion.⁴

Medical Books.—It is held that medical books are not admissible evidence, but that medical men may give their opinions as witnesses, which opinions may, in a measure, be founded on the contents of standard medical books as a part of their general knowledge.⁵

Instruments.—Evidence that instruments calculated to produce abortion were found in the possession of the accused is admissible, and such instruments may be exhibited to the jury.⁶

Dowell, 63 Mich. 229; People v. Davis, 56 N. Y. 95; State v. Glass, 5 Oregon 73.

Upon a trial on the charge of abortion, where the fact of the deceased party's going to the house of the defendant for the purpose of having him perform an abortion on her was material, it was held that the declarations of the deceased as to her purpose in going there, made at the time she departed for defendant's house, were competent evidence as part of the res gesta. State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380.

But a Narrative of a Past Transaction is not admissible in evidence, it being merely hearsay. Maine v. People, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 113; Com. v. Felch, 132 Mass. 23; Hays v. State, 40 Md. 633; People v. Aikin, 66 Mich. 460, 11 Am. St. Rep. 512; State v. Clements, 15 Oregon 237.

Declarations to a Physician.—On a prosecution for abortion, a physician, who, after the commission of the crime, was selected by the public prosecutor to attend and examine the woman, and did attend and examine her with her consent, was allowed to testify, as a witness for the prosecution, to his opinion, founded on his observations of the woman and her narration of the circumstances, that an abortion had been committed. The woman was alive at the time of the trial. It was held that his testimony was inadmissible, because it was a narration of past events and not part of the res gesta. People v. Murphy, 101 N. Y. 126, 54 Am. Rep. 661. See also Com. v. Hersey, 2 Allen (Mass.) 173.

Exclamations Indicating Present Pain, made immediately after the operation was charged to have been performed, have been held admissible. Com. v. Fenno, 134 Mass. 217; Rhodes v. State, 128 Ind. 189; Com. v. Leach, 156 Mass. 99.

1. Proof of Death of the Woman.—Com. v. Thompson, 159 Mass. 56; People v. Van Zile, 143 N. Y. 368.

2. Corpus Delicti.—Traylor v. State, 101 Ind. 65; People v. Aiken, 66 Mich. 460, 11 Am. St. Rep. 512.

3. Cause of Death.—People v. Aikin, 66 Mich. 460, 11 Am. St. Rep. 512.

The injured parts of the body of the deceased, preserved in spirits, may be exhibited to the jury, in connection with the testimony of the physician who made the post-mortem examination, in order to show the cause of the woman's death. Com. v. Brown, 14 Gray (Mass.) 419.

Evidence of cuts, wounds and bruises found in the womb of the deceased is admissible in order to prove that death was caused by an abortion or attempted abortion. Com. v. Blair, 126 Mass. 40.

4. Expert Testimony.—Com. v. Leach, 156 Mass. 99; Com. v. Thompson, 159 Mass. 56; Com. v. Follansbee, 155 Mass. 274; Carter v. State, 2 Ind. 617; Slattery v. People, 76 Ill. 217; State v. Glass, 5 Oregon 73.

A physician testifying as an expert that he has discovered no traces of an abortion may properly be asked whether under such circumstances an abortion would occur. Bathrick v. Detroit Post, etc., Co., 50 Mich. 629, 45 Am. Rep. 63; State v. Smith, 32 Me. 370.

Where experts have testified that a woman could not have introduced a sea-tangle tent into her uterus without aid, it is competent for the defense to prove by another witness that she has often introduced the same instrument into her own uterus unaided. Com. v. Leach, 156 Mass. 99.

It was held to be error to allow a medical expert to give an opinion founded partly upon dying declarations of the victim of an alleged abortion. People v. Murphy, 101 N. Y. 126, 54 Am. Rep. 661.

It is improper to permit a witness who nursed the deceased during the last days of her sickness to give her opinion as to what caused the death of the deceased, without proof of any minute examination of the person of the deceased, or of any facts on which she based her opinion, or of any knowledge or experience in such matters. People v. Olmstead, 30 Mich. 431.

5. Admissibility of Medical Books.—Collier v. Simpson, 5 C. & P. 73, 24 E. C. L. 219; Carter v. State, 2 Ind. 617; 1 Greenl. Ev., § 595, note 3.

In Massachusetts, in accordance with well-settled practice, medical books are not allowed to be read in evidence. Com. v. Sturtivant, 117 Mass. 122, 19 Am. Rep. 401; Com. v. Brown, 121 Mass. 69.

6. Instruments.—People v. Vedder, 34 Hun (N. Y.) 280; Com. v. Brown, 14 Gray (Mass.) 419.

In Com. v. Blair, 126 Mass. 40, evidence that the accused had such an instrument in Circumstances.—The evidence to convict of the crime of abortion, with the exception of the testimony of the victim, is almost always circumstantial; and therefore the question as to the admissibility of collateral facts in evidence is often to be determined by the nature of each case; evidence that would be admissible in one case would not necessarily be admissible in another.¹

Burden of Proof—As to Necessity of Abortion.—Where the statute makes it an essential element of the offense that the abortion was not necessary to save the life of the woman, a majority of the courts hold that the burden is on the prosecution to prove the absence of such necessity.²

As to Advice of Physician.—But it is held that the burden of proof is on the defendant to show that he had the advice of a physician that the operation was necessary, the latter fact being one peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant.³

VII. DEFENSES.—The fact that the operation is necessary to preserve the life of the woman or the child is a valid defense;⁴ also the fact that it was ad-his possession five months before the time of the alleged operation was admitted.

Where an indictment charges an attempt to procure an abortion by means of several different instruments, it is not necessary to prove that the accused used all the instruments described. It is sufficient to prove the use of one of the instruments as alleged. Scott v. People, 141 Ill. 195.

It is not necessary to prove the character of the instruments. Com. v. Snow, 116 Mass. 47.

1. Evidence Ordinarily Circumstantial—Illustrations.—On a trial upon the charge of abortion, evidence that a foetus was found secreted about the building where the operation was alleged to have been performed was held to be admissible, as tending very strongly to show the corpus delicti. State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380.

Where defendant is charged with having procured an abortion upon a woman who was at that time an inmate of her house, it is competent to show the character of the house—that it is a house of ill fame—so that the jury may judge whether the place is one where the alleged crime could be safely attempted, without fear of detection. Hays v. State, 40 Md. 633.

The prosecution having proved that the defendant had administered medicine to the deceased, which might have the result of producing an abortion, and that an abortion was produced, from the effects of which she died; it was held that a circular published by defendant three years previously, tending to show that he was in the business of consulting in reference to the procuring of abortions, was admissible evidence. Weed v. People, 3 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 50.

On the trial of a charge of manslaughter in the commission of abortion, which resulted in the death of the mother, evidence of a woman who attended the mother the day before her death, washing her and changing her clothes, as to the condition of the bed and the clothes, and also as to a peculiar, offensive odor which she observed, was held to be admissible. People v. Olmstead, 30 Mich. 431.

2. Necessity of Abortion—Proof of.—1 Greenl. Ev., § 78; Moody v. State, 17 Ohio St. 110;

State v. Meek, 70 Mo. 355, 35 Am. Rep. 427; Hatchard v. State, 79 Wis. 357; State v. Clements, 15 Oregon 237.

It is a general rule of law that the burden of proof is upon the party who bases his cause of action upon a negative allegation. Exceptions to the rule obtain only when the proof is readily at the command of the defendant, and is practically beyond the reach of the prosecution. The circumstances attending the procurement of an abortion, tending to prove that it was unnecessary for the purpose of preserving the life of the mother, ordinarily can be shown quite as easily on the part of the prosecution as the fact of necessity for that purpose can be proved by the defendant. Moody v. State, 17 Ohio St. 110. Contra, Bradford v. People, 20 Hun (N. Y.) 309.

3. Advice of Physician as to Necessity—Proof of.—State v. Meek, 70 Mo. 355, 35 Am. Rep. 427; Hatchard v. State, 79 Wis. 357. See also Moody v. State, 17 Ohio St. 110.

In State v. Meek, 70 Mo. 355, 35 Am. Rep. 427, Hough, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "In cases like the one before us, it has been held that while it is necessary for the state to produce some evidence that the abortion was unnecessary to save the life of the mother, the burden of showing that it was advised by a physician to be necessary for that purpose is upon the defendant, and this for the reason that from the very nature of the case it might be impossible for the state to prove that such advice was not given, while testimony that it was so advised, being in its nature of a secret and confidential character and peculiarly within the knowledge of the defendant, could generally be easily produced by him."

Where the evidence shows that the defendant operated with a knife upon the womb of a healthy woman nineteen years of age, and shortly afterwards she was delivered of a partly grown child, and was immediately attacked with peritonitis, of which she died, it raises an irresistible inference that it was not necessary to kill the child in order to save the mother's life. Hatchard v. State, 79 Wis. 357.

4. Necessity a Defense.—Bassett v. State, 41

vised to be necessary by a physician.¹ The intent to produce an abortion must exist when the means are used; hence it would be a good defense, if proven, that the abortion was the result of accident.²

ABOUT. (See also the title MORE OR LESS.)—The term "about" in its common acceptation means near to, in action; or near to, in the performance of some act;³ or near to, in quantity.

Ind. 303; State v. Owens, 22 Minn. 238; State v. Clements, 15 Oregon 237; State v. Stokes, 54 Vt. 179.

If the destruction of a quick child is necessary in order to preserve the life of the mother, it is a complete defense to the charge of abortion. State v. Fitzporter, 93 Mo. 390.

The "necessity" mentioned in the various statutes is intended to cover only those cases where the death of the mother might reasonably be expected to result from natural causes unless the child is destroyed; the fact that the woman has threatened to commit suicide unless relieved of her child, is not such a "necessity" as the statutes contemplate. Hatchard v. State, 79 Wis. 357.

As to the burden of proving the necessity, see supra, this title, Evidence; also the title BURDEN OF PROOF.

1. Advice of Physician a Defense.—State v. Meek, 70 Mo. 355, 35 Am. Rep. 427; State v. Fitzporter, 93 Mo. 390.

The statutes of some states require that two physicians shall advise the operation to be necessary in order to constitute a valid defense; and it has been held in Wisconsin, under the statute, that it was no defense to the charge that one of the defendants, who was a physician, thought the operation necessary to save the mother's life, if the evidence showed that it was in fact not necessary for that purpose. Hatchard v. State, 79 Wis. 357. See also State v. McIntyre, 19 Minn. 93; Moody v. State, 17 Ohio St. 110.

2. Accident a Defense.—Slattery v. People, 76 Ill. 217.

Consent of Woman no Defense.—The fact that the woman consented to the operation is no defense to the charge of abortion. Smith v. State, 33 Me. 48, 54 Am. Dec. 607; Crichton v. People, 6 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 363; Com. v. Wood, 11 Gray (Mass.) 85; Com. v. Snow, 116 Mass. 47.

Nonpregnancy no Defense.—It is held in England, and in some of the United States, that the fact that the woman was not pregnant at the time of the attempt is no defense to a charge of attempt to commit abortion, since the injury to the mother is the real offense. Reg. v. Goodhall, 2 Cox C. C. 40; State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380; Com. v. Wood, 11 Gray (Mass.) 86; Wilson v. State, 2 Ohio St. 319; Powe v. State, 48 N. J. L. 34; Com. v. Taylor, 132 Mass. 261; Com. v. Tibbetts, 157 Mass. 519; Com. v. Follansbee, 155 Mass. 274.

3. Webst. Dict., followed in Jackson v. Burke, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 614.

Contract to Pay Claim of About One Hundred and Fifty Dollars.—Where the defendant contracted to pay a claim of about one hundred and fifty dollars, it was held that he must pay the claim although it amounted to 150 dollars more, the claim being otherwise identified. Turner v. Whidden, 22 Me. 121.

About the Person—Concealed Weapons. (See also the title CARRYING CONCEALED WEAPONS.)—In Warren v. State, 94 Ala. 80, a conviction was sustained for carrying concealed weapons "about the person," on proof that the defendant carried a pistol in a hand satchel, which was suspended from his shoulder by a strap around his neck, although the satchel was locked and the key kept in his pocket.

In State v. McManus, 89 N. Car. 555, a conviction was sustained for carrying concealed weapons about the person. The defendant testified that he was carrying the pistol in his dinner basket to exchange it for a watch. The court said: "It is insisted that the pistol, if in the basket and concealed, was not about the person of the defendant, though upon his lap. Such is not the meaning of the statute. The language is not 'concealed on his person,' but 'concealed about his person;' that is, concealed near, in close proximity to him, and within his convenient control and easy reach, so that he could promptly use it if prompted to do so by any violent motive. If the pistol was concealed in the basket, and that was in the defendant's lap, on his arm, or fastened about his person, or if placed near his person though not touching it, this would be sufficient. It makes no difference how it is concealed, so it is on or near to and within the reach and control of the person charged."

A person who, being in the room of another where there are several persons, has a pistol in his vest pocket, and wilfully or knowingly covers or keeps it from sight, violates the statute. Owen v. State, 31 Ala. 387.

A charge that a person carried a pistol about his person is supported by proof that he carried it in his hand. Woodward v. State, 5 Tex. App. 296.

Assignment for Benefit of Creditors.—Where an assignment was made "in trust to pay the debts due the following persons, viz.," and then followed the names and debts, and a debt due one creditor was put down "about $11,000," which was in fact upwards of thirteen thousand dollars, it was held that the trust included the latter sum. Browne v. Weir, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 400. To the same effect see Chapin v. Clarke, 7 Grant's Ch. (U. C.) 75. And see generally the title ASSIGNMENT FOR THE BENEFIT OF CREDITORS.

About to Expire—Appointment of Officer.—It was provided in Mississippi that the governor should fill by appointment, with the advice and consent of the senate, offices the terms of whose incumbents were about to expire. It was held that the appointment was to be made at the session of the legislature immediately preceding the expiration of the term.

The Supreme Court of the United States has laid down three rules for the construction of the terms "about" or "more or less" in executory contracts

The court said: "The meaning is (since the senate only convenes periodically, unless by extraordinary convocation of the legislature), the governor shall make his nomination to that body at a session immediately preceding the expiration of the term. That satisfies the intent of the words 'about to expire.'" Brady v. Howe, 50 Miss. 617.

Charter Party.—A charter party provided that the ship should proceed to the port of loading and there load "a full and complete cargo of iron ore, say about 1100 tons." The charterer provided a cargo of ten hundred and eighty tons, the actual capacity of the ship being twelve hundred and ten tons. It was held that the words "say about 1100 tons" were not mere words of expectation, but words of contract, and that the charterer's undertaking was not to load the ship up to her actual capacity, but that three per cent was a fair amount of excess over eleven hundred tons to allow in estimating what was a full and complete cargo of about eleven hundred tons, and consequently the cargo actually provided fell short of the charterer's obligation by fifty-three tons. Morris v. Levison, 1 C. P. Div. 155.

In The Alert, 61 Fed. Rep. 504, where a steamer's charter provided that the vessel should be delivered for the charterer's use "about April 10th," it was held that the word about would not warrant any failure to deliver on the date named, except such as occurred through accidental causes arising upon a voyage commenced in due season to arrive at the date named under the usual conditions of navigation, and did not justify any delay in making a seasonable start.

About to Sail.—The words "about to sail from Benizaf with cargo for Philadelphia," contained in a charter party, were held to mean, under the circumstances of the case, to sail as soon as with reasonable diligence a cargo could be got on board. The court said: "The word about can only be construed with reference to the subject matter and circumstances with regard to which it is used; it has a more uncertain meaning than the words 'almost,' 'nearly,' 'well-nigh,' and unless I adopt the method last above indicated, I think we are entirely without any guide in ascertaining its meaning as used in this charter, and what was the intention of the parties expressed by it." Von Lingen v. Davidson, 1 Fed. Rep. 178.

It was held in Hawes v. Lawrence, 4 N. Y. 345, that a contract for sale of oil "to arrive per ship Marcia, sailed from London on or about the 15th of March," contained a mere representation as to the time of sailing, and not a warranty, and that the vendees were bound though the ship did not sail until March 26th. See generally the title CHARTER PARTY.

Pleading.—In Lippincott v. Smith, 4 N. J. L. 106, it was held that an allegation in the state of demand that defendant "about the month of September" took away, etc., was sufficient.

Southard, J., dissented. And see Corey v. Swagger, 74 Ind. 211.

About the Premises—Intoxicating Liquors.—(See also the title INTOXICATING LIQUORS.) The Alabama statute provides that it shall be unlawful for any person without a license to sell vinous or spirituous liquors in any quantity, if the same is drunk on or about the premises. This statutory prohibition embraces places over which the seller has no legal right to exercise authority or control, but which are so near his premises, and so situated in relation thereto, that they are within the mischief intended to be remedied; but where the liquor is taken by the purchaser, in the quart measure of the seller, to a place on the opposite side of the street, out of view of the seller's house, about fifty feet distant therefrom, and in front of another store, and is there drunk, the court cannot assume, as a legal conclusion, that such place is within the statute. Easterling v. State, 30 Ala. 46.

In Whaley v. State, 87 Ala. 83, it was held that if liquor sold by the defendant was drunk within five or six steps of his store and in full view of the premises, it was drunk about his premises in the meaning of the statute, and that it would avail nothing that the liquor was drunk by the purchaser in the public road, over which the defendant had no control, or that the defendant failed to notice the fact and time of its being drunk. The court cited, as supporting this decision, the following cases and authorities: Christian v. State, 40 Ala. 376; Pearce v. State, 40 Ala. 720; Brown v. State, 31 Ala. 353; Patterson v. State, 36 Ala. 297; Powell v. State, 63 Ala. 177; Easterling v. State, 30 Ala. 46; Clark's Man. Cr. Law, §§ 1609, 1610.

On the authority of Pearce v. State, 40 Ala. 720, it was held that the defendant was properly convicted of selling liquor "drunk on or about his premises" (Code, § 4204), on proof that the liquor was sold from a jug which he had, in a field where he was working with others, more than a mile from his house, and in the plantation of another person, over which he had no control. Powell v. State, 63 Ala. 177.

About Arriving.—In a complaint against a railroad company for negligence, it was averred that the plaintiff attempted to descend the steps when the train was "about arriving." The court said: "About, in the connection here used, means nearly, not far from; that is, near, not far from, the arrival of the train." Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Arnold, 84 Ala. 159.

About—Attachment Laws. (See also the title ATTACHMENT.)—In Jackson v. Burke, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 614, the complainant alleged that he had reason to believe "that the defendant will convey and dispose of his property." This was held not sufficient to authorize the issuance of an attachment. The court said: "The word about, in the sense of the attachment laws, must be taken in its common acceptance as defined by lexi-cographers, 'near to in action, or near to in the performance of some act.' Webst. Dict. We hold that to authorize an attachment, on the ground that the defendant is about fraudulently to dispose of his property, the charge in the affidavit, if not in the words of the statute, must import that defendant is on the eve of such fraudulent disposition of his property; and we are of opinion that the charge that the defendant will dispose of his property in order to defraud his creditors is not sufficient to authorize the issuance of an attachment." See also McHaney v. Cawthorn, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 509; Wrompelmair v. Moses, 3 Baxt. (Tenn.) 467. Compare Frere v. Perret, 25 La. Ann. 500, set out below.

In Meyers v. Farrell, 47 Miss. 283, the court, in construing the term "about to remove," as used in the attachment law of that state, said: "What is the meaning of the term 'about to remove'? About—does that imply the next hour, or day, or week, or month? Does the statute convey the idea that necessarily the act must be done within any definite space of time? The implication is quite strong that the 'removal' will shortly occur, but no more definiteness and precision is set forth than the word about imports. Among the definitions or senses in which the word is used, given by lexicographers, are 'near to, in performance of some act,' 'concerned in,' 'engaged in,' etc. Webster's Unabridged Dictionary. It is an ordinary word of no artificial or technical signification, and should receive the rendering which is given to it in common parlance. If the debtor is engaged in the act or is near to the performance of the act of 'removal,' if he entertains the purpose and is making preparations to carry it out, then the creditor is entitled to the writ. It would be hurtful in practice to attempt to declare precisely what is implied in the terms 'about to remove.' For experience would show that many meritorious cases would fall within the intendment of the remedy, which might be excluded by a rule laid down in advance. We think it wiser and safer in the administration of practical justice to leave each case, as it arises, to be governed by its own special facts."

In Elliott v. Keith, 32 Mo. App. 585, the trial court thus instructed the jury upon the meaning of the term "about to remove": "Before you can find that he was about to do so, you must believe * * * defendant was preparing and intended to make an immediate removal." The appellate court held the instruction too narrow, and reversed the decision, saying: "The evidence in the case at bar undoubtedly tended to show that the defendant contemplated removing from this state to Washington Territory. If he had a fixed purpose to do so, and was making preparations to that end by disposing of all of his property and converting it into money at the time suit was instituted, the mere fact that he was not ready to step aboard the train, or to instantly start, ought not to defeat the attachment. Of course he must have been about to go, intending to go, etc., and it devolves upon plaintiff to establish that fact as contradistinguished to a reasonable belief upon plaintiff's part that the defendant was about to go. But we are of opinion that the instruction under consideration limited and narrowed the meaning of the statute too much. The words of the statute adopted in this clause of plaintiff's affidavit for attachment create a right. They have no technical significance, and should receive the rendering given to them in common parlance. It is safer to adopt them verbatim, in instructions, and trust the average understanding of jurors with a proper interpretation of them."

In Bennett v. Avant, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 152, a distinction is drawn between the word "absconding" and the words "about to abscond."

Where the defendant contended that the term "will convert," instead of "is about to convert," her property into money, was too vague and indefinite to authorize the attachment against her, it was held that the allegations and affidavit in the case substantially complied with the law and justified the attachment. Frere v. Perret, 56 La. Ann. 500. But see, contra, Jackson v. Burke, 4 Heisk. (Tenn.) 614, set out above.

Descriptions of Land.—The word about, where the context limits and restrains its meaning, does not materially impair the certainty of a description. Corey v. Swagger, 74 Ind. 211; Adams v. Harrington, 114 Ind. 72.

In an action of ejectment the plaintiff failed to establish the exact dimensions or the exact locality of the premises claimed. The words of description used in the instrument which he relied upon were, "being about 30 feet," etc. It was held that this did not fix the dimensions of the lot. Finelite v. Sinnott, 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. 57.

By the use of the term about, in describing the length of the line in a deed of conveyance, it is understood that exact precision was not intended; but if the place where the monument stood, by which the distance was controlled and determined, cannot be ascertained, the grantee must be limited to the number of rods or feet given. Cutts v. King, 5 Me. 482.

A description of a piece of land as containing "about seven acres" and bounded by a canal was held to include to the centre of the canal. Without that there would have been only about six acres. Goodyear v. Shanahan, 43 Conn. 204.

The description of the quantity of land, though corresponding in the number of acres with the statement in a former conveyance, and especially when accompanied with the qualifying words "more or less" or about so many acres, does not furnish strong evidence of the purpose of the grantor to restrict the limits of the premises to those which were conveyed in such former deed. Wheeler v. Randall, 6 Met. (Mass.) 529.

First. Where the goods are identified by reference to independent circumstances, e.g., all the goods deposited in a certain warehouse, or all that may be manufactured by the vendor in a certain establishment, or to be shipped in certain vessels, and the quantity is named with the qualification of "about," or "more or less," or words of like import, the contract applies to the specific goods, and the naming of the quantity is not regarded as in the nature of a warranty, but only as an estimate of the probable amount, in reference to which good faith is all that is required of the party making it.

Second. Where no such independent circumstances are referred to, and the engagement is to furnish goods to a certain amount, the quantity specified is material, and governs the contract. The addition of the qualifying words, in such cases, only provides against accidental variations arising from slight and unimportant excesses or deficiencies in number, measure, or weight.

Third. But the qualifying words may be supplemented by other stipulations or conditions, e.g., "as much as the seller shall manufacture or the buyer shall require," and they will then govern the contract.¹

A contract to convey "about sixty-five acres" cannot be performed by conveying thirty-six acres. Baltimore, etc., Soc. v. Smith, 54 Md. 187, 39 Am. Rep. 374. The court said: "The force of the qualifying word, we think, is simply that while the parties do not bind themselves to the precise quantity of sixty-five acres, it imports that the actual quantity is a near approximation to that mentioned; that is to say, within a fraction of an acre, or perhaps it might cover a discrepancy of one or two acres."

In Bodley v. Taylor, 5 Cranch (U. S.) 224, Marshall, C.J., says that where an entry upon public lands is to begin at a designated point about seven miles from another well-known place, and when the former cannot be found, about seven miles may be taken to mean seven miles. So in Johnson v. Pannel, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 206, it was held that, in ascertaining a place to be found by its distance from another place, the vague words about, "nearly," or the like, are to be rejected if there are no other words rendering it necessary to retain them, and the distance mentioned is to be taken positively. Where an entry calls for land on a certain creek "about seven miles" from its mouth, the word about must be rejected and the distance taken in a straight line. Sanders v. Morrison, 2 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 109. See also Shipp v. Miller, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 316; Cutts v. King, 5 Me. 482.

"If in a contract in writing to sell land the tract is described as containing 'about one hundred and forty acres,' the import of the qualifying word about is simply that the actual quantity is a near approximation to that mentioned. When there is found to be a material and variable variation, a court of equity, upon a petition for specific performance, will give the word its proper effect. In this case the county surveyor, upon actual measurement, found one hundred and thirty-four and seventy-four hundredths acres in the tract. It was of the value of about fifty-five dollars per acre." Stevens v. McKnight, 40 Ohio St. 341.

"In stating also the number of acres conveyed, it is usual to represent it as about so many; yet the word about, although it negatives the conclusion that entire precision is intended, is without any legal operation whatever. In these cases it is properly used, and carries with it a meaning readily understood, as do many other words which do not vary, in legal construction, the extent of the premises conveyed. If this word, then, when properly used, is without legal effect, I cannot consider it as having any influence in this deed, where, no fixed terminating point being stated, it appears to be used improperly, and without definite meaning." Purinton v. Sedgley, 4 Me. 286.

In Bellknap v. Sealey, 14 N. Y. 147, 67 Am. Dec. 120, the contract was to convey a parcel containing about nine acres of land. Upon survey the parcel contained but four and a fraction acres. This was held to be a material misrepresentation.

1. Executory Contract of Sale—Contracts to Furnish "About So Much."—Brawley v. United States, 96 U. S. 168; approved in Benjamin on Sales, § 691. (See also the titles SALES; MORE OR LESS.) It is well settled that while the term about a certain amount is not precise, it does, nevertheless, indicate an approximation in quantity. Sample v. Upton, 74 Mich. 416; Reuter v. Sala, 4 C. P. Div. 239; Salmon v. Boykin, 66 Md. 541. About, in this sense, means not far from. Indianapolis Cabinet Co. v. Herrmann, 7 Ind. App. 467.

A contract which called for the delivery of "about five hundred tons nitrate of soda" was construed to be a contract for the sale of five hundred tons, with such exception covered by the word about as the variance usually found to exist in such cases, arising from some little difference in the mode of weighing, might require; and it was held to be not performed by delivering four hundred tons. Bourne v. Seymour, 16 C. B. 336.

The plaintiffs agreed to purchase of the defendants "about 300 quarters, more or less," of rye. The ship brought three hundred and fifty quarters, and the defendants refused to deliver any part unless the plaintiffs would accept the whole. It was held that by the words about and "more or less" the parties could not be taken to have contemplated so large an excess as fifty over three hundred quarters. Cross v. Eglin, 2 B. & Ad. 106, 22 E. C. L. 36. See Brawley v. U. S., 96 U. S. 163.

Where there was a contract to furnish about one thousand tons of iron, an offer of four hundred tons was held not a sufficient performance. Norrington v. Wright, 115 U. S. 188.

In an agreement to sell "a cargo of old railroad iron, to be shipped per barque Charles William, * * * at thirty dollars per ton, delivered on the wharf, * * * dangers of the seas excepted—about 300 or 350 tons," the figures "about 300 or 350 tons" are undoubtedly to be taken as part of the contract; but taken with the context, they manifestly express an estimate only, and do not control the descriptive clause designating and limiting the subject of the contract. And accordingly it was held that the delivery at port of discharge of as much as a vessel seaworthy and in good order could carry, though only two hundred and twenty-seven tons, was a compliance. Pembroke Iron Co. v. Parsons, 5 Gray (Mass.) 589. But the term strongly indicates that no warranty of quantity was intended.

The plaintiffs having been informed by S., a commission agent, that the defendants had a quantity of old iron in their yard for sale, "about 150 tons," wrote to the defendants: "We are buyers of good wrought scrap-iron free of light and burnt iron, for our American house, and understand from S. that you have for sale about 150 tons. We can offer you 80s. per ton." There were three intermediate letters relating to the place of delivery and expense of carting, and then the defendants wrote: "We accept your offers for old iron, viz., 80s. per ton, we delivering alongside vessel in one of the London docks. Please let us know when you can send a man here to see it weighed, and also inform us where to send it." Before S. saw the plaintiffs he had seen in the yard of the defendants, who were builders, a heap of iron, and said: "You seem to have about 150 tons there." The reply was, "Yes, or more." The defendants delivered only forty-four tons, that being the quantity of the heap in the yard. The plaintiffs recovered fifty pounds damages in an action for short delivery. It was held that the words "about 150 tons" were merely words of estimate and expectation, and there was no warranty as to quantity, and therefore the defendants were not bound to deliver one hundred and fifty tons; that the subject matter of the contract was not one hundred and fifty tons of iron, but the iron which S. had seen in the defendant's yard. McLay v. Perry, 44 L. T., N. S. 152.

The plaintiffs, by written contract, sold to defendants a quantity of linseed oil, "to arrive per ship Marcia from London, sailed on or about the 15th of March ult." It was held that the statement in the contract as to the time of sailing was a mere representation and not a warranty, and, being made without fraud, that the defendants were bound to accept and pay for the oil, although the vessel did not sail until the 26th of March. Hawes v. Lawrence, 4 N. Y. 345.

In McConnel v. Murphy, L. R. 5 P. C. 203, where the sale was of "all of the spars manufactured by A., say about 600, averaging 16 inches, the above spars will be out of the lot manufactured by J. B.," the court held that a tender of four hundred and ninety-six spars, which were all of the specified lot that averaged sixteen inches, was a substantial performance of the contract by the vendor. These words, "say about 600," were held to be words of expectation and estimate only, not amounting to an understanding that the quantity should be six hundred. The case of Gwillim v. Daniell, 2 C. M. & R. 61, 5 Tyr. 644, was approved and followed; and the effect of the word "say," when prefixed to the word about, was considered as emphatically marking the vendor's purpose to guard himself against being supposed to have made any absolute promise as to quantity. See, further, Leeming v. Snaith, 16 Q. B. 275; Barker v. Windle, 6 El. & Bl. 675; Hayward v. Scougall, 2 Campb. 56.

In Moore v. Campbell, 10 Exch. 323, 23 L. J. Exch. 310, the sale was of fifty tons of hemp, and the vendor offered the buyer two delivery orders from a warehouse for about thirty tons and about twenty tons, respectively, which the buyer declined unless the vendor would guarantee that the whole quantity amounted to fifty tons. The vendor refused, and on the trial offered evidence that it was the usage of trade in Liverpool, where the contract was made, to insert the word about in delivery orders of goods warehoused. It was held that, if this evidence had been offered in reference to the purchase of fifty tons of goods contracted to be sold and delivered simply, the evidence would be inadmissible; but if the contract was to sell and deliver goods in a warehouse, and there was a known usage of the place that warehousemen would not accept delivery orders in any other form, by reason of objecting to make themselves responsible for any particular quantity, the delivery warrants made in that form would, if tendered, be a sufficient compliance with the vendor's duty under the contract.

1. Above and Below.—In McLeod v. Burroughs, 9 Ga. 213, where a charter declared "that it shall not be lawful for any person or persons at any time or times to build any bridge or keep any ferry on the river Great Ogeechee within five miles either above or below" another bridge on the same stream, it was held that the distance of five miles was to be measured on the course of the river. The court said: "Having first spoken of a bridge or ferry on the river, the natural meaning of above and 'below' would seem to be above and below in the course of that river; otherwise the meaning of those words is indefi-

ABRIDGE.—To abridge means to epitomize, to reduce, to contract.¹

ABROAD.—As to when the term "abroad" is used as equivalent to the expression "beyond the sea," see the title BEYOND THE SEAS.²

ABSCOND—ABSCONDING DEBTOR. (See also the titles ATTACHMENT; ARREST.)—To abscond, in a legal sense, means to hide, conceal, or absent one's self clandestinely, with the intent to avoid legal process.³

nite. If above and below be not on the line of the river, where is above, and where below? The ordinary meaning of these words, used in such connection, is not that of location—it cannot be here, because, in other words in this section, the location of the prohibited bridge and ferry is fixed—but that of course or direction."

Restriction on Loans by Savings Bank.—In Williams v. McDonald, 42 N. J. Eq. 395, the court said: "The words of the restriction are awkwardly expressed, but mean at least double the amount of the sum invested and double all encumbrances. The word above signifies excess, and the word 'double' qualifies this excess, so that it may read double the investment and double the encumbrances. This is an ordinary and approved estimate of real estate as security for loans." This case was approved in Williams v. McKay, 46 N. J. Eq. 25.

1. Story v. Holcombe, 4 McLean (U. S.) 310. This was a case of copyright, in which the court held that a fair abridgment, though injuring the sale of the original work, was not an infringement. See the title COPYRIGHT.

Abridgment.—To constitute a true and proper abridgment of a work, the whole must be preserved in its sense: and then the act of abridgment is an act of understanding, employed in carrying a larger work into a smaller compass, and rendering it less expensive, and more convenient both to the time and use of the reader. Strahan v. Newberry, Lofft's Rep. 775.

Abridgment Distinguished from Compilation.—In Story v. Holcombe, 4 McLean (U. S.) 314, cited above in this note, the court makes a distinction between compilation and abridgment, saying: "Between a compilation and an abridgment there is a clear distinction; and yet it does not seem to have been drawn in any opinion cited. A compilation consists of selected extracts from different authors; an abridgment is a condensation of the views of the author. The former cannot be extended so as to convey the same knowledge as the original work: the latter contains an epitome of the work abridged, and consequently conveys substantially the same knowledge. The former cannot adopt the arrangement of the works cited; the latter must adopt the arrangement of the work abridged. The former infringes the copyright, if matter transcribed, when published, shall impair the value of the original book: a fair abridgment, though it may injure the original, is lawful."

2. Naval Officers—Mileage.—The United States statute allows a certain mileage to officers for traveling expenses when under orders, but allows only expenses when traveling abroad. It was held that an officer traveling from San Francisco to New York by way of Panama was entitled to mileage. The court said: "We think the Court of Claims was correct in its conclusion that the question whether travel is abroad or within the United States should be determined by the termini of the journey rather than by the route actually taken. Instances are frequent where an officer ordered from one place to another within the United States is obliged to perform the whole or a substantial part of his journey either upon the high seas or upon foreign soil. If, for example, he were ordered from Buffalo to Detroit, or from New York to Galveston by sea, it would be sticking in the bark to speak of either as 'travel abroad,' because in one case the most direct route lies through Canada, and in the other the voyage is made upon the high seas. While the voyage in question was not literally 'in the United States,' it was such within the intent and spirit of the enactment. An officer is to be understood as traveling abroad when he goes to a foreign port or place under orders to proceed to that place, or from one foreign port to another, or from a foreign port to a home port. But where he is ordered to proceed from one place in the United States to another, and the government for its own purpose requires him to proceed by sea rather than by land, he ought not thereby to be disentitled to his mileage by the nearest traveled route." Lewis v. Monson, 151 U. S. 545.

3. Attachment.—Gandy v. Jolly, 34 Neb. 536, quoting with approval 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.), p. 34. The court in this case holds also that it is not necessary to depart from the state. It may not be known for some time whether the debtor has left the state or not. So in Stouffer v. Niple, 40 Md. 477, it is held that if one secretly removes from his usual place of residence, with the intention to evade the payment of his just debts, or to injure or defraud his creditors, he will be regarded as having absconded, although he may not have left the state, and he may be proceeded against, under the law of attachment, as an absconding debtor. See also Field v. Adreon, 7 Md. 213.

If a person depart from his usual residence, or remain absent therefrom, or conceal himself in his house so that he cannot be served with process, with intent unlawfully to delay or defraud his creditors, he is an absconding debtor. But if he depart from the state or from his usual abode with the intention of returning, and without any fraudulent design, he has not absconded or absented himself within the intentment of the law. Where a debtor departs from one town and goes to another in the same state, where he works openly for over three months, he does not abscond, though his whereabouts are unknown to his friends in the first mentioned town. The question of withdrawal with the view to elude process is one for the jury. Fitch v. Waite, 5 Conn. 117.

Where the statute provides for the case of a debtor absconding, an attachment stating that he is about to abscond does not allege sufficient cause for the issuance of the writ. To abscond in a legal sense means to hide, conceal, or absent one's self clandestinely, with the intent to avoid legal process. Bennett v. Avant, 2 Sneed (Tenn.) 152.

The word abscond imports that the parties did reside within the district and had removed themselves privately and fraudulently. Dunlop v. Harris, 5 Call (Va.) 47.

A certificate of a magistrate that a debtor is not about to abscond or has money, etc., does not meet an affidavit of a creditor alleging that he has money secreted and is about to remove out of the state. In re Proctor, 27 Vt. 118.

A debtor shut up in his own house from his creditors is an absconding debtor. Ives v. Curtiss, 2 Root (Conn.) 133.

Publicly going or moving out of the state is not absconding. Boardman v. Bickford, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 345.

In Malvin v. Christoph, 54 Iowa 562, the court approved Bouvier's definition, "to go in a clandestine manner out of the jurisdiction of the courts, or to lie concealed in order to avoid their process."

"One may be about to remove out of the state, which ex vi termini presupposes his presence in the state, and consequently not absent from it, and at the same time not be in the act of absconding, for the reason that one about to remove may arrange and prepare to do so publicly and not in a clandestine manner, as is meant by the word abscond. * * * We hold that one 'about to remove his goods and effects out of the state' may yet be present in, or not absent or absconding from, the state." Mandel v. Peet, 18 Ark. 243.

Temporary Absence.—In Thompson v. Newton, 2 La. 411, the court says: "The generally received meaning of the word to abscond we believe to be the act of a person who leaves any particular place clandestinely, or of one who conceals or hides himself. According to the latter signification, which appears to be that accorded to it by lexicographers, it is synonymous with the word 'conceal.'" The court held that one departing without any attempt at concealment and with the intention to return was not an absconder.

Affidavit.—In Wallis v. Wallace, 6 How. (Miss.) 256, an affidavit for attachment was in the past tense, viz., that the debtor "hath absconded," and it was argued therefore that the affidavit was insufficient. The court upheld the affidavit, saying: "The term abscond, in the act, has been considered as equivalent to the term 'conceal,' which is used in connection with it. If the affidavit had stated that the debtor 'hath concealed himself so that ordinary process cannot be served,' it would be difficult, according to the well-established grammatical construction of our language, to reconcile such statement with the argument that he had abandoned his lurking place and had resumed his accustomed walks in society."

An affidavit stating a debtor to be "about to abscond himself and his property out of the state, so that the process of law cannot be served," is equivalent to the assertion that he is about to remove himself and property out of the state privately, and therefore complies substantially with a statutory oath that defendant is about to remove himself from the state so that the ordinary process of law cannot be served upon him. Ware v. Todd, 1 Ala. 199.

Not Leaving State.—A party may abscond and subject himself to the operation of the attachment laws against absconding debtors, and still not depart from the limits of the state. A party may not be a citizen for political purposes, and yet be a citizen for commercial or business purposes and liable to attachment. Field v. Adreon, 7 Md. 213. See also Gandy v. Jolly, 34 Neb. 536; Stouffer v. Niple, 40 Md. 477; Fitch v. Waite, 5 Conn. 117.

Evidence.—"The fact of converting a large amount of goods into money by auction sales, and at a large sacrifice, and in a clandestine manner, furnished a reasonable presumption that [the debtor] intended to abscond or absent himself, so as to avoid the service upon him of the ordinary process of law," and evidence of such acts should be admitted. Ross v. Clark, 32 Mo. 296.

The Kansas Statute of Limitations provides. "If, when a cause of action accrues against a person, he be out of the state or has absconded or concealed himself, the period limited for the commencement of the action shall not begin to run until he comes into the state, or while he is so absconded or concealed." It was held that absconding and "concealing" so used refer to the acts of the party in the state. Secretly leaving another state is not absconding or concealing from the reach of process here. Hoggett v. Emerson, 8 Kan. 262; Frey v. Aultman, 30 Kan. 181; Myers v. Center, 47 Kan. 324.

Arrest.—The Oregon Code authorizes the arrest of an absconding debtor. In Norman v. Zieber, 3 Oregon 205, the court defines abscond as follows: "Bouvier defines abscond, 'to go in a clandestine manner out of the jurisdiction of the courts, or to lie concealed in order to avoid their process;' and the ordinary acceptance of the term includes an idea of secrecy. We must treat subdivision 1 of section 106 as unconstitutional and void, or hold that the 'removal' that authorizes an arrest is something more than a mere leaving of the state in an open and public manner or in the ordinary course of the defendant's business as an officer or seaman on board a vessel in which he has been habitually employed."

In Burrichter v. Cline, 3 Wash. 136, the court says: "An absconding debtor is one who leaves or is about to leave the jurisdiction or who conceals himself within the jurisdiction for the purpose of avoiding the process of the courts." The court doubts in that case whether the provision of the Washington Code of 1881 allowing the arrest of absconders is still operative.

ABSENT—ABSENCE, ETC. (In statutes of limitations see the titles BEYOND THE SEAS, LIMITATIONS OF ACTIONS; as to presumption of death arising from, see the title DEATH; as to presumption of continuance of life, see the title DEATH; as to survivorship, see the title SURVIVORSHIP.)—By absence is sometimes meant that a person is not at the place of his domicile, yet, his place of residence being known, or news or information having been received from him, his existence is not uncertain. But in a more confined and more technical sense absence signifies that the residence of the person who is not at the place of his domicile is unknown, and that for this reason his existence is doubtful.¹

1. Bouv. Law Dict.

Failure to Appear.—The Kansas statute provides that a judgment rendered in a justice's court in the defendant's absence may be set aside. It was held that absence meant that the defendant was not present at the trial, and did not signify that he had failed to appear in the action at any time. The court said: "The naked question presents itself to us, whether the word absence means personal absence of the defendants at the time the trial is had and judgment rendered, or whether it refers to the fact that there has been no appearance at all of the defendants before the court. On the one hand it is claimed that the word absence should have its ordinary and usual meaning—not present, withdrawn from the place—and that it refers to the time of the trial of the case and the rendering of the judgment. On the other hand it is contended that it means that the defendant has not appeared in the case; that absence is equivalent to nonappearance. The latter view of the case is taken by the Supreme Court of Nebraska in construing a statute precisely like section 114. (Strine v. Kaufman, 12 Neb. 423.) We are not satisfied with the reasoning of that case, nor inclined to follow it as a precedent. The court held that the word absence in their statute is synonymous with default, and that if there had been no default there had been really no absence. Thus it has been held in that state that if there has been a default there can be no appeal from a judgment rendered; but if the defendant had made an appearance, and trial was subsequently had and judgment rendered in his absence, the defendant could appeal. The court held that the words 'in his absence' are not to be taken literally, but that absence is used as an equivalent to 'nonappearance to the action.' We prefer to give the word absence its ordinary definition, and treat it as meaning that the defendants were not actually present at the time of the trial and the rendering of the judgment." Covart v. Haskins, 39 Kan. 573.

A judgment by default in a civil action against a defendant on whom personal service was made and by whom an appearance was entered is not rendered in his absence, within Massachusetts Pub. Stats., c. 187, § 22, and a petition for a review, filed more than a year after it has been rendered, but within a year after he had notice thereof, is too late. Riley v. Hale, 146 Mass. 465. See also Manning v. Nettleton, 140 Mass. 421.

Absence means nonappearance in a suit, not absence without knowledge or notice; and a petition for reversal of a decree of judicial separation under 20 and 21 Vict., c. 85, § 23, on the ground that it was obtained in the petitioner's absence, is good on demurrer, though alleging personal service of the citation in the separation suit. Phillips v. Phillips, L. R. 1 P. & D. 169.

Attachment Laws. (See also the titles ABSCOND; ATTACHMENT.)—In Mandel v. Peet, 18 Ark. 236, it was held that the word absence, as used in the Arkansas statute, should not be taken or understood in its literal sense, but as intended to mean those who have absconded or are nonresidents. Mere absence from the state temporarily on business or pleasure does not bring them within the mischief of the act.

In Den v. Wharton, 1 Yerg. (Tenn.) 135, an absent debtor was held to be one who had removed from home to avoid process, and not a nonresident.

Temporary absence is not sufficient. Charlton County v. Moberly, 59 Mo. 238. And in Kingsland v. Worshaw, 15 Mo. 657, it is held that where the absence is such that a summons issued upon the day the attachment is sued out will be served upon the defendant in sufficient time before the return day to give the plaintiff all the right which he can have at the return term, the defendant has not so absented himself as that the ordinary process of law cannot be served upon him.

Absent and Absconding Debtor. (See also ABSCOND.)—"Who is an absent and absconding debtor? He who lives without the state, or he who has intentionally concealed himself from his creditors or withdrawn himself from the reach of their suits, with intent to frustrate their just demands. Thus, if a person depart from his usual residence, or remain absent therefrom, or conceal himself in his house, so that he cannot be served with process, with intent unlawfully to delay or defraud his creditors, he is an absconding debtor. But if he depart from the state, or from his usual abode, with the intention of again returning and without any fraudulent design, he has not absconded nor absented himself within the intentment of the law." Fitch v. Waite, 5 Conn. 121.

Absent Distinguished from Absconding.—An affidavit, to obtain an attachment, stated that the defendant "absents himself from his creditors and is not a resident," etc. This was held deficient, counsel arguing that there is a distinction between absenting and absconding. Conrad v. Conrad, 17 N. J. L. 154.

Nonresident Distinguished from Absent Defendant.—In Curd v. Letcher, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 443; the court said: "A man may be a citizen of Kentucky and yet a nonresident, and he may be a resident and yet an absent defendant." See also Den v. Wharton, 1 Verg. (Tenn.) 134.

And in Wheeler v. Wheeler, 35 Ill. App. 124, it was held that the word absence, with reference to a person in a statute other than the statute of limitations, must be taken to mean one who has been present, not a nonresident.

And in Cochran v. Fitch, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 142, the court holds that absent applies to both residents and nonresidents. And see Paine v. Drew, 44 N. H. 317.

Absence and "nonresidence" are not convertible terms; a statute authorizing an attachment on proof of nonresidence is not satisfied by an affidavit that the defendant "is not at this time within the state." Croxall v. Hutchings, 12 N. J. L. 84.

In Cochran v. Fitch, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 142, the court, to determine whether an attachment in another state was a bar to an action in New York, construes the Connecticut statute, saying: "The laws of Connecticut relative to the collection of debts by foreign attachment (Statutes of Connecticut compiled in 1838, page 287, etc.) authorize an attachment of debts due from any person to an absent or absconding debtor in favor of any creditor of the latter, and prohibit the garnishee from paying the debt to the absent debtor after notice of the proceedings. The statute is not limited to debtors residents of the state and temporarily absent, as was contended by the counsel for the complainant. The term absent debtor applies equally to nonresidents and residents; the title of the statute is 'Foreign Attachment;' its provisions are obviously intended for nonresident debtors; and in the 'Act for the Regulation of Civil Actions' (Stat. of Conn. above cited, pp. 41, 44), which directs in part the mode of proceeding on attachments, the statute speaks expressly of a defendant who is not a resident or inhabitant of the state. Sill v. U. S. Bank, 5 Conn. 102, is an authority for the application of the act to the complainant."

But in State v. Superior Ct., 6 Wash. 353, it was held that an affidavit upon which publication of summons was based was insufficient where it merely stated that the defendant was absent from the county, the court holding that the word absence, as used in the statute, was equivalent to nonresidence.

In Wash v. Heard, 27 Miss. 400, where a statute used the term "out of the state" in reference to one class of debtors, and absence in reference to another, it was held that by absence must have been meant nonresidence.

Prior Presence.—"But the words 'absent from,' it is said, can apply properly only to those who have been residents. The word absent, when used as a verb, as in the sentence 'to absent himself,' implies prior presence. So the word absentee means one who withdraws or has removed from his country, state, or home. But the word absence, though primarily it may have supposed prior presence, yet, in common usage, simply means a state of being away from or at a distance from, not in company with. And the word absent, when used as an adjective in common and ordinary use, simply means not present, and refers only to the condition or situation of the person or thing spoken of at the time of speaking, without any allusion or reference to any prior situation or condition of the same person or thing; so that there is really nothing in the words used in our present statute that is more favorable to the construction claimed by the defendant than that which has almost uniformly been given to similar statutes everywhere." Paine v. Drew, 44 N. H. 317. But see Wheeler v. Wheeler, 35 Ill. App. 124; Snoddy v. Cage, 5 Tex. 106. And see Hyman v. Bayne, 83 Ill. 256.

But in Buchanan v. Rucker, 9 East 194, a judgment had been obtained in the island of Tobago against a party stated to be "formerly of the city of Dunkirk, now of the city of London, merchant." He was cited by a summons which had been served by posting up a "copy of the declaration at the courthouse door," and, failing to appear, judgment had been entered against him as in default. The judgment was attempted to be maintained on the ground that it was authorized by the local laws in cases of persons absent from the island. Lord Ellenborough, in delivering the judgment of the court, said: "By persons absent from the island must necessarily be understood persons who have been present and within the jurisdiction, so as to have been subject to the process of the court; but it can never be applied to a person who, for aught that appears, never was present within or subject to the jurisdiction. * * * 'Absent from the island' must be taken only to apply to persons who had been present there and were subject to the jurisdiction of the court out of which the process issued." And to the same effect see Wheeler v. Wheeler, 35 Ill. App. 124; Snoddy v. Cage, 5 Tex. 105; Hyman v. Bayne, 83 Ill. 256.

Intention to Remain Away Formed after Departure—Bankruptcy.—In Wyndham v. Patterson, 4 Campb. 286, it was held that where a trader left England for purposes of trade, but remained abroad with intent to delay his creditors, he thereby absented himself within the meaning of a statute providing that traders absenting themselves to delay creditors shall be adjudged bankrupt.

The result of the cases is that a man's intentionally keeping away from any place where he would, in the ordinary course of things, be, is absenting himself, though it is not an act of bankruptcy unless it be with intent to defeat or delay his creditors. Ex p. Meyer, L. R. 7 Ch. 188.

ABSENTEE.—An absentee is a person who has resided in the state and has departed without leaving any one to represent him. It means, also, a person who never was domiciliated in the state and resides abroad.¹

ABSOLUTE. (See also ABSOLUTELY.)—The term "absolute" means complete, unconditional, not relative, not limited, independent of anything extraneous. It is used in law to distinguish an estate in fee from an estate in remainder, the rights of man in a state of nature from those pertaining to him in his social relations; as in algebra to designate "any pure number standing without the conjunction of literal characters."²

Absent Officers and Soldiers—Desertion, etc. (See also the title MILITARY LAW.)—An officer of the army ordered home to await orders is not absent from duty with leave so as to fall within the act placing officers absent from duty with leave on half-pay. U. S. v. Williamson, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 411.

Intentional absence without leave from military service does not constitute a desertion; there must accompany it an intent not to return. Hanson v. South Scituate, 115 Mass. 336.

One who, by reason of being an officer or private in the United States army, is absent from the state, is within a statute of limitations providing for absence on public business. Gregg v. Matlock, 31 Ind. 373.

The 103d article of war (Rev. Stat., § 1342) bars a trial for an offense committed more than two years before the issuing of the order for trial, "unless by reason of the offender absenting himself, or of some other manifest impediment, he shall not have been amenable to justice within that period." It was held that the language of this statute must be construed as that of other statutes of limitations, and the absence means absence from jurisdiction of military courts; that is, from the United States. In re Davison, 4 Fed. Rep. 507.

Out of the State.—The General Statutes of Massachusetts provide for the granting of a review upon petition, "provided that if the judgment complained of was rendered in the absence of petitioner and without his knowledge," the petition should be filed within one year of notice, etc. It was held that absence did not mean out of the state only, but was intended to apply to all cases of default, without service of process, in the several cases mentioned in the statute. James v. Townsend, 104 Mass. 371.

Death.—One who is dead is not absent. Rockland v. Morrill, 71 Me. 455; Redfern v. Rumney, 1 Cranch (C. C.) 300.

Absence of Justice of the Peace.—A Canada statute provides that where a prosecution for a certain offense is brought before two justices, no other justices shall sit unless one or both of the original justices is absent. The court said: "I think the word absence in this section does not necessarily mean actual absence from the place or room where the trial is held, but would apply to a case where the justices had, for some cause, become incapable of sitting and taking part in the proceedings. If such was the case, I think they would be absent within the meaning of the act, though not absent in fact." Byrne v. Arnold, 24 New Bruns. 164.

Absence of Judge.—Where a statute provided that in case of the absence of the county judge the county clerk should fill his place, it was held that the judge, though absent from the county seat, had sufficient power to execute and issue bonds advancing county interests and do certain ministerial acts and buy a seal being authorized by the code to procure one. Lynde v. Winnebago County, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 6.

Although a district judge may be present on the bench during the trial of a cause, yet, if he is not there for the purpose of taking part in the trial and decision, he may be regarded as absent. Bingham v. Cabbot, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 36.

Absence of Governor.—The constitution of Louisiana provides that in case of "absence from the state" of the governor, the powers and duties of his office shall devolve upon the lieutenant-governor. This was held not to refer to mere temporary absence; and the fact that the governor was at a place out of the state, but within a few hours' ride of the capital, for a period of twenty-one days, did not authorize the lieutenant-governor to exercise the functions of governor. State v. Graham, 26 La. Ann. 568, 21 Am. Rep. 551. See People v. Parker, 3 Neb. 409, 19 Am. Rep. 634.

Absence of Coroners.—In Reg. v. Perkins, 7 Q. B. 165, 53 E. C. L. 165, it was held that a coroner was absent from an inquest, within the meaning of a statute providing that his deputy might act in his absence, when he was holding another inquest, although he was accidentally present at the conclusion of the inquest held by the deputy.

1. Morris v. Bienvam, 30 La. Ann. 878; Dreville v. Cucullu, 18 La. Ann. 695.

The term absentee embraces persons residing abroad who have never been domiciliated in this state, as well as those who, having once resided here, have since left the state. Guillemin's Succession, 2 La. Ann. 634.

The word absentee means one who withdraws or has removed from his country, state, or home. Paine v. Drew, 44 N. H. 317.

2. Johnson v. Johnson, 32 Ala. 637.

It signifies without any condition or encumbrance. Bouv. Law Dict., followed in Converse v. Kellogg, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 597.

Complete, final, perfect, unconditional, unrestricted. Rap. & Law. Dict., followed in Fuller v. Missroon, 35 S. Car. 314; In re Reed, 21 Vt. 638.

That is an absolute interest in property which is so completely vested in the individual that he can by no contingency be deprived of it without his own consent. Hough v. City F. Ins. Co., 29 Conn. 20, 76 Am. Dec. 581.

"The word absolute came originally from the Latin, and means to 'loose from.' Webster gives many meanings to the word, as, inter alia, 'completed, or regarded as complete; finished; perfect; total; as, absolute perfection, absolute beauty. (2) Freed or loosed from any limitation or condition; uncontrolled; unconditional. (3) Positive; clear; certain. (6) Unconditioned; unrelated.'" People v. Ferry, 84 Cal. 34.

Absolute means free, uncontrolled. Williams v. Vancleave, 7 T. B. Mon. (Ky.) 393.

"The term 'absolute' has no fixed, unvarying meaning. When used in connection with an interest in property it is not always synonymous with 'unqualified.' Used in connection with 'estate' it means an estate in lands not subject to, or defeasible upon, any condition. 1 Burrill's Law Dict. 14. It may be quite as often and as pertinently used in contradistinction to 'contingent' or 'conditional,' as to 'qualified' or 'encumbered.'" Washington F. Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 32 Md. 450, 3 Am. Rep. 149.

Insurance—Absolute Interest. (See also the title FIRE INSURANCE.)—A policy of insurance provided that "if the interest in property to be insured be a leasehold interest or other interest not absolute, it must be so represented and expressed in the policy." It was held that a mortgagor's estate was an absolute interest, and that an omission to disclose the mortgage was not a breach of the condition. Washington F. Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 32 Md. 421, 3 Am. Rep. 149.

A policy of insurance contained the clause, "if the interest in the property to be insured is not absolute, it must be so represented to the company and expressed in the policy in writing," etc. The applicant described the property as "his house." It was shown that at the time the legal title was in another; that insured had a contract for the purchase, had paid part of the purchase money, and was in possession. The court charged that he was to be regarded as the owner of the property if he had the equitable title, and his interest was such that the loss would fall on him if the property was destroyed. This was held to be correct. Hough v. City F. Ins. Co., 29 Conn. 10, 76 Am. Dec. 581. The court said: "That is an absolute interest in property, which is so completely vested in the individual that he can by no contingency be deprived of it without his own consent. * * * So, too, he is the owner of such absolute interest who must necessarily sustain the loss if the property is destroyed. The subject of insurance was an interest, not a title. It is an interest, not a title, of which the conditions of insurance speak. The terms 'interest' and 'title' are not synonymous. A mortgagor in possession, and a purchaser holding under a deed defectively executed, have, both of them, absolute as well as insurable interests in the property, though neither of them has the legal title. * * * It seems to have been the leading object of the framers

[of this condition] to protect the company against the payment of losses to individuals who had not in fact sustained them. Thus the first clause provides that property held in trust or on commission must be insured as such, because in the one case the cestui que trust and not the trustee, and in the other the consignor and not the factor, would be the real or principal loser by the destruction of the property. So in regard to the holder of property under a lease, or whose interest in the property is contingent, if the property is destroyed, the entire loss may fall on the landlord in the one case, and in the other, instead of falling upon the individual insured, may, by the happening of the contingency, be cast entirely upon another. The condition in question speaks only of the character of the interest to be insured, not of its quantity. Absolute is here synonymous with 'vested,' and is used in contradistinction to contingent or conditional. The plaintiff had a vested interest in the property, of which he could not be deprived against his will—an interest dependent upon no contingency for its existence—an absolute interest."

In Washington F. Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 32 Md. 452, 3 Am. Rep. 149, the court said: "The case of Reynolds v. State Mut. Ins. Co., 2 Grant's Cas. (Pa.) 326, was that of a mutual policy, which contained, however, the clause we are now considering, and also required disclosure of encumbrances. The assured had made a contract for the purchase of the property, and had paid but a small sum upon it, much less than the amount insured. The judge below, in his charge to the jury, said, in reference to this clause: 'We also consider the insured had not an estate absolute. It is obvious that in speaking of a "leasehold interest, or other interest not absolute," the company had in view the necessity of its officers knowing the character of the insured's interest in the property. A fee simple is an estate absolute. Here Mr. Reynolds had no absolute estate of the kind, but a mere equity, to be changed to a fee-simple estate on paying the purchase money. The absolute estate remained in the vendors.' But when the case went up, the Supreme Court are careful to limit their decision. 'What we decide now,' they say, 'is this simple point, that one who occupies property for which he has no deed, but which he has agreed to purchase, cannot conceal the facts and have it insured on his own account for a larger sum than the amount of the purchase money he has actually paid at the time of the insurance. With this rule standing directly in his way the plaintiff could not possibly recover, and the other questions raised in the argument are, therefore, of no importance.' This cannot, therefore, be regarded as a decision in conflict with the Connecticut case (Hough v. City F. Ins. Co., 29 Conn. 10, 76 Am. Dec. 581), and I have been able to discover none that is."

A married woman is an absolute owner of her real property within the meaning of the policies. Commercial Ins. Co. v. Spankneble, 52 Ill. 53, 4 Am. Rep. 582. So one may be the absolute owner of property though it is subject to a lien for the purchase money. Woody v. Old Dominion Ins. Co., 31 Gratt. (Va.) 375. See also West Rockingham Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Sheets, 26 Gratt. (Va.) 854.

In Gaylord v. Lamar F. Ins. Co., 40 Mo. 13, 93 Am. Dec. 289, a purchaser under a decree of foreclosure which allowed fifteen months for redemption was held to be an absolute owner.

Absolute Purchase of Pew.—The words "absolute purchase of any pew in the church," in statute, are held not to mean that the purchaser is to hold free from all claim or control of the incumbent or churchwardens, or free from all interest of these persons in the general property of the church; but they are used in opposition to the rights of the leaseholders of pews and of those who have only sittings; and, subject to the necessary incidents of such a species of property, a person may be not improperly said to be an absolute purchaser of, and to have a freehold of inheritance in, the pew which he has bought. Ejectment, however, is not maintainable. Ridout v. Harris, 17 U. C. C. P. 88. See generally the title PEWS.

Absolute Total Loss. (See also the title ABANDONMENT and TOTAL LOSS, in MARINE INSURANCE.) An absolute total loss takes place when the subject insured wholly perishes, or its recovery is rendered irretrievably hopeless, and is one which entitles the insured to claim the whole amount of his subscription, without giving notice of abandonment. Burt v. Brewers', etc., Ins. Co., 9 Hun (N. Y.) 383.

Absolute Rights of Individuals.—By the absolute rights of individuals we mean those which are so in their primary and strictest sense, such as would belong to their persons merely in a state of nature, and which every man is entitled to enjoy out of society or in it. 1 Black. Com. 123; People v. Berberich, 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 224.

Minors. (See also the title INFANTS.)—A sale of a minor's property without the prescribed formalities is absolutely null, but may be ratified by the minor after majority expressly or by implication. Means v. Robinson, 7 Tex. 502; Clay v. Clay, 35 Tex. 509.

Whether in Conveyances the Term Absolute Carries the Fee.—In Fuller v. Missroon, 35 S. Car. 314, it was held that where a deed provided that the estate was to vest absolutely, the grantee took the fee. The court said: "Fortunately, the words 'to vest absolutely' occur here. As said by the circuit judge: Mr. Blackstone, in 2 Comm., p. 104, in speaking of freehold estates of inheritance, uses absolutely as synonymous with 'fee simple.' In Rapalje and Lawrence's Law Dictionary, in speaking of the owner of the estate in fee simple, it is said he 'is the absolute owner of land or other realty.' The same dictionary, in speaking of the legal definition of the term absolute, says the meaning is 'complete, final, perfect, unconditional, unrestricted.'"

To the same effect see McLure v. Young, 3 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 559; Myers v. Anderson, 1 Strobbh. Eq. (S. Car.) 344, 47 Am. Dec.

537; and Moseley v. Hankinson, 22 S. Car. 323.

By the words, "The rest and residue of all my property, personal, real, or mixed (after paying all just and lawful demands against my estate), I give and bequeath to my beloved wife," an absolute inheritable title or an estate in fee is passed, in Massachusetts. Lincoln v. Lincoln, 107 Mass. 590.

In Oswald v. Kopp, 26 Pa. St. 518, it was held that a gift of personal and real property absolutely to testator's wife carried the fee.

But on bequest to wife of personalty absolutely, having full confidence that she will leave the surplus to be divided, at her decease, justly among testator's children, the widow is entitled to the income for life merely, and is a trustee for the children of the principal. Coates's Appeal, 2 Pa. St. 129.

In Greenawalt v. Greenawalt, 71 Pa. St. 483, the court said: "Absolute is not a word used legally to distinguish a fee from a life estate, but to distinguish a qualified or conditional from a simple fee."

Absolute Conviction—Absolute Certainty, etc. (See also the title REASONABLE DOUBT.)—The trial court, after defining reasonable doubt, said: "It [referring to reasonable doubt] must be such doubt as nearly approaches conviction;" and added, "I mean, the opinion of his guilt must nearly approach what is called absolute conviction." The appellate court said: "Is there any difference between conviction and absolute conviction? Do they mean the same thing? The word absolute came originally from the Latin, and means to 'loose from.' Webster gives many meanings to the word, as, inter alia, 'completed or regarded as complete; finished; perfect; total; as, absolute perfection, absolute beauty. (2) Freed or loosed from any limitation or condition; uncontrolled; unconditional. (3) Positive; clear; certain. (6) Unconditioned; unrelated.' We think there is a difference, and that absolute conviction means conviction beyond a possibility of doubt, which the law does not require a jury to attain to to render a verdict against a defendant. It is said in People v. Padilla, 42 Cal. 540: 'The truth of any fact which is to be proven by evidence cannot be established beyond the possibility of a doubt, and yet the jury may be entirely satisfied of its truth.' Certainly, if it can or cannot be established beyond the possibility of a doubt, it need not be so established in order to justify a verdict of guilty against a defendant. In this connection may be noted the remarks on the import of the word absolute in People v. Davis, 64 Cal. 440, in which case it was held 'that absolute moral certainty was a greater degree of certainty than moral certainty.' In People v. Strong, 30 Cal. 154, an instruction asked by defendant on the point of reasonable doubt, or one cognate, containing the words 'absolute moral certainty,' was said to be substantially and almost literally in the language of the books which treat of the subject, referring to Burrill on Circumstantial Evidence 181, 182, and to 1 Starkie Ev. 482, 483, 510. In this the court probably went too far; but, as the instruction was given at defendant's request, it furnished no ground for reversal. In Davis's case it was asked by defendant, and the court held the refusal proper on the ground above stated. There was no error, then, in the direction to the jury that their opinion must approach absolute certainty; that is, a conviction so perfect, complete, and unconditioned as to exclude the possibility of a doubt." People v. Ferry, 84 Cal. 34.

Absolutely Incompatible. (See also the title REASONABLE DOUBT.)—In a prosecution for murder the court refused to give the following instruction: "In order to justify the inference of legal guilt from circumstantial evidence, the existence of the inculpatory facts must be absolutely incompatible with the innocence of the accused, and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt." On appeal it was held that the words "absolutely incompatible" contained in the instruction implied that the proof of the defendant's guilt must be established beyond the possibility of a doubt, and for that reason the court did not err in refusing the instruction. State v. Rover, 13 Nev. 17.

Absolute Ownership of Personal Property. (See the title PERPETUITIES.)—The New York statute against accumulations provides that the "absolute ownership of personal property shall not be suspended" for a longer period than of two lives in being. Absolute is used in the statute as equivalent to perfect and opposed to conditional, signifying without any condition or incumbrance. Converse v. Kellogg, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 597; Williams v. Lande, 74 Hun (N. Y.) 428. In the latter case it was held that a contract which provided that certain shares of stock should not be sold, but should be delivered to and held by a third party, was within the statute. See also Manice v. Manice, 43 N. Y. 303.

Absolute Imbecility—Testamentary Capacity. (See also the title TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.)—In Campbell v. Campbell, 130 Ill. 477, the trial court instructed that the testator's mind, "when impaired by age and disease, must be impaired to the point of lunacy or absolute imbecility," or he would not be incapable. The appellate court said: "The word absolute, in respect of the sense in which it is used in the instruction, is defined as 'completed or regarded as complete; finished; perfect; total; and the synonyms are 'perfect, total, and complete.' There are many degrees in the weakness of mind before reaching total or perfect or absolute imbecility; that is, before reaching utter and complete destitution of reason or rationality; and it must be apparent to every one that a man before reaching this point may be incapable."

An Absolute Conveyance is one which vests the entire interest in the property conveyed, both legal and equitable, in the grantee. Phinney v. Broschell, 80 N. Y. 544.

An absolute conveyance, an absolute right, an absolute estate, an absolute sale, is that which cannot be defeated or changed by any condition, restriction, or limitation. So is an absolute petition. Falconer v. Buffalo, etc., R. Co., 69 N. Y. 498.

Wills.—A condition annexed to a devise, that no condition should be made until ten years after the death of testator's widow, was void as to personal estate, as suspending the absolute ownership beyond the period prescribed by the statute. Converse v. Kellogg, 7 Barb. (N. Y.) 590.

Absolute Nullities are of two kinds—those resulting from stipulations derogating from the force of laws made for the preservation of public order or good morals, and those established for the interest of individuals. Means v. Robinson, 7 Tex. 516.

Absolute Title.—An absolute title to lands cannot exist at the same time in different persons or in different governments. An absolute title must be an exclusive title or at least a title which excludes all others not compatible with it. Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 588.

"An Absolute Fee Simple is such as has no bounds or limits annexed to it, and is an estate to a man and his heirs absolutely forever.' * * * But the word absolute prefixed to 'fee simple' in the statute is very significant. It was designed to prevent any inference that the substituted estate might be a determinable fee." Lott v. Wyckoff, 1 Barb. (N. Y.) 574.

Absolute Sale.—See the titles CONDITIONAL SALES; SALES.

1. A clause in a will bequeathing property to testator's daughters, and directing the shares to "vest absolutely in them and their respective heirs of their bodies forever," does not create a separate estate in daughter married at the date of the will. Johnson v. Johnson, 32 Ala. 637.

Where the first section of a statute vested the estate of an assignor in his assignee on the presentation of a petition, etc., the provision in a subsequent section that it should become "absolutely vested" has no new operation. Sayer v. Dufaur, 11 Q. B. 325, 63 E. C. L. 324.

"Absolutely" Equivalent to "Utterly."—Pearsoll v. Chapin, 44 Pa. St. 14.

Due Absolutely.—The phrase "due absolutely and not on a contingency" is applicable to the past earnings of a party payable in the future on the estimate and certificate of a third person. Ware v. Gowen, 65 Me. 534.

Absolutely Incompatible.—In a prosecution for murder the court refused to give the following instruction: "In order to justify the inference of legal guilt from circumstantial evidence, the existence of the inculpatory facts must be absolutely incompatible with the innocence of the accused, and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than that of his guilt." On appeal it was held that the words "absolutely incompatible" contained in the instruction implied that the proof of the defendant's guilt must be established beyond the possibility of a doubt, and for that reason the court did not err in refusing the instruction. State v. Rover, 13 Nev. 17. See also ABSOLUTE and the title REASONABLE DOUBT.

ABSTRACT. (See also the article ABSTRACT OF TITLE.)—The term “abstract,” as applied to records, ordinarily means a mere brief, and not a copy of that from which it is taken.²

Absolutely Entitled—English Eminent Domain Act.—In re Hobson's Trusts, 7 Ch. Div. 708, it was held that trustees of a settlement or will with a power of sale are persons absolutely entitled to purchase money for land, paid into court under an act providing for taking lands for public improvements. But In re Smith, 40 Ch. Div. 386, In re Hobson's Trusts, 7 Ch. Div. 708, was doubted. See also In re Evans's Settlement, 14 Ch. Div. 511; In re St. Luke's, Middlesex, W. N. (80) 58; In re Ward, 54 L. J. Ch. 231, 28 Ch. Div. 719; Ex p. Haberdashers' Co., 31 S. J. 126; In re Curwen, W. N. (80) 83.

A tenant for life is not a person “absolutely entitled.” Mackenzie v. Mackenzie, 5 De G. & S. 338. But persons duly appointed new trustees are “absolutely entitled.” In re Russell, 20 L. J. Ch. 196; In re Baxter, 2 Sm. & G. App. v.; In re Ellis's Settlement, 24 Beav. 426.

Druggist's Prescription—Absolutely Necessary.—A West Virginia statute provides that a prescription, to justify a druggist in sale of liquors on Sunday, must specify that liquors are absolutely necessary. It was held that the omission of the word absolutely rendered the prescription insufficient. The court said: “While, in a general sense, it may be said that the word ‘necessary,’ like the word ‘perfect,’ implies the superlative degree, and that, therefore, when a thing is declared to be necessary it is essential, and ex vi termini implies all that would be expressed by the words ‘absolutely necessary,’ still the word absolutely is not unfrequently used to emphasize the degree of necessity when it is intended to express an extreme case. This latter use is sanctioned by custom, and it cannot be said to be either improper or meaningless. The spirit of our liquor legislation justifies the conclusion that it is only in extreme cases that the use of spirituous liquors was intended to be legally permitted. Besides, it is a canon of construction that effect must be given to every word used in the statute if that be possible. Consequently, the legislature having used the word absolutely, and that word having the effect of intensifying the degree of necessity for the use of the liquor, as well as qualifying the degree of its use, we do not feel authorized in holding that a prescription omitting that word is a sufficient compliance with the statute.” State v. Tetrick, 34 W. Va. 137.

1. Patents.—“When the patents Nos. 337,298 and 337,299 were issued the difference between them was that between an ‘absorptive substance,’ or an ‘absorptive substance adapted to be transformed into active material,’ on the one hand, and ‘active material, or material adapted to become active,’ on the other. There is a theoretical and scientific difference between the articles which may be called absorptive and ‘active.’ Spongy lead has no oxygen, but will absorb oxygen and thus become active. The oxides of lead have absorbed oxygen, and are therefore active; but ‘it is admitted that the moment a battery, constructed with plates, having either coating, is charged or discharged, all distinction vanishes.’ As the terms are used in the electrical art they are synonymous, and it is especially certain that as these two patents are phrased there is no substantial difference in the character of the inventions which are described and claimed.” Electrical Accumulator Co. v. Brush Electric Co., 1 U. S. App. 320, 554.

2. Dickinson v. Chesapeake, etc., R. Co., 7 W. Va. 413; McCracken v. Graham, 14 Pa. St. 211.

A certificate read: “United States Land Office, Springfield, Mo., August 10, 1868. I certify that the within plat is a correct abstract of the records in this office. John S. Waddill, Register.” It was held that the word abstract was used in the sense of “copy,” as required by statute. Wilhite v. Barr, 67 Mo. 284.

Embezzlement—Abstracting. (See also the title EMBEZZLEMENT.)—The United States statute provides for the offense of abstracting money from a national bank. Upon the meaning of the term abstracting, as thus used, the court, in United States v. Northway, 120 U. S. 334, said: “Unlike the word ‘misapply,’ as used in the same section, the word abstract is not ambiguous, because it does not appear from other parts of the statute that there are two or more kinds of abstracting, both unlawful, but only one described as a criminal offense. The word abstract, as used in the statute, therefore, has but one meaning, being that which is attached to it in its ordinary and popular use.” And in United States v. Harper, 33 Fed. Rep. 479, the court said: “In considering this charge it is proper to state that the term abstract, as used in section 5209, has no technical meaning like the word ‘embezzle,’ but is employed in the statute, and is to be understood, in its ordinary and popular sense, as taking or withdrawing from; so that to abstract the moneys, funds, credits, and assets of a national bank by any of its officers named in the act is to take or withdraw the same from the possession or control of the association. But the mere taking or withdrawal of its funds or moneys or other assets from the bank's possession is not in and of itself alone sufficient to constitute the criminal offense of abstraction which is described in the statute. It must further appear, in order to complete the offense, that this taking or withdrawing was without the knowledge and consent of the association, and that the funds and assets so taken and withdrawn were converted to the use, benefit, and advantage of the officer or agent of the bank abstracting the same, and with intent to injure or defraud or deceive, as indicated in the statute.”

CROSS-REFERENCES.

For other matters of SUBSTANTIVE LAW AND EVIDENCE related to this subject, see the following titles in this work: ACKNOWLEDGMENTS; ADVICE OF COUNSEL; ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS; ATTORNEY AND CLIENT; DEEDS; GRANTS; RECORD; RECORDING ACTS; RESCISSION; VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

I. DEFINITION.—An abstract of title, or brief of title as it is sometimes called, is a short and methodical summary of the documents and facts which affect the title to a piece of land.¹

II. OBJECT OF THE ABSTRACT.—The object of the abstract is to enable the vendee or his counsel to judge of the precise state of the title, and to ascertain how far it is affected by incumbrances of every description.²

Duty to Examine.—The duty to investigate rests upon the vendee, for by the common law the maxim caveat emptor applies to purchasers of real estate, as well as to purchasers of personal property.³

III. CONTENTS AND SUFFICIENCY—1. In General.—In order to permit the purchaser to pass safely upon the title, in view of the responsibility resting upon him, the abstract should be a clear exposition of everything relating thereto.

Summary of Grants, Patents, Conveyances, Incumbrances, etc.—It should contain a full summary of all grants, patents, conveyances, wills, and all records and judicial proceedings whereby the title is in any way affected, and should show the exact state of the property with regard to all incumbrances or liens which have at any time affected it, such as mortgages, judgments, mechanics' liens, notices of lis pendens, taxes, assessments, and the like.⁴

Constructive Notice—Inquiries in Pais.—But the abstract should go even further: the doctrine of constructive notice will imply notice of facts and instruments in many cases where no actual notice exists;⁵ and it may become necessary to institute inquiries in pais as to questions of possession, pedigree, marriage, death, and devolution of title by descent from intestate ancestors, or as to easements arising from implied dedication or prescription.⁶ Such inquiries should be made diligently, and their result embodied in the abstract.

Duty of Vendor.—Where, as in England, the duty rests upon the vendor to furnish an abstract, he must disclose every fact within his knowledge relating to the title.⁷

1. In Banker v. Caldwell, 3 Minn. 94, Flaudrau, J., quotes the following apt and clear definition from Burrill's Law Dictionary: "In conveyancing; an abstract or summary of the most important parts of the deeds and other instruments composing the evidences of a title to real estate; arranged usually in chronological order, and intended to show the origin, course, and incidents of the title, without the necessity of referring to the deeds themselves. It also contains a statement of all charges, incumbrances, liens, and liabilities to which the property may be subjected, and of which it is, in any way, material for purchasers to be apprised. Abstracts of title constitute an important part of the learning of conveyancing, and in England have been illustrated by treatises expressly devoted to the subject." Very similar is the definition of Warvelle on Abstracts (2d ed.), c. 1, § 2.

2. 1 Preston on Abstracts 1-5; Willard on Real Estate and Conveyancing (2d ed.) 527; Taylor v. Williams, 2 Colo. App. 559.

3. Broom's Legal Maxims (8th ed.) 768; Gwillim v. Stone, 3 Taunt. 433; Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45; Abbott v. Allen, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 519, 7 Am. Dec. 554.

"If a man buys lands whereunto another hath title, which the buyer knoweth not, yet ignorance shall not excuse him." Doctor and Student, bk. 2, c. 47. Of course, covenants and warranties may change the rule. See the article VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

The place of the abstract in negotiating a sale is more clearly defined in English practice than in the United States. In England, the abstract is an implied feature in every sale of land, and its object is to show a marketable title in the vendor. See infra, this article, Who must Furnish Abstract, and note.

4. What the Abstract should Contain. — In Taylor v. Williams, 2 Colo. App. 559, Richmond, P. J., said the abstract "should contain whatever concerns the sources of the title, and its conditions. Not only should the descent and line of the title be clearly traced out, and all incumbrances, all chances of eviction, or adverse claims should be shown, but material parts of all patents, deeds, wills, judicial proceedings, and other records or documents which touch the title, and also liens and incumbrances of every nature, should be set forth."

Reference to Original Documents and Records. —The investigator should refer to the original documents or records in every instance; he cannot trust the marginal entries of record clerks as to the satisfaction of mortgages and the like. Wacek v. Frink, 51 Minn. 282. And see Wilson v. Tucker, 3 Stark. 154.

5. See the article NOTICE.

6. Parish Books, Family Documents, etc.—In such cases resort may be had to parish books, family documents, and the like. See the articles AGE; DEATH; EVIDENCE; DEDICATION; FAMILY; MARRIAGE; PEDIGREE.

7. What Vendor must Disclose.—The vendor must disclose every instrument which constitutes a part of his title, Oakden v. Pike, 34 L. J. Ch. 620, 13 W. R. 673; and every fact

2. Effect of Recording Statutes.—Under the recording statutes in force in the United States, it is usually the case that the whole title is contained in instruments of record. So far is this true, that cases are found which limit the abstract maker's duties to abstracting the records, and define an abstract from this point of view.¹

3. Period for which Title Shown—a. ENGLISH RULE.—The old rule in England was that the abstract should show the title for sixty years,² and this was said to be by analogy to the statute of limitations against a writ of right.³ As succeeding statutes have shortened the time necessary to bar an action for real property, the requirement as to the abstract has been made less strenuous. Under the Vendor and Purchaser Act of 1874, an abstract that shows title for forty years is enough.⁴

b. PRACTICE IN THE UNITED STATES.—No rule exists in the United States as to the period required to be covered by an abstract. The best usage carries the title back, where possible, to the original grant from the state, and traces all incumbrances and claims of every sort, with due regard to the periods within which claims might be asserted thereunder by the local statutes of limitations.⁵

IV. WHO MUST FURNISH THE ABSTRACT—1. In England.—In England, the production of the abstract is implied in every sale of land, and is one of the most important steps in completing the contract.⁶ The vendor furnishes the abstract, and he must afford the purchaser an opportunity to compare it with the documents abstracted, and this at the vendor's expense.⁷

within his knowledge relating thereto, Edwards v. Wickwar, 35 L. J. Ch. 48. He may not suppress defects in the title, Edwards v. Wickwar, 35 L. J. Ch. 48; nor incumbrances, although they might have been subsequently discharged, Drummond v. Tracy, 1 Johns. 608; or are of doubtful priority, Palmer v. Locke, 18 Ch. Div. 381. But where the abstract shows a good equitable title, it need not show the devolution of the legal estate. Camberwell, etc., Bldg. Soc. v. Holloway, 13 Ch. Div. 754. See infra, this article, Showing the Title by the Abstract.

1. The term "abstract of title" means a statement in substance of what appears on the public records affecting the title to the property in question. Union Safe Deposit Co. v. Chisholm, 33 Ill. App. 647. And see Chase v. Heaney, 70 Ill. 268.

An abstract is a summary or epitome of the facts relied upon as evidence of title, and should contain a note of all conveyances, transfers, or other facts relied on as evidences of the claimant's title, together with all such facts appearing of record as may impair it. Heinsen v. Lamb, 117 Ill. 549. See also Smith v. Taylor, 82 Cal. 533.

2. Old English Rule.—Williams on Real Property (6th ed.) 450; Sugden on Vendor and Purchaser (13th ed.) 281. And see Cooper v. Emery, 1 Ph. 388; Purvis v. Rayer, 9 Price 488; Souter v. Drake, 5 B. & Ad. 992, 27 E. C. L. 250.

Root of the Title.—The title, assumed to be good, from which the abstract is adduced, is called "the root" of the title. The title may begin with deed or will, Cottrell v. Watkins, 1 Beav. 361; Parr v. Lovegrove, 4 Drew. 170; or may be shown from long and uninterrupted possession, Cottrell v. Watkins, 1 Beav. 361. See also the article VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

3. 32 Henry VIII., c. 2. See Willard on Real Estate and Conveyancing (2d ed.) 527. But compare Williams on Real Property (6th ed.) 450.

4. Modern English Rule.—See 37 & 38 Vict., c. 78; In re Johnson, 30 Ch. Div. 42. But by the same acts, recitals in deeds over twenty years old are prima facie evidence of the facts recited, and where title begins from a deed over twenty years old, reciting seizin in fee, the vendee cannot demand further abstracts, except so far as he may prove the recital inaccurate. Bolton v. London School Board, 7 Ch. Div. 766.

5. This may be impossible, especially in the older states, by reason of the condition of the records. In such cases the possibilities of investigation should be exhausted, or the investigation begun at some period beyond the statute of limitations, as in the English practice. It should be noted, however, that deeds upon record, no matter how old they may be, affect a purchaser with notice; and where there are conditions therein, a breach of the same, even after the lapse of a century, may defeat the estate; consequently an exhaustive search is always safest. Martindale on Abstracts of Title, §§ 17, 18, 19. See the articles ESTATES; CONDITIONS.

6. Pomeroy on Specific Performance, § 413.

7. English Rule: Vendor Furnishes Abstract.—Williams on Real Property (6th ed.) 450; 1 Preston Abstracts, tit. 1; Dart on Vendor & Purchaser (6th ed.) 141; In re Ford, 10 Ch. Div. 365; In re Johnson, 30 Ch. Div. 42. See also Morris v. Kearsley, 2 Y. & Coll. 139.

But it seems doubtful whether the purchaser may demand inspection of deeds earlier than the title required to be shown—for example, sixty years. Parr v. Lovegrove, 4 Drew. 170.

Of Course, Special Agreement may throw the

2. In the United States.—In the United States an abstract is not an implied feature of every sale of land.¹

Caveat Emptor.—Since every title is of record, the application of the doctrine of caveat emptor, in the absence of special agreement, requires the purchaser to satisfy himself as to the sufficiency of the title, and for that purpose to make the necessary investigations and abstracts.²

Special Agreement.—But frequently the matter is arranged by agreement, and, of course, the terms of such agreement are controlling.³

V. TIME OF DELIVERING THE ABSTRACT.—The English rule as to the time of delivering the abstract differs at law and in equity.

duty of investigating upon the purchaser. Thomas v. Blackman, 1 Colly. 301.

The English Practice is the Natural Consequence of the fact that in England, titles are unrecorded, and that muniments of title are, in general, in the hands of the owner of the property. Since the deeds are in the vendor's possession, he fills his implied contract to make good title by furnishing an abstract of his muniments of title to the purchaser, allowing the latter, through his solicitor, to compare the abstract with the originals. The possession of the abstract passes rightfully to the vendee, though he may lose his right thereto if the negotiations are broken off. Coppinger on Title Deeds 37. See also infra, this article, Showing the Title by the Abstract.

1. Abstract not Implied in Every Case.—Pomerooy on Specific Performance, § 413; Wade v. Killough, 5 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 450.

In Alabama, however, it is incumbent on the vendor, when required to do so by the vendee, to furnish the latter an abstract of his title. Chapman v. Lee, 55 Ala. 623.

But it seems doubtful whether the abstract which the vendee can require is anything more than such information as to the title as will enable him to prepare and tender to the vendor a satisfactory conveyance of the property. Wade v. Killough, 5 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 450.

2. Purchaser must Examine for Himself—Reason of the Rule.—In Espy v. Anderson, 14 Pa. St. 308, Coulter, J., after remarking that the original deeds forming the chain of title cannot be tendered with the deed to the vendee in cases where the original deed covers a large tract of which only a part is sold, proceeds: "In this country, where titles are on record, it is of no consequence, because the vendee can resort to the record for information as to the title. The rule is caveat emptor. It is the duty, therefore, of a purchaser to examine for himself. The defendant is not bound to accept a doubtful title, but it is his business to show that it is doubtful or positively bad. In England it is customary to give to the vendee an abstract of the title, but that is not usual here. It is common, however, to recite the chain of title in the preamble to the deed." See also Patten v. Stewart, 24 Ind. 332.

Where there is no provision as to who shall furnish the abstract, it is the duty of the purchaser to provide one and to satisfy himself as to the condition of the title. Easton v. Montgomery, 90 Cal. 307.

3. Thus the Agreement may Provide that the Vendee must investigate the title. Carr v. Roach, 2 Duer (N. Y.) 20; Fruhauf v. Bendheim (Supreme Ct.), 6 N. Y. Supp. 264; Nason v. Armstrong, 21 Ont. App. 183.

But more Often the Duty is Assumed by the Vendor. For instances see Benson v. Shotwell, 87 Cal. 49; Boas v. Farrington, 85 Cal. 535; Taylor v. Williams, 2 Colo. App. 559; Hale v. Cravener, 128 Ill. 408; Mead v. Altgeld, 136 Ill. 298; Union Safe Deposit Co. v. Chisholm, 33 Ill. App. 647; Constantine v. East, 8 Ind. App. 291; Horn v. Butler, 39 Minn. 515; Johnston v. Johnson, 43 Minn. 5; Kane v. Rippey, 24 Oregon 338.

Default of Vendor—Recovery by Vendee of Expenses.—If the vendor at the time fixed is unable to convey a good title, the vendee may recover back the amount spent by him in investigating the title. Turner v. Reynolds, 81 Cal. 214; Hewison v. Hoffman (C. Pl.), 4 N. Y. Supp. 621; Uhl v. Loughran (Supreme Ct.), 2 N. Y. Supp. 190; Porterfield v. Payne, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 591; Wetmore v. Bruce, 118 N. Y. 319.

Default of Vendee—Tender of Abstract Unnecessary.—Where the agreement is that the vendor shall furnish a satisfactory abstract, and that thereupon the vendee shall pay the purchase money, if the vendee notifies the vendor of his inability to perform the contract by reason of want of funds, the vendor need not tender an abstract in order to put the vendee in default. Johnston v. Johnson, 43 Minn. 5.

Notice to Vendee where Abstract may be Inspected—Estoppel.—Where the vendor who has agreed to furnish a satisfactory abstract gives notice to the vendee of the place where it may be found and inspected, and the vendee does not object at the time, the latter cannot rescind. Papin v. Goodrich, 103 Ill. 86.

Right to Hold Abstract as Security.—Where A, wishing to borrow money from B on a mortgage, gave B's attorney an abstract to the title of the property mortgaged, for the purpose of decreasing the expenses of the search, which A was by contract to pay, the abstract became a part of the security for the loss, and B was entitled to hold it until the mortgage was paid. Holm v. Wust, 11 Abb. Pr., N. S. (N. Y. Supreme Ct.) 113.

But the purchaser to whom the vendor has delivered abstracts cannot rescind for defect of title and retain the abstracts as security for the earnest money. Jackson v. Conlin, 50 Ill. App. 538.

Rule at Law.—At law the vendor must have the abstract ready at the appointed time at his peril, and upon default the purchaser may recover his deposit.¹

Rule in Equity.—In equity, if the vendor does not tender the abstract at the appointed time, the vendee must demand it, or he will be considered as having waived his strict rights;² and if the vendor delivers the abstract after the proper time, and the vendee receives it, he is considered as having waived the delay.³

Reasonable Time.—Where the abstract is to be furnished in a reasonable time, the question of what is a reasonable time depends upon the circumstances of the case.⁴

VI. SHOWING THE TITLE BY THE ABSTRACT—1. General Principles.—In every agreement to sell there is implied, by law, an agreement to make a good title to the property sold.⁵ In England always, and in the United States by special agreement, the vendor shows by means of his abstract that he has good title,⁶ and the vendee is entitled to an abstract which shows a good title such as will enable him to complete his purchase.⁷

1. 2 White & Tudor's Lead. Cas. 557; Berry v. Young, 2 Esp. 640, note. And see Williams v. Daly, 33 Ill. App. 454.

Abstract Defective—Right of Vendor to Additional Time.—Where the contract calls for an abstract showing good title by a day certain, the vendor has no right to demand time to furnish an additional abstract, if the first is defective. Howe v. Hutchison, 105 Ill. 501.

2. Guest v. Homfray, 5 Ves. 818.

No Time Appointed for Delivery—Duty of Vendee.—If no time for delivering the abstract is appointed, the vendee must demand it in time to leave a sufficient period for completion of the contract before the time named in the agreement. Jones v. Price, 3 Anstr. 924. And see Wilson v. Wittrock, 19 U. C. Q. B. 391. See also Compton v. Bagley (1892), 1 Ch. 319, where, after repeated delays, the purchaser's solicitor demanded the abstract within fourteen days, and in default thereof the purchaser was held justified in rescinding.

3. Waiver of Delay.—Seton v. Slade, 7 Ves. 265; Smith v. Burnam, 2 Anstr. 527; Pincke v. Curteis, 4 Bro. C. C. 329; Paine v. Meller, 6 Ves. 349. In such cases the vendor cannot insist on the vendee sending in his objections within the time limited. Upperton v. Nickolson, L. R. 6 Ch. 436.

Extension of Time to Vendor—Duty of Vendee as to Notice.—A purchaser of land who has given the vendor further time to remedy defects in the abstract of title may not rescind for failure to furnish additional abstracts within a reasonable time, without notifying the vendor that he will wait no longer, where he receives the abstracts furnished as if he meant to have them examined with a view to determine as to their sufficiency, and subsequently claims to retain them as security for the payment of the earnest money, although knowing that they were not delivered to him for that purpose. Jackson v. Conlin, 50 Ill. App. 538.

4. Jackson v. Conlin, 50 Ill. App. 538. It was held in this case that, under a contract for the sale of land providing that an abstract of title shall be furnished within a reasonable time, the abstract need not be furnished within the thirty-five days in which a payment falls due by the terms of the contract; but such payment cannot be required until the abstract has been supplied and a reasonable time allowed for its examination.

5. Sugden on Vendor and Purchaser (13th ed.) 281; Williams on Real Property (6th ed.) 450; Shreck v. Pierce, 3 Iowa 350. See, for the rule and exceptions, the article VENDOR AND PURCHASER; and see the same article as to what is a good or marketable title.

6. Under the usual reference as to title, the title is made out when it is proved, but is first shown when the facts necessary to make it out are specifically alleged on the abstract, and are within the vendor's power to prove. Parr v. Lovegrove, 4 Drew. 170. As to the vendor's duty to disclose incumbrances, see supra, this article, Contents and Sufficiency, in General.

7. A Perfect Abstract.—A perfect abstract of title is one that shows such a title as enables the purchaser to complete his purchase. Blackburn v. Smith, 2 C. & K. 561. And see McIntosh v. Rogers, 12 Ont. Pr. Rep. 389.

Purchaser Dispensing with Proof as to Certain Period.—The purchaser is not entitled to be furnished with an abstract of the title beyond the time he has dispensed with proof of it. Poppleton v. Buchanan, 4 C. B., N. S. 20.

Good Record Title.—Under a contract for the purchase of a farm requiring the vendor to convey by warranty deed and to furnish a full abstract, he is required to convey a good record title. Constantine v. East, 8 Ind. App. 291.

The Vendor can Make a Good Title where a good title appears on the face of the abstract and where he is able and willing to prove the deeds and facts therein alleged; whatever he puts upon his abstract, he is bound to prove and verify. Parr v. Lovegrove, 4 Drew. 170.

Innocent Omission in the Chain—Rescission by Vendee.—If the abstract shows a clear title, by reason of an innocent omission of the registrar who prepared it, and the vendor is aware of the omission, but represents the abstract as correct, the vendee may rescind

2. Vendee's Objections.—The English practice is, that after receiving an abstract and perusing it the vendee shall send in such further "requisitions" as to defects or omissions therein as he thinks fit; and in the United States the practice is similar where, by contract, the vendor furnishes the abstract.¹

To be Made in Reasonable Time.—The vendee must present such requisitions within a reasonable time, and, if he fails to do so, he will be considered as having waived all objections.²

upon discovering the defect, and the vendor cannot show the invalidity of the incumbrance omitted. Scadin v. Sherwood, 67 Mich. 230.

Good and Marketable Title.—Where the vendor furnished an abstract which failed to show whether there were judgments against or conveyances by the vendor, although it showed title in him, this was held to be valid ground of objection, under a contract that the vendor should furnish an abstract showing good and marketable title. Union Safe Deposit Co. v. Chisholm, 33 Ill. App. 647.

"Warranty Deed Conveying Clear Title with Abstract."—Where the agreement is that the vendor is to furnish "a warranty deed conveying clear title with abstract," the purchaser may insist on the abstract showing clear title, as a condition precedent to the purchase; and if the abstract shows defects in the vendor's title, the vendor may not show that the defects disclosed in the abstract do not exist. Taylor v. Williams, 2 Colo. App. 559. And see Smith v. Taylor, 82 Cal. 533; Boaz v. Farrington, 85 Cal. 535; Benson v. Shotwell, 87 Cal. 49; Howe v. Hutchison, 105 Ill. 501; Mead v. Altgeld, 136 Ill. 298; Kane v. Rippey, 24 Oregon 338; Kane v. Rippey, 22 Oregon 296.

Where, in such a case, the vendee brought suit for return of a payment upon the purchase-money, the complaint alleging that the abstract did not show good title, and the vendor, in his answer, did not deny this allegation, it was held that the vendee was entitled to judgment upon the pleadings. Horn v. Butler, 39 Minn. 515.

Purchaser of Shares in a Mine.—The purchaser of shares in a mining company is not entitled to a regular abstract of the title of the mines themselves, but he is entitled to evidence to show that the subject matter of the purchase is what it professes to be, and that the proposed form of transfer to him will give him a valid title. Curling v. Flight, 2 Ph. 613.

Title to be Approved by Attorney.—Where by the terms of the contract the title is to be approved by the vendee's attorney after due examination of the abstract, the vendee cannot be required to complete the sale when his attorney rejects the title, although the title may be good. Allen v. Pockwitz, 103 Cal. 85. See also Boulton v. Bethune, 21 Grant's Ch. (U. Can.) 110.

1. Lee on Abstracts 20; Warvelle on Abstracts 4.

Vendee Entitled to Verification of Abstract.—The vendee is not only entitled to an abstract showing on its face a good title, but he is entitled to have such abstract verified. Granger v. Latham, 14 Grant's Ch. (U. Can.) 209.

The vendee is entitled to the verification of an abstract which he has waived the right to demand; e.g., of an abstract furnished to him, upon his request, by the vendor after he has accepted the title. Gordon v. Harnden, 18 Grant's Ch. (U. Can.) 231.

But the vendor or his solicitor cannot be forced to answer general questions asked for the purpose of negating incumbrances, without regard to any defect in the abstract. In re Ford, 10 Ch. Div. 265.

Perusal and Certification.—The completed abstract is submitted frequently to counsel for perusal, who, after examination, appends his opinion of the validity of the title shown, and points out material defects if there are any. This opinion is properly in the form of a signed certificate at the end of the abstract.

2. Stevenson v. Polk, 71 Iowa 278. See also Nason v. Armstrong, 21 Ont. App. 183; Jackson v. Conlin, 50 Ill. App. 538.

Where the Vendee Receives and Examines an Abstract according to contract, and allows the vendor to go on and remedy defects in title which he points out, he cannot afterwards insist on other objections, but he must present all his objections within a reasonable time after receiving the abstract. Stevenson v. Polk, 71 Iowa 278.

The Vendee may Show, it seems, Specific Defects in the abstract, although he has not made his objections within the proper time. Ward v. Grimes, 9 Jur., N. S. 1097, 11 W. R. 794.

Special Agreement—Time Essential.—Where it is agreed specifically that objections not made within a reasonable time are deemed waived, time is essential. Morley v. Cook, 2 Hare 106.

If the Vendor has been Delinquent in furnishing the abstract, but the vendee has accepted it when furnished, the vendor cannot insist upon the vendee furnishing his objections within the time specified in the contract. Upperton v. Nicholson, L. R. 6 Ch. 436.

Refusal of Vendor to Explain Apparent Defects.—Where the vendor refuses to explain apparent defects in the abstract, merely claiming that the deed as to which the mistake is alleged is wrongfully recorded, the purchaser may refuse to complete the sale and may demand a return of the deposit, though the title afterward proves good. Benson v. Shotwell, 87 Cal. 49. See also Boaz v. Farrington, 85 Cal. 535.

If the Vendee has Accepted the Title, and, by reason of his failure to pay the purchase money, the vendor has rescinded the contract, the vendee cannot avail himself of a defect in the abstract of the title. Soper v. Arnold, L. R. 14 App. Cas. 429.

Default of Vendee—Contract Void at Option of Vendor.—Where, by agreement, the vendor is to furnish an abstract which the vendee is to

VII. PREPARING THE ABSTRACT—1. Preliminary.—The first process in preparing an abstract is to obtain a sketch of the chain of title—a memorandum showing the transfers of title to the estate under examination, for the period to be covered by the abstract. This is drawn up from a preliminary search of the records, or from the title deeds to the property, and shows in outline who was interested therein at any given time, and, consequently, in whose power it was to transfer the title to the estate and create incumbrances thereon at such time.

2. Searching—a. IN GENERAL.—The next step is to make exhaustive searches of all public records against the names and for the periods pointed out by the preliminary memorandum.¹

b.* PUBLIC RECORDS—DUTY OF OFFICIALS.—The public records are open to inspection and examination.² By statute in some states it is the duty of the officials having them in charge to furnish searches when required, on payment of the proper fees.³

have thirty days to examine, and the vendee is to make payment within such time, and in default thereof the contract is to be void, and the vendor furnishes a satisfactory abstract, but the vendee fails to make payment, the contract becomes void at the option of the vendor without further act on his part. Paget v. Park, 50 Minn. 186.

Waiver of Acceptance.—Where the vendor, after the vendee's acceptance of the title, furnishes an abstract and answers requisitions as to matters therein, the acceptance is waived. Aldwell v. Aldwell, 6 U. Can. Pr. Rep. 183.

1. Sketch of the Chain of Title.—What should be the extent of such search may be gathered from the remarks above as to the form and sufficiency of abstracts, and the hints below as to abstracting different kinds of documents. In addition to the searches so made, inquiries in pais should include not only the subjects referred to above, but also the existence of easements or servitudes, public or private, by prescription or actual dedication. See the article EASEMENTS.

Registry Laws—Search against Grantor.—Under the registry laws generally of the United States, search against the grantor need not go back of the period at which he acquired record title. Rawle on Covenants of Title 428; Dodd v. Williams, 3 Mo. App. 278; State v. Bradish, 14 Mass. 296.

2. Right of Access to Public Records.—The decisions as to the rights of abstract makers and abstract companies to examine abstracts and copy records are not in accord. In some states it is held that free access should be furnished to the records; and the fact that the law allows the clerk to charge a fee for a personal search does not entitle him to demand such fee for allowing to others access to the record. Linn v. McCarty, 39 N. J. L. 287; West Jersey Title, etc., Co. v. Barber, 49 N. J. Eq. 474 (compare Flemming v. Hudson County, 30 N. J. L. 280); State v. Rachac, 37 Minn. 372; Com. v. O'Donnell, 15 Phila. (Pa.) 197; Burton v. Tuite, 78 Mich. 363, overruling Webber v. Townley, 43 Mich. 534, 38 Am. Rep. 213.

Reasonable Regulations.—But rights afforded to abstract makers copying records, to accumulate material for future use, are subject to reasonable regulations. People v. Richards, 99 N. Y. 620. And see People v. Reilly, 38 Hun (N. Y.) 429; People v. Cornell, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 329.

In Wisconsin any person may examine the records; subject, however, to the payment of fees, when allowed, and to the reasonable supervision of the officer in charge. Hanson v. Eichstaedt, 69 Wis. 538.

Rule in Other States.—In other states the right of free access to the records is granted only to those interested therein; it is denied to persons satisfying idle curiosity or accumulating material for speculative purposes. Randolph v. State, 82 Ala. 527, 60 Am. Rep. 761. And see Brewer v. Watson, 71 Ala. 299, 46 Am. Rep. 318; Phelan v. State, 76 Ala. 49; Dean v. People, 7 Colo. 200; Buck v. Collins, 51 Ga. 391, 21 Am. Rep. 236; Cormack v. Wolcott, 37 Kan. 391; Boylan v. Warren, 39 Kan. 301; Belt v. Prince George County Abstract Co., 73 Md. 289.

In the case of In re Webster, 18 U. C. Q. B. 87, it is held that the registrar must make searches personally, but that he need not allow others to inspect the records. See also Ross v. McLay, 26 U. C. C. P. 190.

3. Duty of Officials under Statutes.—M'Caraher v. Com., 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 21; Ziegler v. Com., 12 Pa. St. 227; Philadelphia v. Anderson, 142 Pa. St. 357; Lusk v. Carlin, 5 Ill. 396. And see local statutes; for example, N. Y. Code Civ. Pro., § 961.

English Statutes.—The same duty devolves upon the registrar under the registry acts of Middlesex and Yorkshire in England. Taylor on Evidence (8th ed.), § 1645.

The English "Transfer of Land Act" (1862-1865) authorizes the registrar to examine titles registered thereunder, and to give certificates of title which are prima facie evidence of the matters therein contained. Taylor on Evidence (8th ed.), § 1644.

Distinction between Official's Duty to Search and the Furnishing of Abstracts.—The duty to search must be distinguished from the duty to make a complete abstract; and in case the official in charge of records undertakes the latter business, he is liable upon the same principles as any other abstract maker. National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195; Lusk v. Carlin, 5 Ill. 395; Mechanics' Bldg.

c. EFFECT OF OFFICIAL SEARCH.—Where a statute makes it the duty of an official in charge of records to furnish searches, he is liable upon his bond for omissions therein;¹ but this liability extends no further than to the person at whose requisition the search is prepared.²

3. Arrangement and Form.—a. GENERALLY.—The search being complete, the next duty of the abstractor is to go through the original documents or records shown thereon, abstracting their contents, making extracts, and preparing material to perfect the abstract and to give to it its final form and arrangement.

Caption and Index.—The completed document should have a caption showing the contents and method of arrangement, and, if lengthy and complicated, an index.

Order.—The ordinary arrangement is chronological.

Assoc. v. Whitacre, 92 Ind. 548; Smith v. Holmes, 54 Mich. 104; Mallory v. Ferguson, 50 Kan. 685.

Search must be Exhaustive.—Where the registrar certifies that the "above conveyances appear of record," he does not fulfil his duty of searching, and mandamus will lie to compel the issuance of a certificate as to all registries appearing of record. In re Registrar, 12 U. C. C. P. 225.

1. M'Caraher v. Com., 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 21; Ziegler v. Com., 12 Pa. St. 227; Philadelphia v. Anderson, 142 Pa. St. 357; Com. v. Harmer, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 90; Lusk v. Carlin, 5 Ill. 395. See also Mechanics' Bldg. Assoc. v. Whitacre, 92 Ind. 547; and infra, this article, Liability of Examiners of Titles.

Official's Liability for Search Made by Third Party.—Where an official undertakes to make a search for assessments, and hands to the person requiring such search a search made by a third person, receiving his regular fees therefor, he is liable. Morange v. Mix, 44 N. Y. 315.

Effect of Party's Knowledge of Omission from Certificate.—Where the person requiring the search has actual knowledge of a mortgage omitted from the registrar's certificate, he cannot claim against the registrar for payments made thereon after such notice. Brega v. Dickey, 16 Grant's Ch. (U. Can.) 494.

Estoppel by Search.—Where it is the duty of the receiver of taxes of a city to furnish, for a specified fee, certificates of all taxes which are liens on real estate, and he gives the purchaser of the land a certificate that there are no unpaid taxes for certain years, the receiver represents the city in so doing, although he is an elective officer; and the city is estopped from asserting a tax lien against the land arising during the period covered by such certificate, when the purchaser, in reliance upon such certificate, paid the purchase money to the vendor. Philadelphia v. Anderson, 142 Pa. St. 357.

Informalities in Search—Omission of Official Seal.—The official does not avoid liability by failing to affix his official seal to the search. Ziegler v. Com., 12 Pa. St. 227. It was held also in this case that it did not avail the officer that there was no proof of the payment of the fee required by law.

Must be Actual Loss.—Where there is no actual damage in consequence of the falsity, there is no cause of action. U. S. Wind Engine, etc., Co. v. Linville, 43 Kan. 455; Batty v. Fout, 54 Ind. 482.

Upon the principle that only the damages resulting from the direct consequences of an act can be recovered, it has been held in New York that where the loss was the consequence, not of an omission in the search, but of the failure to pay a judgment omitted, the clerk certifying the search is not liable. Kimball v. Connolly, 3 Keyes (N. Y.) 57, 33 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 247.

Mistake in Requisition.—An official is not liable where the order for the search gives incorrectly the name of the person against whom the search is to be made. Com. v. Owen, 2 W. N. C. (Pa.) 200.

Liability of Sureties Barred.—The liability of the sureties on official bonds is barred in accordance with the statute of limitations. Com. v. Harmer, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 90.

No Duty to Search.—This liability is not incurred where it is not the duty of the officials to make searches. Mallory v. Ferguson, 50 Kan. 685.

But an Intentional False Certificate in such cases is misconduct in office, warranting removal. State v. Leach, 60 Me. 58, 11 Am. Rep. 172.

2. Com. v. Harmer, 6 Phila. (Pa.) 90; Siewers v. Com., 87 Pa. St. 15; Houseman v. Girard Mut. Bldg., etc., Assoc., 81 Pa. St. 256; Mallory v. Ferguson, 50 Kan. 685. See also infra, this article, Liability of Examiners of Titles.

If the Official Republishes and Reaffirms a search certified to A, at the request of and for B, such reaffirmance will bind the official and make him liable in damages for omissions resulting in damage to B. Siewers v. Com., 87 Pa. St. 15. And where A seeks to borrow money on mortgage from B, and B's conveyancer requests A to get, and pay for, an official search, which fails to return prior mortgages given by A, this does not prevent the official's liability to B. Houseman v. Girard Mut. Bldg., etc., Assoc., 81 Pa. St. 25; Peabody Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Houseman, 89 Pa. St. 261, 33 Am. Rep. 757. And see Dickle v. Nashville Abstract Co., 89 Tenn. 431, 24 Am. St. Rep. 616. But compare National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195.

Plats and Sketches.—Plats and sketches should be inserted whenever they will assist to a more complete understanding of the situation of the property.

Official Searches.—If there are official searches, they should be attached to the abstract and made a part thereof.

The Transaction Complete.—When the transaction has been completed and the deed to the purchaser recorded, these searches should be handed to the proper official, and a continuation entered upon them showing the purchaser's deed and also showing that there are no other conveyances or incumbrances of record since the beginning of the transaction.

b. ABSTRACTING DOCUMENTS—(1) Conveyances in General.—An abstract ought to set out every part of the documents abstracted which may affect the title in any way.¹

Particulars of the Documents which the Abstract should Set Forth.—It therefore should set forth the general character and date of the instrument, the parties, the recitals, the consideration, the granting clause, the description of the property conveyed, the habendum and reddendum, with any limitations or conditions, warranties or covenants, especially those peculiar to the instrument, the acknowledgment or proof, the record or registration, with dates, and the volume and page of the record.² Each of these particulars, or any other which appears, should be scrutinized carefully with regard to its effect upon the estate conveyed under the laws in force.

Necessary Grantors and their Power to Convey.—Thus it should be noted whether all necessary grantors joined, and had power to convey.³

Execution; Acknowledgment; Extinction of Dower and Curtesy.—Also, whether the execution and acknowledgment are in conformity with law; and whether possible estates by dower and curtesy have been extinguished.⁴

Trusts and Powers.—And further, whether trusts and powers, if any, are valid; their effect, and whether they have been exercised, released, or extinguished.⁵

What Parts Quoted and what Abstracted Merely.—Judgment and experience must decide how far it is necessary to set forth the various particulars in ipsius verbis; but in general it may be said that the description of the property, the limitations or conditions attached to the estate, and any covenants beyond those common to all deeds should be quoted at large, while provisions merely formal should be abstracted.

(2) Wills.—The remarks as to conveyances in general apply, in a large measure, to wills. The capacity of the testator to make a will is first to be considered; and the execution, attestation, probate, and registration in conformity with the statute are of the utmost importance. Particular care should be taken to examine powers and trust estates conferred, and, as wills are construed liberally to carry out the intention of the testator as gathered from the whole instrument, it is best to set forth all important parts of the document verbatim.⁶

(3) Judicial Sales.—Judicial sales are sales made by order of a court, as distinguished from sales made by execution on a writ. The foreclosure

1. An abstract of title should set out every part of the documents abstracted which may affect the judgment of the purchaser; and the purchaser is entitled to consider that any part which is not set out in the abstract has no bearing upon the title. Burnaby v. Equitable, etc., Soc., 54 L. J. Ch. 466, 52 L. T., N. S. 350. The second point here decided would certainly not be held good under the system of registered titles prevailing in the United States.

2. See the article REAL PROPERTY, for various kinds of conveyances by which title is transferred. See the articles LEASE; MORT-

GAGE, etc. For the analysis and offices of the various parts of a deed, see the article DEEDS; also the articles ACKNOWLEDGMENTS; BOUNDARIES; DATE; REAL COVENANTS; RECITALS; RECORDING ACTS; SEALS. For the effect of alterations, erasures, etc., see the article ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS; and for the effect of various defects, see the article MISTAKE.

3. See the article GRANTOR AND GRANTEE. As to misnomer, see the article NAME.

4. See the articles ACKNOWLEDGMENTS; DOWER; CURTESY.

5. See the articles TRUSTS; POWERS.

6. See generally the article WILLS.

of mortgages, judgments in partition, and decrees in probate proceedings are examples of judicial sales. The points to be observed particularly in abstracting in this connection are, the jurisdiction of the court in general of the subject matter and of the person (careful attention should be given to this point in probate proceedings);¹ whether all necessary parties were joined and duly served with process, or duly appeared; the bill, complaint, or petition (whether it states a cause of action which would be good on general demurrer); the judgment, order, or decree; the sale (whether all formalities were complied with); the report of the sale; confirmation of the sale; and the deed.²

(4) Execution Sales.—In regard to execution sales the following should be particularly observed: the judgment (attachment, if any); the execution; claims of exemption; inquisition or appraisal (if required by the act); notice of sale; sale; redemption; confirmation; the deed.³

(5) Tax Sales.—Tax titles are looked upon always with suspicion, and should be investigated carefully. The slightest flaw in the proceedings will invalidate them. The points to be observed chiefly are, the validity of the assessment; the levy; special assessments (sidewalks, paving, etc.); the collector's warrant; return of delinquent list; judgment and proceedings; notice of sale; the sale; the transfer or deed (as the statute may require). The records must be searched for some time after the transfer, to see if the conveyance has been impeached.⁴

(6) Liens and Incumbrances.—Matters of this kind are largely controlled by local laws. In general, the purchaser must guard against: liens in favor of the United States; debts due the state; official bonds; taxes; special assessments; judgments and executions; recognizances; attachments; lis pendens; mechanics' liens; vendors' liens; trustees' expenses; mortgages and deeds of trust; leases; dower and curtesy; easements; and the like.⁵

It is apparent that in cases of many of these liens the abstractor's work is complete when a careful search has been made, and no abstracting is necessary. The periods which such searches must cover depend upon the local statutes. When it appears that any lien or incumbrance has attached, the abstractor must follow up all the records and other available sources of information to ascertain whether it has been extinguished, or still burdens the property.

(7) Miscellaneous.—Matters the knowledge of which arises from investigations conducted in pais, should be set forth by reference to the actual evidence of the facts, and in the last resort by properly framed affidavits.⁶

VIII. ABSTRACTS AS EVIDENCE.—1. Of Lost Deeds.—Where deeds have been lost, abstracts made therefrom have been admitted as secondary evidence to prove their execution and contents.⁷

1. Wherever there is a sale by the court, it is a necessary part of the title to show that the court has jurisdiction to sell; and the vendor, though he may by his conditions protect himself from producing the pleadings themselves, must set forth in his abstract so much of the proceedings in the suit as is necessary to show that the court had such jurisdiction. Waters v. Waters, 36 L. J. Ch. 195, 15 W. R. 191, 15 L. T., N. S. 406.

2. See the article JUDICIAL SALES.

3. See the article EXECUTION.

4. See the articles TAXATION; TAX TITLES.

5. See the article INCUMBRANCES, and the various kinds of incumbrances specifically.

6 Such Affidavits are not Admissible as Evidence.—Manny v. Stockton, 34 Ill. 306; Quinn v. Rawson, 5 Ill. App. 130.

Usage.—But in default of other evidence usage sanctions their employment. Whenever used, care should be taken that they are prepared with all due formalities. See the article AFFIDAVITS.

In a case under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, Ontario (Can.) Rev. Stat., c. 109, § 3, where the title depended upon possession evidenced by declarations, the vendor was directed to obtain affidavits from the declarants, giving the vendee an opportunity to cross-examine; and it was held that the vendee, if not satisfied with that, was entitled, though he might be thought unreasonable, to have the evidence taken viva voce, and to have his title sanctioned by decree, for which purpose leave was given him to institute a suit for specific performance, the costs of which were reserved. In re Boustead, 12 Ont. Rep. 488.

7. Moulton v. Edmonds, 1 De G., F. & J. 246.

2. Miscellaneous—Tax Sales.—Abstracts properly verified have been held admissible in ex parte proceedings to cancel a tax sale.¹

IX. LIABILITY OF EXAMINERS OF TITLES—1. General Rule as to Degree of Care and Skill.—Whenever a person undertakes for hire the performance of a duty demanding skill as well as care, he is understood to have engaged to use a degree of diligence and skill adequate to the due performance of his undertaking;² and one who undertakes the examination of titles is liable for want of ordinary care or skill in the performance of the task.³

2. When Enforced.—If the abstractor fails to make necessary searches,⁴ or searches without due care,⁵ or takes the advice of counsel on a case care-

In general, the abstract is not admissible as evidence of title, but it may be introduced to show whether the abstract as furnished did or did not come up to the requirements in the agreement relating thereto. Kane v. Rippey, 22 Oregon 296. See also Reed v. Ranks, 10 U. C. C. P. 202.

Illinois.—After the great fire of Chicago the state of Illinois found it necessary to allow proof of lost or destroyed deeds by abstracts of title made in the course of business. 2 Starr & Curt. Ann. Stat. Ill. 2002 (amended by Illinois Laws of 1887, p. 261). And see Richley v. Farrell, 69 Ill. 264; Russell v. Mandell, 73 Ill. 136; Miller v. Shaw, 103 Ill. 277; Heinsen v. Lamb, 117 Ill. 549; Converse v. Wead, 142 Ill. 132.

1. New York.—Upon an application to the comptroller of taxes to cancel a tax sale, certified searches of title, verified by affidavit, may be received and acted upon as evidence of the original ownership of land sold for taxes. People v. Wemple, 67 Hun (N. Y.) 495.

Texas—In Trespass to Try Title.—By statute in Texas, in an action of trespass to try title to land, either party after issue joined may demand an abstract of his title from the other. The practice is something like that relating to bills of particulars. 2 Sayles Texas Civ. Stat., § 4796 et seq.

When such abstract has been filed, the party who filed it cannot attack the chain of title between the common source and the sovereignty. Evans v. Foster, 79 Tex. 48; nor can he exclude from evidence, for want of proof of execution, a deed which his abstract, as filed, shows is a link in his own title, Wichita Land, etc., Co. v. Ward, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 307.

2. Story on Bailments (9th ed.), § 431.

This is the true meaning of the doctrine of ordinary care and skill as applied to such a case. See Bigelow on Torts (4th ed.) 296, 298. See also the articles ATTORNEY AND CLIENT; BAILMENTS; NEGLIGENCE.

3. Degree of Care and Skill Required.—Chase v. Heaney, 70 Ill. 268; Dodd v. Williams, 3 Mo. App. 278; Rankin v. Schaeffer, 4 Mo. App. 108; National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195; Lattin v. Gillette, 95 Cal. 317. See also supra, this article, Effect of Official Search.

Where the Employer Himself Makes Inquiries as to certain incumbrances, and leads his attorney to believe that he is satisfied as to them, it is not negligence in the attorney to omit further inquiries on the subject. Waine v. Kempster, 1 F. & F. 695.

Error of Judgment.—The examiner is not liable for a mere error of judgment. Chapman v. Chapman, L. R. 9 Eq. 276; Dodd v. Williams, 3 Mo. App. 278; Watson v. Muirhead, 57 Pa. St. 161.

The Examiner is not an Insurer or Guarantor. Rankin v. Schaeffer, 4 Mo. App. 108; Dundee, etc., Invest. Co. v. Hughes, 20 Fed. Rep. 39.

But in Page v. Trutch (U. S. C. C.), 3 Cent. L. J. 559, it is held that when an attorney certifies that a security is a good one, he warrants that the title is good, and that it is free from palpable and grave doubt or serious question.

Contract, not Tort.—The liability of the examiner is for breach of contract, and not in tort. Russell v. Polk County Abstract Co., 87 Iowa 233; Lattin v. Gillette, 95 Cal. 317.

Liability Survives.—The liability of a deceased attorney for negligence in investigating a title survives against his personal representatives. Knights v. Quarles, 4 Moore 532, 2 B. & B. 102; Allen v. Clark, 7 L. T., N. S. 781, 11 W. R. 304.

Unlawful Detention of Abstracts.—If the attorney employed to examine a title unlawfully detains his employer's abstracts of title and searches, he is liable for conversion; and the measure of damages is the cost of procuring other similar searches. Watson v. Cowdrey, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 169.

Trust Relation.—The relation of an abstract maker and his employer is, in its sacredness and confidential character, second only to that existing between attorney and client, and any abuse of the trust imposed will be emphatically rebuked. Vallette v. Tedens, 122 Ill. 607, 3 Am. St. Rep. 502. In this case it was held that where an abstract maker abuses and violates his trust and uses the information obtained in his confidential relations to acquire title in his own name, he will, in equity, be considered to hold such title in trust for his principal.

4. Failure to Make Necessary Searches.—Cooper v. Stephenson, 16 Jur. 424, 24 L. J. Q. B. 292.

5. Want of Due Care.—Wakefield v. Chowen, 26 Minn. 379; Wacek v. Frink, 51 Minn. 282; Gilman v. Hovey, 26 Mo. 282; Clark v. Marshall, 34 Mo. 429; Smith v. Holmes, 54 Mich. 104; Chase v. Heaney, 70 Ill. 268.

Mistake as to Quantity of Land Conveyed.—Where the abstractor states incorrectly the quantity of land previously conveyed, he lessly and defectively stated,¹ he is liable for resulting loss.²

Duty of Employer.—But it is the duty of the employer, on discovering the defect in the abstract, to take proper measures to avert the loss; and if he fails to do so he cannot hold the examiner liable.³

Actual Damage Necessary.—It is necessary to prove actual damage,⁴ and to show that the loss resulted from the defect wherewith the examiner is charged.⁵

3. Who may Enforce.—The general doctrine is that the liability extends only to the person for whom the abstract is made;⁶ but there are well-considered cases holding that where a person makes an abstract for one party to a transaction, which he knows will be used, and which in fact is used, to influence the action of the other party thereto, he is liable to such other party.⁷

ABSURDITY.—Within the rule of construction that the legislature will not be presumed to have intended an absurdity, by an absurdity is meant not only that which is physically impossible, but also that which is morally so; and that is to be regarded as morally impossible which is contrary to reason, or, in other words, which could not be attributed to a man in his right senses.⁸

ABUSE AND MISUSE.—Abuse, in strictness, signifies to injure, diminish in value, or wear away by using improperly.

Abuse or misuse of corporate privileges is any positive act in violation of the charter and in derogation of public right, wilfully done or caused to be done by those appointed to manage the general concerns of the corporation.⁹

will be liable to respond in damages to the employer. Clark v. Marshall, 34 Mo. 429.

Relying on Marginal Entries.—If the abstractor relies on the registrar's marginal entry that a mortgage has been satisfied, and does not examine the original record, he is liable in damages to his employer. Wacek v. Frink, 51 Minn. 282.

Relying on Extracts.—Nor can he rely on extracts made from a will, without examining the original document. Wilson v. Tucker, 3 Stark 154.

Agreement for Abstract to Cover Certain Period Only.—Where the abstractor engages to make an abstract from a certain date only, he is under no duty to inquire into the existence of judgments or conveyances recorded prior to that time. Wakefield v. Chowen, 26 Minn. 379.

1. Ireson v. Pearman, 3 B. & C. 799. And see generally the article ADVICE OF COUNSEL.

2. Measure of Damages.—The measure of damages is the employer's actual loss as measured by the amount which he has had to pay to get the title, Allen v. Clark, 7 L. T., N. S. 781; or the amount which it has cost to remove incumbrances. See Dodd v. Williams, 3 Mo. App. 281; Morange v. Mix, 44 N. Y. 315.

3. The Employer, after Discovering an Error in the abstract, must use ordinary diligence to avert a loss and to inform the abstractor of such error, in order that the latter may take measures to avert the consequences of the mischief; and if, through failure to use these precautions, a loss occurs, the employer cannot recover. Roberts v. Leon Loan, etc., Co., 63 Iowa 76.

4. U. S. Wind Engine, etc., Co. v. Linville, 43 Kan. 455; Batty v. Fout, 54 Ind. 482.

5. Kimball v. Connolly, 3 Keyes (N. Y.) 57, 33 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 247.

Statute of Limitations.—The statute of limitations begins to run from the time the abstract is furnished, not from the time when the damage occurs. Russell v. Polk County Abstract Co., 87 Iowa 233; Lattin v. Gillette, 95 Cal. 317; Rankin v. Schaeffer, 4 Mo. App. 108.

6. National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195; Dundee Mortgage, etc., Co. v. Hughes, 20 Fed. Rep. 39; Page v. Trutch (U. S. C. C.), 3 Cent. L. J. 559; Dickle v. Nashville Abstract Co., 89 Tenn. 431, 24 Am. St. Rep. 616; Mallory v. Ferguson, 50 Kan. 685. And see Donaldson v. Haldane, 7 Cl. & F. 760. Also supra, this article, Effect of Official Search.

Abstractor Employed by One Person and Paid by Another.—If the investigator is employed by one party, it does not affect his liability that the expense of the examination is paid by another. Page v. Trutch (U. S. C. C.), 3 Cent. L. J. 559.

7. Where A refused to purchase a tract of land from B unless furnished with an abstract of title, and B thereupon procured an abstract from an abstract company, and the company warranted it to be a true and perfect abstract, the company is liable to A, who, relying on the abstract and guaranty, has purchased the property and sustained loss through the omission of a conveyance therein. Dickle v. Nashville Abstract Co., 89 Tenn. 431, 24 Am. St. Rep. 616. See also Houseman v. Girard Mut. Bldg., etc., Assoc., 81 Pa. St. 256; Peabody Bldg., etc., Assoc. v. Houseman, 89 Pa. St. 261, 33 Am. Rep. 757. But compare National Sav. Bank v. Ward, 100 U. S. 195, where the liability in a similar case is limited strictly to the employer. (Waite, C.J., Swayne and Bradley, JJ., dissented.)

9. Baltimore v. Pittsburgh, etc., R. Co., 3 Pittsbg. (Pa.) 20; Erie, etc., R. Co. v. Casey, 26 Pa. St. 319. See also the titles CORPORATIONS (PRIVATE); ULTRA VIRES.

A malicious abuse of legal process is where the party employs it for some unlawful object, not the purpose which it is intended by the law to effect.¹

ABUT—ABUTTER. (See also ADJOINING and the title ABUTTING OWNERS.)—Premises abut upon a street, road, or other premises where no other street, road, or land intervenes.²

1. Mayer v. Walter, 64 Pa. St. 283. See also the titles PUBLIC OFFICERS; SERVICE OF PROCESS; SHERIFF.

Abuse of Discretion.—Upon the meaning of the term "abuse of discretion," as a ground for the ordering of a new trial, the court, in Murray v. Buell, 74 Wis. 19, says: "The term 'abuse of discretion' exercised in any case by the trial court, as used in the decisions of courts and in the books, implying, in common parlance, a bad motive or wrong purpose, is not the most appropriate. It is really a discretion exercised to an end or purpose not justified by, and clearly against, reason and evidence."

"The discretion of the court below is a legal discretion, to be reasonably exercised. Abuse of discretion in making such orders does not necessarily imply a wilful abuse or intentional wrong. In a legal sense discretion is abused whenever, in its exercise, a court exceeds the bounds of reason, all the circumstances before it being considered." Sharon v. Sharon, 75 Cal. 1.

Abuse of discretion, and especially gross and palpable abuse of discretion, which are the terms ordinarily employed to justify an interference with the exercise of discretionary power, implies not merely error of judgment, but perversity of will, passion, prejudice, partiality, or moral delinquency. The exercise of an honest judgment, however erroneous it may appear to be, is not an abuse of discretion. People v. New York Cent. R. Co., 29 N. Y. 431.

Abuse a Woman or Child. (See the title RAPE.)—The word abuse, applied to a woman, is never used except with reference to sexual intercourse. The expression abusing, in an indictment, implies assaulting and something more. A rule for a habeas corpus directed to two justices before whom the prisoner had been tried for unlawfully assaulting and abusing a woman was discharged, two judges holding that the justices had jurisdiction, no charge of rape having been made, and the other two holding that, as there was evidence of rape, the word abuse in the information sufficiently covered the case to take it out of the jurisdiction. In re Thompson, 6 H. & N. 193.

The word as used in a statute punishing carnal knowledge or abuse of children applies only to injuries to the genital organs, and does not include ill usage. Dawkins v. State, 58 Ala. 376, 29 Am. Rep. 754.

Abuse, as used in the Nebraska Criminal Code, was held equivalent to ravish. The court said: "Webster defines the verb abuse thus: 'to violate; to ravish;' and the noun abuse the same authority defines as 'violation; rape; as abuse of a female child.'" Palin v. State, 38 Neb. 867.

The terms "carnally knowing" and "abus- ing unlawfully" do not contemplate actual force or the absence of the will, but that, although no force be used, and the female yield her consent, yet, she being under the age of puberty, she is incapable of consenting. Charles v. State, 11 Ark. 407.

2. Holt v. City Council, 127 Mass. 408.

Declaration in trespass as to an acre of land with the abuttals. Verdict, Guilty as to one half. It was held that the plaintiff had not failed in his abuttals. Winckworth v. Mayo, Cro. Jac. 184.

"Doubtless it is true that the words 'bounding' and abutting have no such inflexible meaning as to require the lots assessed or injured to touch the improvement, though the usual meaning of the words is that the things spoken of do actually adjoin. Without entering very much into the origin of the word abutting, it is sufficient to say that, according to Latham, it does not imply that the things spoken of are 'necessarily in contact;' and to the same effect see Webster, Worcester, and Murray. In ascertaining the meaning of such word, of course, regard must be had to the intent of the law-maker, though it will be seen that the usual meaning conveyed is that the things spoken of touch or come together. Holt v. Somerville, 127 Mass. 408; Wakefield Urban Sanitary Authority v. Mander, 5 C. P. Div. 248." Cohen v. Cleveland, 43 Ohio St. 196. And in that case it was held that the plaintiff was not an abutting owner upon a structure forty-five feet above the street.

Front and Side of Lot.—"We know that in a narrow and restricted sense the term abutting is used in reference to that which touches a lot at the end and 'adjoining' to that which is on the side (1 Bouvier's Law Dict., Abuttals); but we do not think the term is used in this statute in such restricted sense, but rather includes everything which touches the lot, whether in front or on the sides." Lawrence v. Killam, 11 Kan. 511.

Rear of Lot.—Under a statute providing for assessment of owners of premises for the purpose of paving footways, etc., upon which said premises were fronting, adjoining, or abutting, said owners are only responsible for the footways on which their respective premises abutted; the north side, for instance, not being responsible for the footways on the south. Wakefield Urban Sanitary Authority v. Mander, 5 C. P. Div. 248. See, generally, the title SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS.

Adjoining Lot not Abutting on the Street.—Commissioners appointed to assess the cost of improving a street upon the lots abutting on the same are not authorized to extend their assessment of such a lot upon an adjoining lot of the same owner which is not bounded by the street. Such party's assessment should be confined to his lot which borders upon the street to be improved. Springfield v. Green, 120 Ill. 270.

Stream Intervening.—Where a small stream intervened between a lane and a lot of land, it was held by one judge that the premises adjoined but did not abut the lane, and by another that they were abutting. Wakefield Board of Health v. Lee, 1 Exch. Div. 336.

Railroad Intervening.—A lot cannot be said to front on a public road when a railroad, the bed of which is owned by the company, runs between the lot and the road. Philadelphia v. Eastwick, 35 Pa. St. 75.

County Road Intervening.—An estate opposite a park, separated from it by a county road, is not an abutting estate. Holt v. Somerville, 127 Mass. 408.

"Abutting lot" denotes a lot bounded on the side of a public street, in the bed or soil of which the owner of the lot has no title, estate, interest, or private rights except such as are incident to a lot so situated. Hughes v. Metropolitan El. R. Co., 130 N. Y. 26; Abendroth v. Manhattan R. Co., 122 N. Y. 1.

1. Bardwell v. Jamaica, 15 Vt. 438. In speaking of a bridge in connection with the use for which bridges are erected, we can no more exclude the abutment than the flooring or framework of the bridge. Where a declaration alleged an injury to have been caused by the defects in a bridge, and it was shown that the defects were in the abutment, there was not such a variance as to be ground for reversing the judgment.

The abutment is as much a part of the bridge as the pier, the arches, or the timbers. It consists of that mass of stone or solid work at the end of the bridge by which the extreme arches or timbers are sustained. But the word abutment is sometimes used to designate that which unites one end of a thing to another (see Webster's Dict.); and in that sense it must have been used in the state of the case, for it was admitted upon the argument that the horse fell from that part of the way which connects the abutment (proper) of the bridge with the land, ordinarily called the filling up. Sussex County v. Strader, 18 N. J. L. 112.

I. DEFINITION—In Broadest Sense.—The phrase “abutting owners” in its widest and largest meaning may be said to comprehend every holder in fee of real property. For, since all tracts of land “abut” upon or adjoin¹ others, every landowner becomes in this literal sense an “abutting owner.”

In Ordinary Legal Sense.—In its ordinary legal usage, however, the term has a much more limited signification. By what appears to be a growing² accepta-

1. The words “abut” and “adjoin” are used interchangeably. See Century Dictionary, ad verbum. See also ABUT; ABUTTER.

2. Note, for instance, the following original definition by Follett, C.J., in Abendroth v. Manhattan R. Co., 122 N. Y. 1, 19 Am. St. Rep. 461: “The term ‘abutting owner’ will be used in this judgment to denote a person having land bounded on the side of a public street and having no title or estate in its bed or soil, and no interests or private rights in the street except such as are incident to lots so situated.” This, it will be observed, limits the term even more narrowly than the definition adopted in the text, for a street is but one tion, an "abutting owner" is one who owns real property bordering on a public highway; and the law of the subject is chiefly concerned with the rights and duties of such owner in connection with the highway.¹ It is with this more restricted meaning that the phrase has been adopted as the title of this treatise, and in this sense it will be used in the following pages.

II. SCOPE OF ARTICLE.—A complete and exhaustive treatise on the law of "abutting owners" would embrace a very considerable proportion of the whole body of the law.² And such a discussion of the subject would be out of place here, because, if for no other reason, each of these related subjects has a well-recognized place in legal classification by itself, where discussions of it would naturally be sought.

It is desirable, however, that there may be found in some one place a composite presentation of general principles applicable to a subject of such great importance, yet which is almost never treated as a unit, but scattered through discussions of many other subjects. Moreover, there are some phases of the law of abutting owners which, partly by reason of this very submergence in other topics, and partly because they are less familiar, and until lately have been less extensively litigated, are seldom adequately treated at all. Such, for example, is the law of abutters upon rural roads.

This article aims to meet the purposes just indicated. It will endeavor to state the general principles of the law of abutting owners and to present the details of such divisions of the subject as are less known and most commonly neglected, with cross-references to those more familiar titles where the remaining portions will be treated in detail.

III. RIGHTS OF ABUTTERS—1. Use and Enjoyment of Property in Respect to the Street—a. EASEMENT OF ACCESS—(1) In General.—The owner of property abutting on a public highway is entitled, as one of the primary incidents of his ownership, to the right of free ingress and egress.³ This right exists whether the abutter owns the fee to the centre of the street, leaving the public with merely an easement of passage, or whether the title to the entire highway is vested in the latter.⁴

species of highway, and the language just quoted would, if taken literally, exclude from the category of abutters, landowners along country roads.

1. By this is meant, of course, highways on land. For a discussion of the law of "riparian owners," or those whose property abuts on water, see the title NAVIGABLE WATERS.

2. See the list of cross-references at the beginning of this article.

3. Right of Access Absolute.—See Brakken v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 29 Minn. 41, 7 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 593, where the court says: "It may not be very important to the general public whether they shall be able to get to the private property of an individual, but it is important to the individual whether he should be able to get to and from his residence or business, and whether the public have the means of getting there for social or business purposes. If there be an obstruction in the street in front of or near his abutting property, so as to prevent access to it, the damage which he sustains is different, not merely in degree, but in kind, from that experienced in common with other citizens; and he may maintain a private action for the special injury to him, notwithstanding there is also a remedy in behalf of the public. In most of the cases which have arisen the obstruction in the street was immediately in front of the lot of the party complaining of it; but the reason of the rule, and therefore the rule itself, extends to the case of any obstruction which cuts off all means of public access to the plaintiff's lot. *Wilder v. of which the owner may not be deprived without due compensation,¹ and it is a right which he may have enforced by the writ of injunction.²

Interference with Right—Obstructions.—Accordingly, the owner of a hackney coach cannot acquire the right to station it in front of abutting premises in such a way as to interfere with access thereto, even though a city ordinance purport to confer such right.³ So the abutting owner may, by injunction, prevent a street-railway company from heaping up snow between its tracks and his premises, and leaving it there for a period longer than is reasonably necessary, and thus interfering with ingress and egress.⁴ An exhibition of a public show in a store window attracting and detaining a crowd of people on the opposite sidewalk, thus impeding access to a store fronting thereon, will be enjoined for similar reasons.⁵

In New Jersey, where the title of abutting owners extends ad medium filum via, the legislature has no power to appropriate the streets for use as a public market without compensation to such abutting owners.⁶

Where bridges and viaducts interfere with an abutting owner's access to his premises he may be entitled to damages, even though they were constructed under color of public authority,⁷ or by a county.⁸

But in Florida it is held that the construction of a viaduct by a municipal corporation conjointly with a private corporation, the result of which is not only to cut off free access, but also to abridge the enjoyment of light and air on the part of abutting owners, is not a "taking" or "appropriation" of private property within the constitutional guaranty.⁹ Abutting owners are entitled to damages for deprivation of their right of access by reason of the construction by a city of a drainage canal.¹⁰

Here the court said: "The right of access to the street for business purposes is of great value. The finding of the court is that this is destroyed. This easement appendant to the abutting property is a valuable property right of which the owner cannot be divested except when taken for public use and after due compensation. The city is clothed with power over the streets and is charged with the duty of keeping them open for public use and free from nuisance. It may enlarge these general public uses without infringing the rights of the adjacent owner; but where additional burdens are imposed, even for a public purpose, which materially impair the incidental property right of the lot owner, equity will enjoin until compensation is made." See, to the same effect, McCaffrey v. Smith, 41 Hun (N. Y.) 117. And compare Cohen v. New York, 113 N. Y. 532; Turner v. Holtzman, 54 Md. 148, 39 Am. Rep. 361; Benjamin v. Storr, L. R. 9 C. P. 400; Lippincott v. Lasher, 44 N. J. Eq. 120; *Rex v. In this case, however, the court assumed, for want of sufficient averments to the contrary, that the bridge was built on a private street, and expressly left undecided the question as to whether the destruction of the easement of access from a public road by the erection of a bridge would be "a taking of private property."

(2) Access Obstructed by Semi-public Improvements.—Questions involving the exercise of the abutting owner's right of access from the public highway to his property have most frequently arisen where access has been obstructed or impeded by structures in the street constituting part of the plants of certain semi-public improvements, such as steam railroads, street railways, and the poles and wires of telegraph and telephone companies. It is not in accordance with the plan of this article to set forth all of these subjects in detail, but simply to state the general principles, leaving the more extended discussion to subsequent articles where they will be oftenest sought.¹

General Rule as to Compensation.—In regard to all these enterprises, while it is conceded that the proper authority may grant them the use of the streets, yet when such use effects a perversion of the street from its ordinary and proper purposes, and constitutes an infringement upon the abutting owner's right of access, he is entitled to compensation. Recognizing the usefulness and even necessity of this class of public improvements, the courts have not treated their promoters as trespassers, but the question in regard to each class of enterprises is whether or not it constitutes such a new and additional burden upon abutting owners as will entitle them to damages.

Steam Railroads.—In the case of steam railroads the prevailing rule is that their operation on a public highway in so far as they interfere with the abutting owner's right of access does constitute such a new and additional burden as will require the operators to respond in damages to the injured abutter.²

mal,¹ or (probably) steam² power, have not been generally treated by the courts as constituting additional burdens upon the highway so as to entitle the abutting owner to damages.³

Telegraph and Telephone Poles and Wires.—Poles and wires of telegraph and telephone companies have also been held by some of the courts to constitute a new and additional burden, and to so infringe upon the rights of abutting owners as to require compensation,⁴ but the contrary rule prevails in some jurisdictions.⁵

Pipe Lines.—In reference to the laying of pipes along urban streets, the rule seems to prevail that abutting owners are not entitled to damages, and that such a use of the highway is not an additional burden;⁶ but the contrary doctrine obtains where a rural road is sought to be used for such a purpose.⁷

b. ENJOYMENT OF LIGHT AND AIR.—Another of the primary rights of abutting owners in respect of the public highways is that of enjoying the free influx of light and air.⁸

8. Light and Air.—In Lahr v. Metropolitan El. R. Co., 104 N. Y. 291, Ruger, C.J., said: "An abutting owner necessarily enjoys certain advantages from the existence of an open street adjoining his property, which belong to him by reason of its location, and are not enjoyed by the general public, such as the right of free access to his premises, and the free admission and circulation of light and air to and through his property. These rights are not only valuable to him for sanitary purposes, but are indispensable to the proper and beneficial enjoyment of his property, and are legitimate subjects of estimate by the public authorities in raising the fund necessary to defray the cost of constructing the street. He is therefore compelled to pay for them at their full value, and if in the next instant they may by legislative authority be taken away and diverted to inconsistent uses, a system has been inaugurated which resembles more nearly legal-

In New York.—This right has most often in recent years become the subject of litigation as a result of the construction of elevated railroads, and in the state of New York, where such enterprises are most common, the doctrine obtains that in so far as these structures impede the free passage of light and air between the street and abutting premises, they are encroachments upon this right of the abutter for which he must be compensated.¹

In Minnesota.—In Minnesota the same doctrine has been extended to ordinary steam railroads where they infringe upon the abutter's easement of light and air.²

c. PRESERVATION OF PROPERTY—(1) In General—Theory of Exercise of Right of Eminent Domain.—One of the fundamental incidents of ownership is, of course, the right of preserving property intact. The owner is entitled to protect his land and buildings against all others, not excepting the government itself; for the taking or damaging of private property in the exercise of the original or delegated right of eminent domain is permitted only upon the theory that the property is restored in another form and the owner thus made whole.³

Lateral and Subjacent Support.—A part of this larger incident of ownership is the right to the support of the adjoining land and of the soil beneath, or, as it is commonly termed, the right of lateral and subjacent support. Every owner of real estate is entitled to have the soil preserved and supported in its natural condition, and the privileges of adjoining owners are so far limited that they may not so excavate or otherwise change the position of their land as to leave that of their neighbor less firmly supported,⁴ and public authorities in opening,

4. Lateral Support of Land.—The rule is briefly stated by Mitchell, J., in the recent case of Schultz v. Bower (Minn., 1894), 59 N. W. Rep. 631, as follows: "The right of lateral support from the adjacent soil is an absolute right of property; and, as a consequence of this principle, it follows that for any injury to his soil resulting from the removal of the natural support to which it is entitled, by means of excavation on an adjoining tract, the owner has a legal remedy against the party by whom the mischief has been done. This does not depend upon negligence, but upon the violation of the right of property."

The doctrine is set forth by numerous authorities:

England.—Dalton v. Angus, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 740; Partridge v. Scott, 3 M. & W. 220; Wyatt v. Harrison, 3 B. & Ald. 871, 23 E. C. L. 205; Harris v. Ryding, 5 M. & W. 60; Smart v. Morton, 5 El. & Bl. 30, 85 E. C. L. 30, 30 Eng. L. & Eq. 385.

widening, or grading streets must compensate the abutting owner for any interference with this easement of support.¹

Rule as to Acquired Easement of Support.—The rule is less strict in reference to structures and extra burdens upon lands, because there the easement of support is an acquired and not a natural one, and the adjoining owner is usually liable for endangering their support when he fails to give notice of the proposed excavation, or carries it on in a negligent and unskilful manner.²

(2) Compensation for Indirect Impairment in Value by Public Improvements.

—For the actual appropriation of private property for public use, there is a legal guaranty of compensation to the owner, as old as Magna Charta.¹

Deprivation of Possession.—Hence, wherever the extension of public improvements deprives the abutting owner of the possession of his property, there is no question of his right to be compensated.²

Impairment of Usefulness and Value.—But where, as has often been the case in recent years, public improvements in the street do not require the abutter's property to be literally taken, but do result in impairing its usefulness to him and depreciating its market value, a different question is presented, and the landowner's interests are less fully protected.

Common-law Rule.—At common law the owners of property abutting upon city streets were not generally entitled to damages for consequential injuries by reason of public improvements like grading, or changing the grade of streets, or constructing drains and sewers and water mains.³ If, however, the

2. See the title EMINENT DOMAIN.

3. No Common-law Right to Compensation.—One of the early and leading cases is Callender v. Marsh, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 417, where Parker, C.J., discussing the right of the public authorities to alter the grades of a street without compensation to the abutter, says: "The streets on which plaintiff's house stands had become public property by the act of laying them out conformably to law, and the value of the land taken must have been either paid for, or given to the public, at the time, or the street could not have been legally established. Being legally established, although the right or title in the soil remained in him from whom the use was taken, yet the public acquired the right, not only to pass over the surface in the state it was in when first made a street, but the right also to repair and amend the street, and, for this purpose, to dig down and remove the soil sufficiently to make the passage safe and convenient. Those who purchase house lots bordering upon streets are supposed to calculate the chance of such elevations and reductions as the increasing population of a city may require, in order to render the passage to and from the several parts of it safe and convenient; and as their purchase is always voluntary, they may indemnify themselves in the price of the lot which they buy, or take the chance of future improvements, as they shall see fit. The standing laws of the land giving to surveyors the power to make these improvements, every one who purchases a lot upon the summit or on the decline of a hill is presumed to foresee the changes which public necessity or convenience may require, and may avoid or provide against a loss. * * * That it might be proper for the legislature, by some general act, to provide that losses of the kind complained of in this suit should be compensated by the town or city within which improvements may be made for the public good, or by the owners of land which may be particularly benefited, is not for us to deny; but without such legislative provision we have no authority upon the subject, it being clear that by the common law as well as by our statutes the defendant in this action is not liable to damages."

And Chief Justice Bronson, in Radcliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195, 53 Am. Dec. 357, observes: "The opening of a new thoroughfare may often result in advancing the interest of one man or a class of men, and even one town, at the expense of another. The construction of the Erie canal destroyed the business of hundreds of tavern-keepers and common carriers between Albany and Buffalo, and greatly depreciated the value of their property, and yet they got no compensation. And new villages sprang up on the line of the canal, at the expense of old ones on the former line of travel and transportation. Railroads destroy the business of stage proprietors, and yet no one has ever thought a railroad charter unconstitutional because it gave no damages to stage owners. The Hudson River railroad will soon drive many fine steamboats from the river; but no one will think the charter void because it does not provide for the payment of damages to the boat owners. A fort, jail, workshop, fever hospital, or lunatic asylum erected by the government may have the effect of reducing the value of a dwelling-house in the immediate neighborhood; and yet no provision for compensating the owner of the house has ever been made in such a case. Many other illustrations might be mentioned, but it cannot be necessary to enlarge. The opening of a street in a city is not necessarily an injury to the adjoining landowners. On the contrary, it is in almost every instance a benefit to them. The damage which they sometimes sustain because the level of the street does not correspond with the level of their land is usually more than compensated by the increased value which the property acquires from having a new front on a street. In some instances the landowner will suffer a heavy loss; and this case may, perhaps, be one of the number; but it is damnum absque injuria, and the owner must bear it. He often gets the benefit for nothing, when the value of his land is increased by opening or improving a street or highway; and he must bear the burden in the less common case of a depreciation in value in consequence of the work." The doctrine is confirmed by the following array of authorities:

A Different Doctrine has been announced in Ohio. In Cohen v. Cleveland, 43 Ohio St. 192, the court says: "Injuries resulting from the change of established grades in streets, though made in accordance with the statute, and without negligence or malice, and other injuries of a kindred character, have been held to afford ground for the recovery of damages against municipal corporations. Rhodes v. Cleveland, 10 Ohio 159, 36 Am. Dec. 82; McCombs v. Akron, 15 Ohio 479; sub nom. Akron v. McComb, 18 Ohio 229, 51 Am. Dec. 453; Crawford v. Delaware, 7 Ohio St. 459; *Youngstown v. manner, the abutting owner could demand compensation, even at common law.¹

Under Constitutions and Statutes.—And now by constitutions and statutes in most of the states, a remedy in the form of damages is provided for consequential injuries to abutting property from public improvements. The addition to the usual constitutional clause forbidding private property to be taken, of the words, "or damaged," is generally held sufficient to confer this remedy.²

43 Am. Rep. 146. This court has, however, constantly acknowledged that McCombs v. Akron, 15 Ohio 479, and cases following it, is a departure from the current of authority elsewhere; and, although these cases have not found favor with the judges delivering the opinions in Radcliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195, 53 Am. Dec. 357; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 378, 23 Am. Rep. 332; Alexander v. Milwaukee, 16 Wis. 256; Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, we are entirely content with the doctrine, and would not change it if we could. But the justice of the Ohio rule, the firmness with which it has been adhered to for nearly half a century, and the manner in which it is recognized and enforced in our statutes, have established the doctrine as a rule of property, and it is now too late to inquire whether McCombs v. Akron, 15 Ohio 479, was properly decided." See also the recent case of Smith v. Wayne County, 50 Ohio St. 628.

1. Injuries from Work Negligently Done.—See, for a recent case illustrating this rule, West Covington v. Schultz (Ky., 1895), 30 S. W. Rep. 410. There appears to be no statutory provision in Kentucky allowing damages for mere consequential injuries. The court, at any rate, places its decision upon common-law grounds. The facts and the rule of law applicable thereto are stated as follows: "In the construction of this street the contractor placed dirt upon the premises of the plaintiff to the depth of five or six feet, against her door and windows, preventing ingress and egress by the front door or the window, and entirely covering her shrubbery on her lot back of her house. The work was also so carelessly done as to cause water after rains to flow in large volumes through her dwelling, and to such an extent as compelled her to abandon it. While the town denies the injury, the proof is conclusive on that subject; and the defense is that the town had the right to grade this street in accordance with the ordinance, although it might injure appellee's premises. This is a mistaken view of the law; for where there is a trespass or an entry upon the premises of the owner, and injury results, an action can be sustained for the wrong. The facts in this case show not only an inconvenience to the property owner by the making of a low or high grade in front of appellee's property that might lessen its value, and to which the property owner must submit unless it should interfere with the right of ingress or egress, and not then if the town supplies the right of way, but it is an invasion of private right, terminating in the destruction of the property. It was the duty of the city to have erected a barrier to this dirt, so as to prevent the injury to the dwelling, or required the appellee to do so; but to destroy her property because the street had to be graded to comply with the ordinance, is no defense whatever, and doing so knowingly is an aggravation of the wrong. The cases of Kemper v. Louisville, 14 Bush (Ky.) 87, and Pearson v. Zable, 78 Ky. 170, sustain this view of the question. The owners of lots hold them subject to the right of the city to improve them in a proper and reasonable manner, and there is no remedy, although there may be a diminution of value to the lots by reason of the improvement; but when the improvement results in a direct injury to the lots, as causing water to flow upon them in such a manner as to injure the value, or to throw dirt upon the premises against the consent of the owner, in all such cases an action will be allowed for the injury, if the city authorities direct the execution of the work in the manner causing the injury." See, to the same effect, Broadwell v. Kansas City, 75 Mo. 213, 42 Am. Rep. 406; Krug v. St. Mary's, 152 Pa. St. 37.

In Hendershott v. Ottumwa, 46 Iowa 658, 26 Am. Rep. 182, in raising the grade a mass of earth was rolled in front of plaintiff's lots, destroying part of his hedge. The court held that he was entitled to recover, saying: "If, in making changes in the natural surface of streets, the city is negligent in construction, so that the adjacent lots are injured by reason of such negligence, the city is liable for such injury. Cotes v. Davenport, 9 Iowa 227; Ellis v. Iowa City, 29 Iowa 229; Wallace v. Muscatine, 4 Greene (Iowa) 373, 61 Am. Dec. 131; Aurora v. Reed, 57 Ill. 30, 11 Am. Rep. 1. Other authorities might be cited in support of the foregoing propositions were it necessary."

2. Damages Allowed by Constitution or Statute.—Reardon v. San Francisco, 66 Cal. 492, 7 Am. & Eng. Corp. Cas. 454, 56 Am. Rep. 109, is one of the leading cases on this point. The court reviews most of the authorities up to that time (1885), and then says: "We cannot think that the convention, in inserting in the constitution of this state the word 'damaged,' in the connection in which it is found, and the people, in ratifying the work of the convention, intended to limit the effect of this word to cases where the party injured already had a remedy to recover compensation. They engaged in no such empty and vain work. It was intended to give a remedy as well where one existed before as where it did not; to superadd to the guaranty found in the former constitution of this state, and in nearly all of the other states, a guaranty against damage where none previously existed. The provision includes damage to

2. Right of Abutting Owners to Use of Streets—a. FOR PURPOSES OF DEPOSIT, ETC.—Aside from the general right of abutting owners to have the highway so managed and preserved that the free use and enjoyment of their property will not be impaired from that quarter, such owners have also certain peculiar rights in the use of the street distinct from those of the public, and sometimes even curtailing the latter.¹

(Mass.) 297, where Morton, J., said: "When the owner of a lot in such a situation has occasion to build, and for that purpose to dig cellars, he may rightfully lay his building materials and earth within the limits of the street, provided he takes care not improperly to obstruct the same, and to remove them within a reasonable time. It is very obvious that, without this privilege, it would be in some situations nearly or quite impracticable to build at all." See also Wood v. Mears, 12 Ind. 515, 74 Am. Dec. 222; Clark v. Fry, 8 Ohio St. 358, 72 Am. Dec. 590; Mallory v. Griffey, 85 Pa. St. 275; Palmer v. Silverthorn, 32 Pa. St. 65. Compare dicta in Com. v. Passmore, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 219; *People v. In Raymond v. Keseberg, 84 Wis. 302, the court observes, as to the origin and nature of this right: "We hold that the right is the right of an abutter simply as an abutter, and not as an owner of the fee of any part of the street. Being the right of an abutter as such alone, it is founded on and limited by reasonable necessity, to be determined in each case by the facts of the case. Doubtless the right may be regu-

Deposit of Goods by Tradesmen.—Merchants have the right to use that portion of the street in front of their stores for the purpose of unloading and conveying goods back and forth.¹

Use must be Reasonable.—But such use of the streets is intended to be temporary only, and cannot be continued for an unreasonable time.²

Considerations Determining the Question of Reasonableness.—Reasonableness in this regard is a question which "must depend in a great measure upon the locality, its accustomed usage, and the exigencies of the public, it being apparent that what would obstruct travel and work an inconvenience to the public in the crowded streets of London, or on Broadway in New York, might be harmless in the streets of a less populous place."³

Obstructing Street Cars.—Abutters have no inalienable right to place drays and trucks at right angles to the sidewalk for the purpose of unloading goods, if street cars are thereby obstructed.⁴

b. PROJECTIONS, EXCAVATIONS, ETC.—The privilege of projecting structures from one's premises into the street is one which might lead to great abuses, and is therefore subject to stricter limitations than the temporary use of the streets discussed above.

Certain Projections as Nuisances.—A bay window⁵ projecting beyond a building line though sixteen feet above the sidewalk, a passageway⁶ nearly as high, connecting two buildings on opposite sides of the street, a fruit stand⁷ permanently and materially encroaching upon the sidewalk in a populous part of a city, and steps⁸ projecting into a highway, have been held to be public nuisances. The projection of a stairway into an alley,⁹ of awnings¹⁰ and show-cases¹¹ into a street, and the erection of hay scales¹² in a highway have all been declared to be illegal. So the use of shop windows for advertising purposes lated, as it often is, by reasonable municipal regulations as to the space to be occupied; but in the absence of any such regulations the question of the extent of the reasonable necessity must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case."

may become a nuisance by attracting crowds of people, blockading the street, and thus interfering with the rights of other abutters as well as of the general public.¹

In Maryland, however, it has been held that a porch projecting over the building line into the sidewalk was a lawful structure;² and the use of awnings may be authorized.³

Excavations.—Excavations under the street with openings thereto are likely to infringe even more seriously upon the rights of the public than structures on the surface, and hence are generally subject to greater limitations.

Right of Municipality to Forbid Excavations.—A municipal corporation has the right, of course, to forbid excavations under the sidewalk unless made according to its prescribed regulations.⁴ But it is held in some states that excavations under the sidewalk by abutting owners may be authorized.⁵

Liability of Municipality.—And in Indiana the rule is that the municipality is not liable for permitting such excavations to remain open.⁶ But, generally, the rule is that injuries resulting to passers-by from such excavations are actionable.⁷

Permission as to Projections and Excavations Revocable without Compensation.—Permission granted to abutters by the municipality to construct projections and excavations into the street may be revoked without compensation to the licensee.⁸

Consent of City—How Implied.—A city's consent to the construction of a vault under the sidewalk may be inferred from the acquiescence of its officers for nine years.⁹

May not Excavate so as to Render Street Unsafe.—An abutter has no right even upon his own land to so excavate as to loosen the soil of the street and render it unsafe, and he may be enjoined therefrom at the instance of an opposite abutter.¹⁰

11. Rural Highways Distinguished from Urban.—The streets of a town are fairly subject to justify a separate treatment in this article. The rights of the rural abutter as regards the highway which bounds his premises are in general much more extensive than those of the urban abutter.¹

Rights of Rural Abutter at Common Law.—For the former is first of all a proprietor. At common law he is the owner of the fee ad medium filum viæ, or (if his land extends on both sides) of the entire highway;² and he does not convey his many purposes to which a highway in the country would not be. Haight v. Keokuk, 4 Iowa 214. And see Bloomfield, etc., Natural Gas Light Co. v. Calkins, 62 N. Y. 386, where the court emphasizes the distinction between urban and rural highways in respect to the right to lay pipes thereon, saying: "It may be urged with some apparent reason that the appropriation of land for a street in a city carries with it the idea that it is to be used for all necessary purposes, as such street, which the interest of the public, and the comfort, enjoyment, or the health of the locality, may demand. Concede, then, that these improvements were proper for cities, it by no means follows that the appellant had a right to use the highway in question for the same purpose, and that, as a necessary result of the reasoning, the gas pipes may be properly laid over the land of the respondent. And it may be remarked that most of the cases cited, if not all of them, state or assume that there is a distinction between the street of a city and a highway in the country. Every one of the improvements referred to may, in cities, be considered as a necessary incident to the public right to repair, improve, increase the value of property, and add to its beauty and the wealth of a large local population. Usually constructed without objection, they do not ordinarily interfere with other rights which have been lawfully acquired and enjoyed, and they confer many advantages which counterbalance any supposed detriment or injury. Whether these rights can be strictly maintained as to cities it is not necessary to determine in this case. It is enough to say that the rule claimed has no application to a country highway, because the circumstances are entirely different. Nor does the rightful use of land appropriated for a street for the purposes before stated in any way disturb the position that a public highway in the country stands entirely upon a different footing." See also this distinction drawn in Chesapeake, etc., Telephone Co. v. Mackenzie, 74 Md. 36; Eels v. American Telephone, etc., Co., 143 N. Y. 133, affirming 65 Hun (N. Y.) 516; Kincaid v. Indianapolis Natural Gas Co., 124 Ind. 577, 19 Am. St. Rep. 113.

But in Cater v. Northwestern Tel. Exch. Co. (Minn., 1895), 63 N. W. Rep. 111, this view is attacked by Mitchell, J., in delivering the majority opinion, where he says, speaking of telephone poles in the highway: "So far as there is any distinction between rural and urban highways, there would be much more reason for holding such structures an additional servitude in the latter than in the former. It is a matter of common knowledge that telegraph and telephone lines along the side of a country road rarely, if ever, appreciably interfere with either public travel or the easements of the abutting landowner; whereas, in the cities, especially on business streets, where the buildings extend out to the line of the street, the numerous wires stretched upon the cross-arms frequently materially interfere with access, light, and air, as well as render protection of the buildings more difficult in case of fire."

1. Rights of Rural Abutter the more Extensive.—Chesapeake, etc., Telephone Co. v. Mackenzie, 74 Md. 36. Here the court says: "The use to which streets in a town or city may be lawfully put are greater and more numerous than in the case of an ordinary road or highway in the country. With reference to the latter, as we have just observed, all the public acquires is the easement of passage and its incidents; and hence the owner of the soil parts with this use only, retaining the soil, and by virtue of this ownership is entitled, except for the purposes of repair, to the earth, timber, and grass growing thereon, and to all minerals, quarries, and springs below the surface. But with respect to streets in populous places the public convenience requires more than the mere right of way over and upon them. They may need to be graded, and therefore the municipal authorities may not only change the surface, but cut down trees, dig up the earth, and may use it in improving the street, and may make culverts, drains, and sewers upon or under the surface. Pipes may also be laid under the surface when required by the various agencies adopted in civilized life, such as water, gas, electricity, steam, and other things capable of that mode of distribution." See also Kincaid v. Indianapolis Natural Gas Co., 124 Ind. 577, 19 Am. St. Rep. 113, quoted above; Eels v. American Telephone, etc., Co., 143 N. Y. 133, affirming 65 Hun (N. Y.) 516; Elliott on Roads and Streets, c. 18, pp. 299, 303.

2. Rural Abutter as Proprietor.—The leading case on the extent of adjoining owner's rights is Goodtitle v. Alker, 1 Burr. 133, where Lord Mansfield, holding that such an owner might maintain ejectment, quoted 1 Rolle's Abridgment 392, to the effect "that the king has nothing but the passage for himself and his people; but the freehold and all profits belong to the owner of the soil;" and added: "So do all the trees upon it and mines under it (which may be extremely valuable). The owner may carry water in pipes under it. The owner may get his soil discharged of this servitude or easement of a way over it by a writ of ad quod damnum. It is like the property in a market or fair. There is no reason why he should not have a right to all title to the public, as is sometimes done by urban owners when their lands are platted into streets.¹

Public Have only Easement of Passage.—The public possess, of course, the easement of passage, but their rights are strictly limited to this.² They have no right, as against the abutter, to use the highway for other purposes, such as hunting,³ and one who stops on the highway in front of a house, uttering abusive remedies for the freehold; subject still, indeed, to the servitude or easement. An assize would lie if he should be disseized of it; an action of trespass would lie for an injury done to it." See also Harrison v. Rutland (1893), 1 Q. B. 142; Dovaston v. Payne, 2 H. Bl. 527; Stevens v. Whistler, 11 East 51.

The rule in this country was thus stated at an early day in Connecticut: "An idea has been entertained by some that the public have the fee in highways, and are the owners of the soil over which they are laid. This erroneous opinion originated in a misconception of the nature of a highway. A highway is nothing but an easement, comprehending merely the right of all the individuals in the community to pass and re-pass, with the incidental right in the public to do all the acts necessary to keep it in repair. This easement does not comprehend any interest in the soil nor give the public the legal possession of it. Such is the description of a highway by all the common-law writers; and this being the nature of it, the consequence clearly follows that the right of freehold is not touched by establishing a highway, but the freehold continues in the original owner of the land in the same manner it was before the highway was established, subject to the easement." Peck v. Smith, 1 Conn. 132, 6 Am. Dec. 216. And see also the following cases: Barclay v. Howell, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 513; Lyman v. Arnold, 5 Mason (U. S.), 195; Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Huntsinger (Ind. Rep. 710, where the court says: "Whatever may be the rule in other states, we have supposed that the question of the right in the highway of a landowner whose title extends to the centre of the road is not an open one in Ohio. The question has been the subject of adjudication in a score of cases decided by this court, notably in the following: Bingham v. Doane, 9 Ohio 167; Crawford v. Delaware, 7 Ohio St. 459; Cincinnati, etc., St. R. Co. v. Cummins, 14 Ohio St. 523; Hatch v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 18 Ohio St. 123; McClelland v. Miller, 28 Ohio St. 502; Lawrence R. Co. v. Williams, 35 Ohio St. 168; *Lawrence R. Co. v. 1. Lindsay v. Omaha, 30 Neb. 512. In this case Cobb, C. J., after quoting the Nebraska statute which provides for laying out cities and villages, and additions thereto, says: "Some years ago, in writing the opinion in Omaha, etc., R. Co. v. Rogers, 16 Neb. 117, I made a thorough examination of the adjudicated cases of the states having statutory provisions similar, or nearly so, to our own above cited, and came to the conclusion that the fee-simple title to the streets of cities or villages, which passes by virtue of the acknowledgment and recording of the plats, passes to and vests in the city or village."

And in Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Hartley, 67 Ill. 439, 16 Am. Rep. 624, it was observed: "It cannot be successfully contested that appellees owned the fee of the land to the centre of the old highway. It was never conveyed to the city by any formal grant, by plat or otherwise. The adjoining proprietors never parted with the fee. Had they platted the grounds into lots and streets, under the statute the plat itself, when recorded, would have operated as a grant of the fee to the corporation. This they did not do. The city could and did acquire an interest in the street, although the grounds were never set apart for that specific purpose, in the manner prescribed in the statute. It may be by dedication, or common user, and in such cases the fee would remain in the original proprietors, burdened with a public easement. Illinois, etc., Canal v. Haven, 11 Ill. 554; Hunter v. Middleton, 13 Ill. 54; Manly v. Gibson, 13 Ill. 308."

2. Public Right Restricted to Easement of Passage.—Harrison v. Rutland (1893), 1 Q. B. 142, where Kay, L. J., says: "Any use of the soil of the highway other than the legitimate use of it for the purposes of a highway is a trespass upon that soil as against the owner, to whom it still belongs. These propositions are amply established by judicial decisions."

3. No Right to Use Highway for Purpose of and insulting language to the owner, thereby becomes a trespasser.¹ Even the time-honored privilege of the drover must be exercised with strict regard to the abutter's rights, and if the former's cattle in passing along the highway stray into an adjoining field, even through a gap in the fence, the drover is bound to remove them within a reasonable time or the abutter may impound them.²

Pipe Lines.—The greater limitations upon the use of the highway by other than abutters in the case of rural as compared with urban ways is well illustrated by the law governing pipe-line companies. While a different rule obtains in regard to city streets,³ it seems to be well settled that pipes cannot be laid in a rural highway without compensation to the abutting owner, because they constitute an additional burden upon his estate.⁴ Parties laying pipes along a road without having obtained the consent of the abutting owners, or acquired the right by condemnation proceedings, are liable to others injured thereby,⁵ and the abutter may even tear up and remove the pipes.⁶

Hunting.—Reg. v. Pratt, 4 El. & Bl. 860, 82 E. C. L. 860; Harrison v. Rutland (1893), 1 Q. B. 142.

1. Adams v. Rivers, 11 Barb. (N. Y.) 390.

2. Drovers' Rights and Liabilities.—In Goodwyn v. Cheveley, 4 H. & N. 631, the court, by Bramwell, B., said: "If the question was whether the drovers ought to be punished for what they did, I should say they ought not. But the question is, what is the defendant's right in the matter? His right is to have his land trespassed upon as little as possible; that is, to no greater extent than is absolutely unavoidable. I therefore think that a reasonable time was such as, and no more than, was required for the act of driving the cattle out of the field. The case was argued as though there had been some hardship on the plaintiff in having his cattle distrained and impounded, but there is none. Was the defendant to have his crops grazed upon until the plaintiff could get a convenient time to remove the cattle? If so they might have continued in the defendant's field for twenty-four hours because the drovers could not sooner have housed the other cattle. If the question be whether the defendant's herbage is to be grazed upon by the plaintiff's cattle without any compensation, until it is convenient for the drovers to remove them, or whether the plaintiff is to be subjected to the inconvenience of getting his cattle out of the pound, it seems to me that the plaintiff ought to bear the loss, for he had no right to have his cattle in the defendant's field; and his immunity from the consequence of his cattle having trespassed on the defendant's land only extended so far as was necessary, and there was no physical impossibility in their being immediately driven out. Another consideration will show the hardship on the defendant. He finds cattle grazing in his field; he has no notice that they will be taken away, nor is there anything to indicate whether he may or may not impound them. How long is he to let them remain? What is he to do? Is he to inquire of every one he meets whether he has seen any persons driving other cattle along the road with the appearance of an intention to return and remove the cattle from his field? He can do nothing but impound them." The learned baron had directed a verdict at nisi prius for the defendant, in the action against the abutter for impounding. His colleagues on appeal held that the question of whether the cattle were removed within a reasonable time should have been left to the jury, and therefore sent the case back; but the general views expressed above were not questioned.

4. Pipe Lines in Rural Highways.—Kincaid v. Indianapolis Natural Gas Co., 124 Ind. 577, 19 Am. St. Rep. 113. In this case the court, by Elliott, J., said: "The authorities, although not very numerous, are harmonious upon the proposition that laying gas pipes in a suburban road is the imposition of an additional burden, and that compensation must be made to the owner. Bloomfield, etc., Natural Gas Light Co. v. Calkins, 62 N. Y. 386, 1 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 549; Bloomfield, etc., Natural Gas Light Co. v. Richardson, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 437; Stumpf's Appeal, 116 Pa. St. 33; Webb v. Ohio Gas Fuel Co., 16 Wkly. Law Bull. (Ohio) 121." See, in addition to the above, Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Huntsinger (Ind. App., 1895), 39 N. E. Rep. 423; Lebanon Light, etc., Co. v. Leap (Ind., 1894), 39 N. E. Rep. 57; Sterling's Appeal, 111 Pa. St. 35, 56 Am. Rep. 246 (evidently the case intended to be cited by Judge Elliott in the above quotation); Goodson v. Richardson, L. R. 9 Ch. 221. And compare Bollinger v. Southern Pipe Line Co., 2 Pa. Dist. Rep. 604; White v. Yazoo City, 27 Miss. 357.

6. Right of Abutter to Remove Pipes.—Consumers' Gas Trust Co. v. Huntsinger (Ind. App., 1895), 39 N. E. Rep. 423, the court, by Ross, C.J., saying: "The building of a pipe line along a highway does not come within the uses for which highways were intended. It has been decided by our Supreme Court, following the decisions of other courts of last resort, that the laying of gas pipes along a highway is the imposition of an additional

Acquiescence of Abutter.—But if he acquiesces in the prosecution of the work until after large sums of money have been expended thereon, and the enterprise is one of great importance to the public, the abutter may lose his right to an injunction.¹

Poles.—In reference to the erection, along rural highways, of poles for stringing electric wires, the authorities are not so harmonious. The majority of them hold that these also constitute an additional burden, and that they cannot be erected, even under permission of the public authorities, without making due compensation to the abutting owners.² There are other decisions, how-burden upon the fee from that embraced in the easement for road purposes, and that compensation must be made to the owner of the fee. Kincaid v. Indianapolis Natural Gas Co., 124 Ind. 577, 19 Am. St. Rep. 113. It is evident, therefore, that the appellant company, although engaged in a public enterprise, had no right to appropriate private property without compensation; and it is no excuse to say that because it is engaged in such enterprise, and has expended large sums of money in putting in its plant and extending its pipe lines, it can summarily enter upon the lands of another without right and lay its lines, and thus acquire the right to maintain them. When it entered upon the lands of Matilda Harless without her permission it was unlawfully there, and she had a right not only to expel appellant's servants who were engaged in the unlawful work therefrom, but she had the right also to tear up and remove the pipes which they had placed upon her land. In order to do this she might call to her assistance any person who might be willing to assist, and those thus assisting could incur no liability except they used unnecessary force or violence in doing the same."

1. Abutter may by Acquiescence Lose his Right to Injunctive Relief.—"In adjudging that he has no right to an injunction we do not hold that he may not in a proper case recover damages for the invasion of his legal rights. What we here decide is that the case made is not one justifying resort to the extraordinary remedy of injunction. The effect of our decision is that he has mistaken his remedy. The work in which the gas company is engaged is one in which the general community have an interest, and to arrest the work by injunction would do great injury to many citizens. Persons other than the company have an interest, and they are so numerous that it is the duty of the courts to protect that interest where it can be done without materially impairing the rights of any private citizen; and that can be done in this instance, for the appellant, in the appropriate action and upon making a proper case, can be fully compensated in damages for all injury that he may have suffered. There is present here an element of public policy which exerts a controlling influence. The good of the community forbids that one who occupies such a position as the appellant does should be permitted to arrest work essential to the successful discharge of the company's duty to supply the community with fuel in the form of natural gas. Public policy, as has been demonstrated in analogous cases, requires that the rights of the community should be protected and the landowner left to his remedy at law. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Beck, 119 Ind. 124; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Soltwedde, 116 Ind. 257, 9 Am. St. Rep. 852; Bravard v. Cincinnati, etc., R. Co., 115 Ind. 1; Sherlock v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 115 Ind. 22; Midland R. Co. v. Smith, 113 Ind. 233; Indiana R. Co. v. Allen, 113 Ind. 308, 3 Am. St. Rep. 650. Nor does this rule operate unjustly, for the landowner is not deprived of compensation. On the contrary, the right to compensation is left open to him, and it is his own fault if he does not recover full compensation for all the loss he has actually sustained. Blended with the element of public policy is another influential one, and that is this: the appellant, without objection, knowingly permitted the work to proceed until it reached a stage at which it would be ruinous to the company which had invested such large sums of money to stop it by injunction. These two elements in their combined strength certainly make a case in which an injunction should, upon plain principles of equity, be denied. Logansport v. Uhl, 99 Ind. 531, 9 Am. Rep. 109; Dodge v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 43 N. J. Eq. 351." Elliott, J., in Kincaid v. Indianapolis Natural Gas Co., 124 Ind. 577, 19 Am. St. Rep. 113.

2. Poles in Highway—Prevailing Doctrine.—"We cannot agree that this permanent appropriation and exclusive possession of a small portion of the highway can properly be regarded as any newly discovered method of exercising the old public easement, for the very reason that this so-called new method is a permanent, continuous, and exclusive use and possession of some part of the public highway itself, and therefore cannot be simply a new method of exercising such old public easement. It is a totally different and distinct kind of use from any heretofore known. It is not a mere difference in the kind of vehicle, or in their number or capacity, or in the manner, method, or means of locomotion. All these might be varied, increased as to number, capacity, or form, altered as to means or rapidity of locomotion, or transformed in their nature or character, and still the use of the highway might be substantially the same—a highway for passage and motion of some sort. Here, however, in the use of the highway by the defendant is the fact of permanent and exclusive appropriation and possession, a fact which is, as it seems to us, wholly at war ever, in which the contrary doctrine is vigorously defended.¹

Sewers.—The construction of a metropolitan sewer along a public road was held in Massachusetts not to impose an additional servitude,² but a different rule may fairly be said to obtain elsewhere.³

Steam Railroads.—Steam railroads, though of a semi-public character, become additional burdens if they occupy any part of the highway, and the owner of the fee must be compensated.⁴ It is held in Florida, however, that an abutter on a country road cannot recover damages for the diminution in value of his residence property caused by railway obstructions, unless there is physical contact between the latter and the residence portion, or that part of the highway immediately abutting thereon.⁵

with that of the legitimate public easement in a highway. * * * The argument is pressed upon us that the question to be decided in this case is new, and that it ought to be decided with reference to the wants and customs of the advancing civilization, which, it is alleged, is doing so much to render life more comfortable, attractive, and beautiful. Courts are frequently addressed with such arguments, which are quite forcible, and they have in this case been very eloquently, plausibly, and aptly advanced. The answer to be made is that, although this particular phase of the question, strictly speaking, may itself be new, yet the principle which governs our decision is as old almost as the common law itself; and in deciding this appeal favorably to the defendant herein we should be overruling and making nothing of cases which have been regarded as the law for generations past. A majority of the states whose courts have considered the question have decided it in accordance with our own views. The cases are collected in the brief of the learned counsel for the respondent herein. Let the defendant pay the owners for the value of the use it makes of the land outside and beyond the public easement in the highway, and the necessity of the broader decision is done away with. It has the power to take the land upon making compensation, and hence the refusal of an owner will not stop the proposed undertaking. The amount of the compensation is not now the question, but that in many cases it can be anything more than merely nominal would seem to be a proposition which would not require great elaboration of argument to make plain. The use would frequently be but a technical encroachment upon the rights of the adjoining owner, and there would be but little fear that anything more than nominal damages would be allowed." Private Railway.—A purely private railway cannot lawfully be permitted in the public road at all, and the abutting owner is entitled to the aid of the courts in compelling its removal.¹

b. EXTENT OF ABUTTERS' RIGHTS IN RURAL ROADS.—It will be seen from the foregoing that we have here an extreme instance of that dual form of possession which arises from the existence of what was known in the Roman law (and thence translated into our own) as a servitude.² The interest of the public is that of a servient estate, while the abutter's is a strongly dominant one.

plained of and the residence property of the plaintiff, or that the obstruction was upon that portion of the public road immediately abutting said property, we do not consider these averments as equivalent to declaring that the plaintiff was denied all ingress and egress to his property. Construing these averments in connection with other portions of the pleading, they only meant to assert that ingress and egress to the property from the city of Palatka was made more difficult, inconvenient, and expensive by reason of the obstruction. Unless we so construe this portion of the declaration, it is fatally repugnant to those portions which allege that he was, by reason of the same obstruction, 'compelled to travel and convey his goods and supplies and necessities for himself and family, and haul his farm products a long distance in order to reach the city of Palatka.' Such repugnancy would make the declaration objectionable upon demurrer."

1. Strictly Private Railway in Public Road.—Bradley v. Pharr, 45 La. Ann. 426; Mikesell v. Durkee, 34 Kan. 509 (a case of a city street). In the former case the court says: "The railroad constructed by defendant is not 'for the public or common utility,' or for 'public use,' and is not a 'public or common work.' It is a purely private work, for exclusive private use; and we can discover in the law no broader warrant for the construction of such a work on that portion of plaintiff's land occupied by the public road than on any other portion thereof. Whatever incidental benefits may arise to the public from such a construction on the public road would be conferred in greater degree by a like construction on plaintiff's land adjoining the road; and such benefits can no more sustain the construction, in violation of his legal rights, in one case than in the other."

3. Right of Rural Abutter to Soil of Highway, Mines, Pasturage, etc.—Tucker v. Eldred, 6 R. I. 404, where the court says: "By the general rules of law, the public have but an easement upon the land lying within the lines of the highway. Notwithstanding the laying out of the highway and the condemnation of the land to the use of the public for travel, the title to the soil, and all the profits thereof, consistent with the existence of the easement, remain in the original owner. He has a right to the freehold and to all the profits which may be derived from it, consistently with the right of passage of the public—to all mines beneath the surface, to all trees, grass, and pasturage upon and above the surface. Goodtitle v. Alker, 1 Burr. 133; Stevens v. Whistler, 11 East 51; Doe v. Wilkinson, 3 B. & C. 413, 10 E. C. L. 135; Perley v. Chandler, 6 Mass. 454, 4 Am. Dec. 159; Jackson v. Hathaway, 15 Johns. (N. How these Rights may be Protected.—And in defense of these property rights he may maintain trespass,² ejectment,³ and other actions.⁴

Construction of Underground Passageway.—Where the abutter owns the land on both sides of the road, he may have an underground passageway for his cattle from one side to the other.⁵

Fencing up Part of Highway.—It is said that an abutter cannot acquire the right to fence up any portion of the highway by adverse possession, however long continued.⁶

IV. LIABILITIES OF ABUTTING OWNERS—Defects in Highway; General Rule.—Liabilities of abutting owners for injuries incurred by travelers on the highway arise chiefly through some overt act of negligence. Without such acts on their part, abutters do not become so liable unless liability is specially imposed by statute or charter.⁷ In Illinois, however, it is held that the injured party may

Where the Abutter Owns the Fee, as is generally the case, he cannot recover from a telegraph or telephone company for injuring the trees in the highway along his land while constructing its line. Dailey v. State (Ohio, 1894), 37 N. E. Rep. 710; O'Connor v. Nova Scotia Telephone Co., 22 Canada Supreme Ct. 276.

But in Wisconsin it is held that where trees along a city street have become an obstruction they may be removed by the authorities without compensating the abutter, and without granting him a hearing. Chase v. Oshkosh, 81 Wis. 313.

1. Herbage.—Woodruff v. Neal, 28 Conn. 165; Tucker v. Eldred, 6 R. I. 404.

In Cole v. Drew, 44 Vt. 49, 8 Am. Rep. 363, the court says: "The owner of the soil over which a highway is located is entitled to the emblements growing thereon, and to the entire use of the land, except the right which the public have to use the land and materials thereon for the purpose of building and maintaining a highway suitable for the safe passage of travelers. This doctrine has been long established by numerous authorities. Goodtitle v. Alker, 1 Burr. 133; Holden v. Shattuck, 34 Vt. 336, 80 Am. Dec. 684; Perley v. Chandler, 6 Mass. 454, 4 Am. Dec. 159; Stackpole v. Healy, 16 Mass. 33, 8 Am. Dec. 121; Jackson v. Hathaway, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 447, 8 Am. Dec. 263. These authorities fully establish that he may maintain trespass, or ejectment, for injuries to his rights as such owner of the soil. The public acquire only an easement in the land taken, consisting of the right to use the materials in and upon the land taken for building and maintaining a suitable way, and of using the way when constructed for passing and re-passing. The public and the highway surveyor, who is the agent of the public for certain purposes, have no right to appropriate any of the materials or emblements of the land taken to any other purpose."

7. Nonliability of Abutters for Mere Defects in Highway.—See Rochester v. Campbell, 123 N. Y. 405, 20 Am. St. Rep. 760, where the court, by Ruger, C.J., in an opinion which exhaustively reviews the authorities, says: "We have thus referred at length to many of the cases holding the nonliability of the lot owners, for the reason that there seems to have been quite a common impression, in which judges and lawyers have shared, that abutting owners are in some way liable to an injured party for damages occasioned from their neglect to keep sidewalks in repair when that duty is in any way enjoined upon them. It seems to us that there could never have been any logical cause for such impression, and it seems it has no foundation in the reported cases. Any other conclusion than that reached by us would, we think, be most unfortunate, as it would tend to relax maintain a joint action against the municipality and the abutting owner.¹

When Defect is Occasioned by Abutter.—The rule is different, however, where the abutter himself has caused the defect which produced the injury. Abutters are liable to passers-by who are injured by obstructions or excavations made in the street by the former, providing the latter are not guilty of contributory negligence.²

Expenses of Public Improvements.—An important branch of this division of the general subject of abutting owners is that which relates to the liability of abutting property and of its owners for a proportionate share of the expense of public improvements, but this forms so completely distinct a subject in itself that it may best be reserved for separate treatment elsewhere.³

ACADEMY. (See also the titles SCHOOLS; UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES; TAXATION.)—"Academy" originally meant a garden, grove, or villa near Athens, where Plato and his followers held their philosophical conferences; but of course we are not to adopt this as the present meaning of the word. It has acquired, by the usage of modern times, a variety of meanings. It is the vigilance of municipal corporations in the performance of their duties in respect to the repair of streets and highways, and impose that duty upon those who might be utterly unable to discharge it. It would tend directly to demoralize the public service and lead to disorder, decay, and impassability of the public highways."

sometimes used to designate a school for teaching a particular art or science. But it is commonly understood to mean a school or seminary of learning (holding a rank between a university or college and a common school) in which the arts and sciences in general are taught.¹

ACCEPT. (For cross-references see ACCEPTANCE.)—The word "accepted" imports not merely that there should be a delivery by the seller, but that each party should do something by which the bargain should be bound.²

1. Academy of Fine Arts v. Philadelphia County, 22 Pa. St. 498. In this case it was held that the academies meant to be exempted from taxation by the Pennsylvania Act of 16th April, 1838, were those designed for purposes of education of a general character. The Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, in Philadelphia, is not exempted by that act from taxation.

Wilson v. State, 35 Ark. 427, was an indictment for selling liquor within three miles of an academy. Counsel for defendant asked that the jury be instructed that "by academy is meant a seminary of learning or school holding a rank between a university or college and a common school. A university or college is the highest grade of institution of learning, and a common school is where the ordinary branches of education are taught." This instruction was refused by the trial judge, and the refusal was approved by the appellate court, which said: "His honor the circuit judge did not deem it necessary for him to indorse all these definitions. The term academy, employed in the statute, in the indictment, in the prohibiting order of the county court, and by the witnesses, is one in common use, and doubtless the jury very well understood its meaning as ordinarily used and applied to a grade of schools."

2. Tempest v. Fitzgerald, 3 B. & Ald. 683.

The delivery of goods to the place where the purchaser's agent directed, and the shipping by the agent to a port where defendant had given general directions to have such goods sent, constitute a sufficient acceptance. Snow v. Warner, 10 Met. (Mass.) 132, 43 Am. Dec. 417.

Where there was a parol contract for the sale of a horse, payment on delivery, and the purchaser called and exercised the horse and gave some directions, but before payment or delivery the horse died, it was held that the buyer was not liable for the price. "The word accepted imports not merely that there should be a delivery by the seller, but that each party should do something by which the bargain should be bound." Tempest v. Fitzgerald, 3 B. & Ald. 680.

There is no acceptance where a verbal purchase of winter tares was made to be paid for on delivery and to be delivered when called for. Howe v. Palmer, 3 B. & Ald. 321.

Upon a verbal contract of sale of goods of more than fifty dollars value, a delivery of them, in accordance with such contract, to a general carrier, not designated or selected by the buyer, does not constitute such a delivery and acceptance under the statute of frauds as to pass the title to the goods. Rodgers v. Phillips, 40 N. Y. 530.

Where a merchant sold goods to another upon an arrangement that a third party was to collect the account and pay over the same, less a commission, and such third party was furnished with duplicate bills of account, made out in the name of the purchaser, and wrote across those retained by the merchant the word "accepted," signing his name, such third party did not thereby make himself liable as a guarantor. Hatch v. Antrim, 51 Ill. 106.

An affidavit that a person has accepted an office does not sufficiently show a user to comply with the statute 5 and 6 Will. IV., c. 76, § 50, and a quo warranto cannot be granted against him on such affidavit. Reg. v. Slatter, 11 Ad. & El. 505, 39 E. C. L. 153.

Accept and Receive Distinguished.—The New York statute of frauds provides that in certain cases the contract shall be void unless "the buyer shall accept and receive part of such goods." It was held that a delivery of goods to a general carrier, in pursuance of the order of a purchaser, to be transported to him, is not such an "acceptance and receipt" of the goods as takes the case out of the statute. Rodgers v. Phillips, 40 N. Y. 519.

A board of supervisors accepted an architect's plans on condition of receiving a reliable bid on the basis of such plans. It was held that the receipt of a bid alone was necessary, not the acceptance of a bid. The court said: "In the next place it is argued that the condition was not fulfilled; that the first resolution means that a bid of the kind specified must be accepted by the board; and that it did not accept any. But the resolution does not say accepted. It says 'received.' And we do not think the expressions are equivalent. Probably most men have received many invitations and proposals which they have not accepted. In popular usage the words certainly differ in meaning. And we are not aware of any technical meaning which they have. The context supports this view. For it is provided that the party bidding must be 'reliable,' and that he must be willing to give bonds. What was the use of putting in these provisions upon defendant's theory? The whole would be included in the word accepted. The object probably was to be reasonably sure that the plans did not require too great an outlay, and this was accomplished when the board found a reliable party who was willing to do the work and give bonds for its satisfactory performance." In re Rowland's Estate (Cal., 1888), 16 Pac. Rep. 315.

Acceptable Price.—In Condict v. Cowdrey, 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. 66, it was held, where a broker sued for commissions, that the words in his client's letter, "the price I may accept for the land," did not refer to money actually paid. The court said: "The words in that letter, 'the price I may accept' for the land, are similar to those used in one of the opinions above cited. There the words 'acceptable price' clearly mean price, or rate of payment, satisfactory to the vendor, and do not mean money actually paid in consummation of the sale." The case referred to in the opinion is that of Sibbald v. Bethlehem Iron Co., 83 N. Y. 381, 22 Am. Rep. 441.

2. Boykin v. Boykin, 70 N. Car. 262, 16 Am. Rep. 776.

3. Tioga County v. South Creek Tp., 75 Pa. St. 436. In this case it is said: "That issue born in wedlock, though begotten before, is presumptively legitimate, is an axiom of law so well established that to cite authorities in support of it would be a mere waste of time. So the rule that the parents will not be permitted to prove nonaccess for the purpose of bastardizing such issue is just as well settled. Many reasons have been given for this rule. Prominent among them is the idea that the admission of such testimony would be unseemly and scandalous, and this not so much from the fact that it reveals immoral conduct upon the part of the parents, as because of the effect it may have upon the child, who is in no fault, but who must nevertheless be the chief sufferer thereby. That the parents should be permitted to bastardize the child, is a proposition which shocks our sense of right and decency, and hence the rule of law which forbids it."

Access of Light. (See also the title ANCIENT LIGHTS.)—"In my judgment the word access as used in § 3, 2 and 3 Wm. IV., c. 71 (Access and Use of Light), does not refer to the access through the orifice, through the aperture or window, but to the freedom of passage over the servient tenement; and I think some confusion has arisen from supposing that the access referred to there is the access through the window of the dominant tenement. Undoubtedly the two are closely connected together, because the right acquired under this section of the statute by the dominant tenement is governed and measured by the access to the dominant tenement, and therefore the aperture which lets the light into the dominant tenement defines in a manner familiar to us all the area which must be kept free over the servient tenement. The two things are closely connected together; the one is the measure of the other; but they are not the same thing." Scott v. Pape, 31 Ch. Div. 554. See also Greenwood v. Hornsey, 33 Ch. I. DEFINITION.—Accession is a source of title to property, by virtue of its incorporation with, or annexation to, that which is already the property of the individual in whom the right to the acquisition is thus vested.¹

II. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.—Scope of Article.—The property to which title is thus acquired may be either real or personal;² but as the subject of the acquisition of title to real property by accession is considered under a subsequent title,³ this article will be confined in its scope to a discussion of the doctrines relating to the acquisition of title to personality as a result of its incorporation or union with other personality, or as a result of its annexation to realty.

To What Causes Due.—Accession may be due to either natural or artificial causes, or to a combination of both, in which last instance it has been denominated "mixed accession."⁴

1. Sweet Law Dict.

"The ownership of a thing, whether it be real or personal, movable or immovable, carries with it the right to all that the thing produces, and to all that becomes united to it, either naturally or artificially. This is called the right of accession." Bouv. Law Dict.

In the French and Louisiana Codes, the right of accession is defined to be the right to all which one's own property produces, whether that property be movable or immovable, and the right to that which is united to it by accession, either naturally or artificially. 2 Kent Com. (13th ed.) 360; Zella v. Southern Yacht Club, 34 La. Ann. 837.

Derivation of "Accession."—The word "accession" is derived from the Latin accessio, which latter word was used to denote one of the three methods of originally acquiring property; one of the other two being occupatio, where that which belongs to no one is acquired by him who first takes it; and the third being traditio, where title is acquired by a transfer of ownership. See 2 Black. Com. 405; 2 Kent Com. (13th ed.) 361.

In Connection with International Law, accession is the absolute or conditional acceptance, by one or several states, of a treaty already concluded between other sovereignties. Bouv. Law Dict. See generally the title INTERNATIONAL LAW.

4. Natural, Artificial, and Mixed Accession.—Accession, it has been held, may be either

An Accession falls to the Principal.—The entire subject is fairly comprehended in the maxim accessio cedit principali—an accession shall fall to the principal. This rule however is not free from exception, nor can it, in all cases, be readily determined what is the principal and what the accessory.¹

III. APPLICATION OF THE DOCTRINE TO PERSONALTY—Owner of Principal Materials.—It is a generally recognized rule of property that a product which results from the combination of the materials of several individuals belongs to the one who contributes the principal element.² Thus, where saddles were manufactured, natural, artificial, or mixed. Natural accession is where addition is made to the original property by the operation of nature, without premeditated human design; as where land is gradually washed away and deposited on another's land, thereby vesting title to such increase in the owner of the land upon which the deposit is made. Artificial or industrial accession is that produced by the labor and industry of man; as where, out of materials not all the property of a single individual, a new thing is produced; or in the case of "confusion of goods;" or where a building is erected by one upon the land of another, which involves the consideration of the doctrine of "fixtures." Mixed accession is the result of a combination of natural and artificial forces, as where one sows or plants in the ground of another. See 2 Colquhoun Rom. Civ. Law, §§ 979-995.

100.—The title to ice is in the owner of the water upon which it is formed. Higgins v. Kusterer, 41 Mich. 318, 32 Am. Rep. 160.

1. Summary of Doctrine of Accession.—In 2 Schouler on Personal Property 37, it is said, with respect to accession: "Upon the whole, this modern doctrine of accession appears to be thus properly summed up: One whose personal property has been taken by another without authority may follow and recover it from any wilful trespasser who has worked it into the composition of any chattel which presents the appropriated materials as still capable of identification; and even, according to the New York cases, where the materials taken cannot be absolutely identified in the new product. Even where the trespass was not wilful, but accidental, as through some mistake of fact, and the materials taken can still be identified, and the labor and materials of the trespasser are not shown to have gone farther than the appropriated materials towards producing the present valuable chattel, the owner of the materials is still entitled to the chattel. But where no element of wilfulness or intentional wrong whatever appears on the part of him who applied another's materials, and the identity of those materials has finally disappeared in the new product; or where it can be shown that his own labor and materials contributed essentially more to the value of the present chattel than those materials which he took without intending a wrong, he shall keep the chattel as his own, making, however, due compensation to the owner of the materials for what he took. The true object of the rule is, first of all, to protect owners whose rights of property are invaded; next, to screen an involuntary or casual trespasser, who has expended of his own toil or materials in good faith, from punishment more severe than mere carelessness or honest error deserves."

Parts of Two Chains Made into One.—In Pulcifer v. Page, 32 Me. 404, 54 Am. Dec. 582, an action of trespass was brought for an iron chain. It appeared that the plaintiff and the defendant each had a chain which had been broken into various pieces. The plaintiff carried the broken pieces of the two chains to a blacksmith and had them united so as to make two other chains. The defendant carried away one of these chains, a very small part of which had been formed with some of the links which had previously been his. Verdict was rendered for the plaintiff, and in upholding the decision of the trial court, Howard, J., on appeal, said: "This case presents a question of acquisition of property by accession, but does not involve an inquiry concerning the admixture or confusion of goods. It is a general rule of law that if the materials of one person are united to the materials of another by labor, forming a joint product, the owner of the principal materials will acquire the right of property in the whole by right of accession. This was a rule of the Roman and of the English law, and has been adopted, as it is understood, in the United States generally." Similar observations are made in Merritt v. Johnson, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 473, 5 Am. Dec. 289; and Dunn v. Oneal, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 106, 60 Am. Dec. 142.

partly out of the materials of one party, but principally out of the materials of another, it was held that the latter party acquired, by reason of his ownership of the principal materials, title to the saddles when finished.¹

Union of Materials must be Complete.—It seems to be regarded as the correct doctrine, however, that the union of materials must be so complete as to render ready separation impossible; for it has been held that there was no occasion for the application of the law of accession, where wheels and axles belonging to one party had been added to the wagon-bed of another.²

1. Labor Performed upon, or Materials Added to, Property without Owner's Consent.—a. UNDER A BONA FIDE MISTAKE AS TO OWNERSHIP.—A person who, under a bona fide mistake as to ownership, performs labor upon, or adds materials to, the property of another, may acquire title to the entirety, if the result of the labor performed or materials added has been such as to transform the original materials into a new species.³

New Rails Made from Old Ones, with New Iron Added.—A railroad company made a contract with a rolling-mill company for the making, at the mill, of new rails out of old rails supplied by the railroad, with the addition of new iron to be supplied by the mill; and it was held that if the railroad company furnished the chief or principal part of the material for the new rails, the property in the material and in the new rails as finished remained in the railroad. Arnott v. Kansas Pac. R. Co., 19 Kan. 95.

Manufacture of Shears.—In Mack v. Snell, 140 N. Y. 193, 37 Am. St. Rep. 534, it appeared that there was a contract between the parties relating to the manufacture of a lot of shears, whereby one of the parties was to furnish the principal materials and the other was to add some materials, and manufacture and complete the shears according to a sample agreed upon. It was held that the materials added became the property of the first party by virtue of the law of accession.

The Property in a Rifle with a Skeleton Stock was held to be unchanged because there was fitted thereto a wooden stock, and a new lock was substituted for the old. Comins v. Newton, 10 Allen (Mass.) 518.

When the Article is not Substantially Changed.—An article repaired by the addition of repairer's materials, provided it remains substantially the same thing, belongs, together with the additional materials, to the owner of the original article. Thus, a worn-out wagon, repaired by the addition of materials, though of greater value than the wagon in its worn-out condition, remains, nevertheless, the property of the owner of the wagon. Gregory v. Stryker, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 628.

2. When the Parts are Severable.—In Clark v. Wells, 45 Vt. 4, 12 Am. Rep. 187, it appeared that a wagon was sold by B. to H., with the condition that it was to remain the property of the vendor until the purchase-money was paid; and that the purchase-money was never paid. Afterward, at the instance of H., the plaintiff repaired the wagon by substituting new wheels and axles for the old. H. took the wagon thus repaired from the plaintiff's shop, without his knowledge or consent. Afterward H. gave his note to the plaintiff for such repairs, with the condition and agreement that the running part of said wagon should remain the property of the plaintiff until said note was paid. B. thereafter took possession of the wagon, with the new gear added by the plaintiff, and sold it to the defendant, without knowledge of the plaintiff's claim, whereupon the plaintiff sued the defendant, in trover, for the conversion of the wheels and axles. It was held that the action could be maintained. The court said: "We think the ordinary repairs upon a personal chattel, such as making new bolts, nuts, thills, and the like, become accretions to and merge in the principal thing, and become the property of the general owner. But in this case, the wheels and axles constitute the running part of the wagon. They could be followed, identified, severed without detriment to the wagon, and appropriated to other use without loss. The plaintiff was the owner, and never parted with the property. He had the right to resume possession when H. failed to pay the note. The property remained in him as perfectly as if, in the exigency of a broken wheel or axle, he had loaned them for temporary use. * * * We think, under the facts stated in this case, the property in those wheels and axle continued in the plaintiff, and that an action lies for the conversion."

Relative Value of Completed Product and Original Materials.—The same is true if the completed product is so valuable, in comparison with the value of the original materials, as to justify the position that the original materials are themselves but accessories to the labor performed or materials added, as contributing to the value of the completed thing.¹

Pennsylvania.—Snyder v. Vaux, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 423, 21 Am. Dec. 466.

Specification.—The acquisition of title by a change of species is what is denominated by Blackstone and other text writers "specification." See 2 Black. Com. 404.

When Right by Specification may be Acquired.—"Right by specification," said Robertson, J., in Lampton v. Preston, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 454, 19 Am. Dec. 104, "can only be acquired when, without the accession of any other material, that of another person, which has been used by the operator innocently, has been converted by him into something specifically different in the inherent and characteristic qualities which identify it."

Change must be Sufficient to Destroy Identity.—Even though one is not a wilful trespasser, he acquires no property in another's goods by changing their form, where the change is not sufficient to destroy their identity. Firmin v. Firmin, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 572. See also Gallup v. Josselyn, 7 Vt. 337.

"The civil law," said the court in Betts v. Lee, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 348, 4 Am. Dec. 369, "required the thing to be changed into a different species, and to be incapable of being restored to its ancient form, as grapes made into wine, before the original proprietor could lose his title; nor even then did the other party acquire any title by the accession unless the materials had been taken away in ignorance of their being the property of another."

The Manufacture of Canvas into Sails.—The manufacture of sails out of canvas is not such a change of species as will vest in the manufacturer the title to the sails. The owner of the canvas, therefore, remains the owner of the canvas when made into sails, and may maintain an action of replevin therefor. Eaton v. Munroe, 52 Me. 63.

Grass—Hay.—One who enters upon the land of another and cuts the grass growing thereon, and makes it into hay, does not thereby acquire any property in it. Murphy v. Sioux City, etc., R. Co., 55 Iowa 473; Lindsay v. Winona, etc., R. Co., 29 Minn. 411, 43 Am. Rep. 228.

Trees Made into Boards.—In Davis v. Easley, 13 Ill. 193, the owner of trees wrongfully cut brought replevin for boards made therefrom. In upholding the plaintiff's right to maintain the action, the court declared the general principle that the owner of property wrongfully taken might pursue it, so long as it was capable of identification, whatever alteration in form it might have undergone, unless it was annexed to, or made a part of, some other thing which was the principal; as, for instance, timber converted into a house.

1. The Question of Relative Values.—"No test which satisfies the reason of the law can be applied in the adjustment of questions of title to chattels by accession, unless it keeps in view the circumstance of relative values. When we bear in mind the fact that what the law aims at is the accomplishment of substantial equity, we shall readily perceive that the fact of the value of the materials having been increased a hundredfold, is of more importance in the adjustment than any chemical change or mechanical transformation, which, however radical, neither is expensive to the party making it nor adds materially to the value. There may be complete changes, with so little improvement in value, that there could be no hardship in giving the owner of the original materials the improved article." Cooley, J., in Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311, 7 Am. Rep. 653.

In Lampton v. Preston, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 454, 19 Am. Dec. 104, it appeared that there had been a controversy as to boundary between adjacent landowners, in which one was awarded property which had previously been occupied by another, and upon which there were a number of bricks, some burned and some in an unburned state, which had been manufactured by the occupant. These bricks were claimed by the newly established proprietor and converted to his own use, whereupon the present suit was brought by the unsuccessful litigant in the boundary issue, to recover their value. In this case Robertson, J., took occasion to consider at length the principles of right by "specification" and "accession," as applicable to the facts presented; the conclusion reached being that, in the first particular, the change of species as to the burned brick was sufficiently complete to vest title thereto in the innocent laborer; and with regard to the right by accession, that the value of burned brick was too disproportionate, as compared with that of the original clay, to allow the owner of the latter to claim the brick. The opinion of the court in this case is very interesting, containing, as it does, a full and luminous discussion of the doctrines of title by accession and specification. See also Baker v. Meisch, 29 Neb. 227.

In Lewis v. Courtright, 77 Iowa 190, it appeared that the defendant had purchased what purported to be the right to make hay on plaintiff's wild land, of one whom he believed to be authorized to sell such right, but who had in fact no such authority. The uncut grass was worth not more than ten cents per acre, while the hay made from an acre was worth three or four dollars. The defendant acted in entire good faith, and cut

Test as to Value.—Just what this proportion of values must be does not seem to have been exactly determined; it having merely been held that a change of property should be admitted when the value of that which has been expended upon the original materials is sufficiently great, as compared with the original value, to render the injustice of permitting its appropriation by the original owner "so gross and palpable as to be apparent at the first blush."¹

b. BY WILFUL TRESPASSER.—If a trespasser, with knowledge that the property operated upon belongs to another, wrongfully makes additions thereto or performs labor thereon, the original proprietor will retain title to his original materials and acquire title to the completed product, without regard to the comparative value of the labor performed or materials added,² and without regard to a change of species wrought, provided the original materials can be traced.³ Thus, where corn, the property of one individual, had been no more grass after he was informed that he was proceeding without the owner's authority. The plaintiff sought to recover, not the value of the grass, but of the cured hay. It was held that he could not so recover.

In Vinnius' Institutes, tit. 1, pl. 25, the rule is similarly stated: "He who knows the material is another's ought to be considered in the same light as if he had made the species in the name of the owner, to whom also he is to be understood to have given his labor."

As a general rule, where expense has been bestowed by a wrongdoer upon another's property without changing its form, as by paying freight on it, or the like, he is entitled to no deduction therefor. Kinsey v. Leggett, 71 N. Y. 395.

Timber Converted into Rails and Posts.—In Snyder v. Vaux, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 423, 21 Am. Dec. 466, it was held that replevin would lie for timber converted into rails and posts by a wilful trespasser. "A wilful trespasser," said the court, "cannot acquire title to property merely by changing it from one article into another, as by working trees cut down into shingles, or into cordwood, logs, or rails. And that the law has been so from time immemorial is evident from the year-books, where it is said that whatever alteration of form any property may undergo, the owner thereof may take it in its new shape, provided he can prove the identity of the original materials; as if leather be made into shoes, cloth into a garment, trees squared into timber, or iron made into bars."

The Civil Law.—In Silsbury v. McCoon, 3 N. Y. 379, 53 Am. Dec. 307, Ruggles, J., said: "The acknowledged principle of the civil law is that a wilful wrongdoer acquires no property in the goods of another, either by the wrongful taking or by any change wrought in them by his labor or skill, however great that change may be. The new product in its improved state belongs to the owner of the original materials, provided it be proved to have been made from them; the trespasser loses his labor, and that change which is regarded as a destruction of the goods or an alteration of their identity in favor of an honest possessor, is not so regarded as between the original owner and a wilful violator of his right of property."

made into whiskey by another, a wilful trespasser, it was adjudged that the manufactured product belonged to the owner of the corn.¹

c. LIABILITY OF OWNER FOR COMPENSATION—Involuntary Wrongdoer.—Where a chattel, the property of another, has been improved or added to under a mistake as to its ownership, and remains in the possession of the party who has performed the labor or added the materials, and the latter is sued for the conversion thereof, recovery should be had only to the extent of the value of the original materials, and not the value of the chattel in its improved state.²

Wilful Wrongdoer.—But in an action against a wilful wrongdoer for the taking and conversion of a chattel, where the defendant has increased the value of the thing sued for, the owner is entitled to recover the value of the property in its new form, and the trespasser is not allowed any deduction or compensation for the value of the improvements.³

When no Liability Exists, though there is Honest Mistake.—If the property has come to the possession of the owner of the original materials, the improvement or alteration not having been sufficient to effect a change of title, there is no liability to compensate the other party for the labor performed or materials

1. Silsbury v. McCoon, 3 N. Y. 379, 53 Am. Dec. 307.

2. Measure of Recovery.—Maule, J., in Reid v. Fairbanks, 13 C. B. 729, which was an action of trover for a ship which had been greatly improved after conversion, said: "It may be that the wrongdoer, who acquires no property in the thing he converts, acquires no lien for what he expends upon it, and the owner may bring detinue or trover. But it does not follow that if the owner brings trover he is to recover the full value of the thing in its improved state. The proper measure of damages, as it seems to me, is the amount of the pecuniary loss the plaintiffs have sustained by the conversion of their ship." "That is," said Jervis, C.J., in the same case, "what she was really worth when the defendants converted her."

In Aborn v. Mason, 14 Blatchf. (U. S.) 405, the owner of a certain lot of wool and yarn delivered it to a manufacturer to be made into cloth, at a specified price, it also being provided that the wool and yarn and the product should remain in the various stages of manufacture the property of the original owner of the materials. The manufacturer, after adding a large amount of materials to the original stock, became bankrupt, and the partially manufactured goods came into the possession of his assignee, of whom the owner of the wool and yarn demanded them, offering to pay the charges. The assignee declined to deliver them, but completed their manufacture, expending thereon about eight hundred dollars, and afterwards sold the manufactured product for three thousand two hundred dollars. The owner of the wool and yarn brought an action of trover against the assignee, and it was held that he could recover only the value of his original materials, or, rather, the value of the manufactured product less the materials furnished by the manufacturer, his assignee, and the cost of manufacture. In this case the court said: "But courts have not been satisfied with a rigid rule which would invariably permit a plaintiff to recover the enhanced value without any deduction for the labor and expenses which, in the absence of fraud, have been bestowed upon such property by the defendant, and have not enforced the rule to its full extent." And the following cases were cited: Wood v. Morewood, 3 Q. B. 440, 43 E. L. L. 810; Hilton v. Woods, L. R. 4 Eq. 432; Benjamin v. Benjamin, 15 Conn. 347, 39 Am. Dec. 384.

A case very similar to the one just set forth was that of Hyde v. Cookson, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 95. Here a tanner had agreed to manufacture into leather, and deliver to the plaintiff, a quantity of hides belonging to the latter. After partially doing the work the tanner became insolvent, making an assignment to the defendants, who refused to return the hides to the plaintiff. Thereupon an action was brought against the assignees for the conversion of the hides; and the measure of damages was held to be the value of the plaintiff's interest in the hides, and not their enhanced value, when manufactured into leather.

In Clement v. Duffy, 54 Iowa 635, it is declared that the rule, that one who bestows labor upon another's property, as by taking his grain and threshing it, is not entitled, in an action for the taking, to compensation for his labor, should be limited to wilful wrongdoers.

In Moody v. Whitney, 38 Me. 176, 61 Am. Dec. 239, it was held that the original owner must have possessed himself of the property with its accessions to entitle him to support trover for the value of the article and its improvements, but that a demand on the part of the original owner and refusal by the taker, after it had passed into its improved condition, might be regarded as evidence of a conversion after the first taking, which might admit of a recovery of the enhanced value.

added, even though such other party was under an honest mistake as to ownership.¹

d. WHAT CONSTITUTES A CHANGE OF SPECIES.—There is much confusion of opinion as to what constitutes such an alteration of species or change of identity as to effect a transfer of title to the thing transformed.²

No Settled Rule—Certain Distinctions.—On account of this lack of unanimity, no rule of universal application can be deduced from the authorities, but it may be of advantage to call attention to a distinction which seems to have been made by the decisions on this point, but never clearly recognized; namely, between cases involving the acquisition of title in this manner by a trespasser without wrongful intent, and cases involving the acquisition of title by a wilful wrongdoer. In the latter instance, a simple change of species is not enough to effect a transfer of title to the article thus resulting, if the fact that such article was made from the materials of another is susceptible of proof; while in the former instance the mere loss of apparent identity is said to be sufficient.³

1. Isle Royale Min. Co. v. Hertin, 37 Mich. 332, 26 Am. Rep. 520.

2. Change of Identity.—Ruggles, J., delivering the opinion of the court in Silbury v. McCoon, 3 N. Y. 379, 53 Am. Dec. 307, said: "There is great confusion in the books upon the question what constitutes change of identity. In one case (5 Hen. VII., folio 15) it is said that the owner may reclaim the goods so long as they may be known, or, in other words, ascertained by inspection. But this in many cases is by no means the best evidence of identity, and the examples put by way of illustration serve rather to disprove than to establish the rule. The court say that if grain be made into malt, it cannot be reclaimed by the owner, because it cannot be known. But if cloth be made into a coat, a tree into squared timber, or iron into a tool, it may. Now as to the cases of the coat and the timber, they may or may not be capable of identification by the senses merely; and the rule is entirely uncertain in its application; and as to the iron tool, it certainly cannot be identified as made of the original material, without other evidence. This illustration, therefore, contradicts the rule. In another case (Moore 20) trees were made into timber, and it was adjudged that the owner of the trees might reclaim the timber, 'because the greater part of the substance remained.' But if this were the true criterion, it would embrace the cases of wheat made into bread, milk into cheese, grain into malt, and others which are put in the books as examples of a change of identity. Other writers say that when the thing is so changed that it cannot be reduced from its new form to its former state, its identity is gone. But this would include many cases in which it has been said by the courts that the identity is not gone; as the case of leather made into a garment, logs into timber or boards, cloth into a coat, etc. There is therefore no definite settled rule on this question." See also the observations of Cooley, J., in Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 311, 7 Am. Rep. 653.

The Various Tests Applied.—In the opinion of the court in Lampton v. Preston, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 454, 19 Am. Dec. 104, attention is also called to the lack of unanimity of the decisions as to what constitutes a change of species. The court observes that in some authorities it is said that the proper test of the right of the first owner is the identity of the thing or material; in others, its susceptibility of reduction into the original species; in others, the nonaccession of adventitious value exceeding that of the original material; and in others, the retention, by the material, of its specific character or kind or qualities; and quotes from Justinian, lib. 2, tit. 1, p. 75: "If the species or manufactured article can be reduced to its former rude materials, then the owner of such materials is to be reckoned the owner of the species; but if the species cannot be so reduced, then he who made it is understood to be the owner of it; for example, a vessel can easily be reduced to the rude mass of brass, silver, or gold of which it was made; but wine, oil, or flour cannot be converted into grapes, olives, or corn; neither can mulse be separated into wine and honey. But if a man makes any species, partly with his own and partly with the materials of another, as if he should make mulse with his own wine and another's honey, or should make a garment with an intermixture of his own wool with that of another, it is not to be doubted in such cases but that he who made the species is master of it."

3. Distinction between Cases of Wilful Trespasser and Mere Wrongdoer.—In Silbury v. McCoon, 3 N. Y. 379, 53 Am. Dec. 307, Ruggles, J., said: "There is no satisfactory reason why the wrongful conversion of the original materials into an article of a different name or a different species should work a transfer of the title from the true owner to the trespasser, provided the real identity of the thing can be traced by evidence. The difficulty of proving the identity is not a good reason. It relates merely to the convenience of the remedy, and not at all to the right. There is no more difficulty or uncertainty in proving that the whiskey in question was made of Wood's corn, than there would have been in proving that the plaintiff had made a cup of his gold, or a tool of his iron. * * * In all

2. Mortgagees of Personality—General Rule.—Mortgagees of personality have a lien upon the increment of, and accessions to, the property covered by the mortgage.¹

Articles in Incomplete State.—Where articles in an incomplete state are mortgaged, they become when finished part of the original security.²

Live Stock.—A mortgage upon live stock is said to cover its natural increase and produce.³

Plants and Shrubs.—And it has been held that plants and shrubs, the growth of cuttings from plants and shrubs which were mortgaged, pass to the mortgagee by accession.⁴

cases where the new product cannot be identified by mere inspection, the original material must be traced by the testimony of witnesses from hand to hand through the process of transformation."

In Curtis v. Groat, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 168, 5 Am. Dec. 204, it was held that, where a person entered upon the land of another and cut timber, which he made into coal, such person cannot maintain trover for coal which remains in the possession of the owner of the timber. The court uses this language: "The defendant's timber, by being cut and converted into coal, had, indeed, lost its primitive form, but the identity of the original material was here ascertained or admitted. * * * This case, then, comes within the decision of Betts v. Lee, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 348, 4 Am. Dec. 368, and the principle mentioned in that case, that a wilful trespasser cannot acquire a title to property merely by changing it from one species into another, applies to this case."

Where bricks had been made from the land of another and burned by a party under honest mistake as to the title to the realty, they were held to be the property of the laborer, although proved to have been made from another's earth, and susceptible of reduction to the original species again by a chemical process. Lampton v. Preston, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 454, 19 Am. Dec. 104. See also Riddle v. Driver, 12 Ala. 590; Wetherbee v. Green, 22 Mich. 319, 7 Am. Rep. 653; Wilson v. Nason, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 167; *Benedict v. Rolling Stock.—Repairs and improvements made upon rolling stock, by a company which has, subsequently to the mortgage, acquired the right to control the road, are in the nature of accessions to a mortgaged chattel, and subject first to the mortgage that has priority of date. *Hamlin v. A Mortgage on Leather, cut and prepared for the manufacture of shoes, covers shoes subsequently made from it by the mortgagor. Putnam v. Cushing, 10 Gray (Mass.) 334. In the opinion of the court in this case it was said: "The property still remained in the mortgagee, notwithstanding the change by the completion of the work as originally designed; the materials being cut and prepared therefor before the mortgage. It was not the case of a new acquisition of articles of property not held by the mortgagor at the time of making the mortgage, but merely of labor performed upon materials and stock of the plaintiff, acquired by his mortgage. In such case the accession will pass to the mortgagee."

IV. APPLICATION OF THE DOCTRINE TO PERSONALTY WHEN ANNEXED TO REALTY—

General Rule.—The produce of the soil belongs to the proprietor thereof;¹ and the owner of real property, to which personalty is attached, thereby becomes the owner of the personalty, the chattel being regarded as having become merged in and a part of the realty.²

1. Crops belong to the party who is in lawful possession of the land upon which they are grown. Montgomery v. Merrill, 65 Cal. 432; Reilly v. Ringland, 39 Iowa 106; *Freeman v. It has been held, however, that where a trespasser is in possession of land, and both sows and harvests crops, such crops, after they are gathered, belong to the trespasser, even as against the owner of the land. Lindsay v. Winona, etc., R. Co., 29 Minn. 411, 43 Am. Rep. 228. See also Martin v. Thompson, 62 Cal. 618, 45 Am. Rep. 663.

A Tree which Grows upon the Dividing Line between two property owners will belong to such owners equally. Griffin v. Bixby, 12 N. H. 454, 37 Am. Dec. 225.

Where an action of trespass was brought for carrying away boards, the defendants pleaded, that as the tree from which the boards were made, though the trunk thereof was upon the plaintiff's land, had been nourished and supported by the extension of its roots into the defendant's soil, he, the defendant, had a right to the boards carried away. The court held the plea to be bad, however, observing that the plaintiff could not "limit the roots of the tree, how far they shall grow and go." Masters v. Pollie, 2 Roll. Rep. 141. House Built upon Land of Another.—By the Roman law, a house built upon the land of another, with no matter whose materials, became the property of the owner of the land by the law of accession; for without the land which gives it support, say the writers, the structure could not exist. See 2 Colquhoun Rom. Law, § 991; Ortolan Rom. Law, § 394. See also Aldrich v. Husband, 131 Mass. 480.

Personalty of One Person Attached to Realty of Another by Third Party.—Where a third party attached the personal property of one individual to the land of another, it was held that the owner of the personalty could not be so deprived of his property if it could be moved without great inconvenience and injury. Shoemaker v. Simpson, 16 Kan. 43.

In Reese v. Jared, 15 Ind. 142, 77 Am. Dec. 88, it appeared that J. had employed R. to erect a house on a certain lot, and was to pay him therefor by conveying to him a certain other lot. R. was to furnish the materials. After building the house he discovered that in the agreement under which it was built there were mistakes in the numbers of the lots to be built upon and to be taken in payment. So, apprehending loss to himself, and with a view to prevent it, he sold, while yet in possession thereof, the house he had erected for J., to S., and moved it into a lot belonging to S., placing it upon a permanent brick foundation. J. then sued R. and S., not for the value of the house, but to recover possession of the specific article—the house itself. Perkins, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "When the lumber, out of which the house in question was constructed, was growing in the tree, it was real estate. While at the saw-mill, in the log and lumber, it was personal estate. When erected into a house on a permanent foundation on J.'s lot, it became real estate again. When traveling on rollers from J.'s to S.'s lot, it became a second time personal estate, and when fixed on a permanent foundation on S.'s lot it returned again to its original character of real estate. Whose real estate?" Citing several passages from Bent's Commentaries, the court continued: "According to the above-quoted authority, the recovery in this case should have been the value of the house, not the house itself." And see Russell v. Richards, 11 Me. 371, 26 Am. Dec. 532; Rives v. Dudley, 3 Jones Eq. (N. Car.) 126, 67 Am. Dec. 231.

"It is a principle of law," said the court in Cross v. Marston, 17 Vt. 533, 44 Am. Dec. 353, "that the owner may pursue his property wherever he can trace it. But when the property has lost its identity, it ceases to have its legal existence; as, if one man should convert a quantity of bricks, and erect them into a house, and then deed the house to a third person, these bricks will have lost their identity—they are so changed in their character that they cease to be chattels, and the owner cannot pursue them against such third person."

Qualification.—Where, however, one party contemplates making additions to the real estate of another, as the placing of a structure thereon, the personality may retain its characteristics, and the title thereto be retained by a contract with the owner of the realty to that effect.¹

Building Temporarily upon Land—How Regarded.—When a building is but temporarily upon and not attached to land, as during its transit from one lot to another, it is regarded as personal property. Titus v. Mabee, 25 Ill. 257; Salter v. Sample, 71 Ill. 430.

Buildings Covered by Mortgage.—When buildings covered by a mortgage are removed to and attached to another freehold, not included in the mortgage, they become a part of such freehold, and are lost to the mortgagee. Harris v. Bannon, 78 Ky. 568; Tomlinson v. Thompson, 27 Kan. 72.

The case of Peirce v. Goddard, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 559, 33 Am. Dec. 764, was submitted on an agreed statement of facts, by which it appeared that D., being the owner of a lot of land with a dwelling-house thereon, mortgaged the same to the plaintiff; afterwards he took down the house, and with the materials thereof partly, and partly with new materials, built a new house on another lot of his own at some distance; and after the new house was completed, he, for a valuable consideration, sold the last-mentioned lot and house to the defendant. There were two counts in the declaration—one for the conversion of the newly erected house, and the other for the conversion of the materials with which it was built, belonging to the old house. The plaintiff's counsel insisted that the old house was the property of the plaintiff, and that D. had no right to take it down, and could not therefore acquire any property in the materials by such a wrongful act; that the new house, being built from the materials of the old house in part, became the property of the plaintiff, although new materials were added, by the right of accession; and that D., having no property in the house as against the plaintiff, could convey no title to it to the defendant. It was held, however, that the materials of which the house was built became the property of the owner of the land by the law of accession. The court in this case cite the rule as laid down by Chancellor Kent, in volume 2 of his Commentaries, pp. 360, 361: "If," he says, "A builds a house on his own land with the materials of another, the property in the land vests the property in the building by right of accession, and the owner of the land would only be obliged to answer to the owner of the materials for the value of them."

In Bro., tit. Property, pl. 23, it is said that if timber be taken and made into a house, it cannot be reclaimed by the owner, for the nature of it is changed, and it has become a part of the freehold.

1. Agreement that House shall Remain Personalty.—An agreement between parties that a house shall remain personal property is effectual. Sagar v. Eckert, 3 Ill. App. 412; Walton v. Wray, 54 Iowa 531.

Agreement for Tenant to Remove House within Limited Time.—An agreement, however, which merely gives the tenant the right to remove a structure within thirty days after notice of the termination of the lease, does not constitute such building personalty. Stafford v. Adair, 57 Vt. 63.

Subsequent Purchaser: How Affected by such Agreements.—In Sullivan v. Jones, 14 S. Car. 362, it was decided that an agreement that mill-stones placed in a mill should remain personalty, was valid and effectual, and might be enforced even against a subsequent owner of the mill. It has been held, however, in another case, to be a general rule that the owner of real property cannot, by agreement between himself and another, make that which is a part of the realty, personal property, as against a subsequent purchaser of the land for value and without notice, there having been no actual severance when the subsequent grant was made. Lacus-trine Fertilizer Co. v. Lake Guano, etc., Co., 82 N. Y. 476.

Consent of Owner of Land to Erection of House.—Where the owner of land consents to the erection of a building thereon, with the materials and for the use of another, such use being disconnected from the use of the land, the building will remain the property of the builder with whose materials it was made. Corwin Dist. Tp. v. Moorehead, 43 Iowa 466. And see Rush County v. Stubbs, 25 Kan. 322.

Intention.—Even though a structure, by reason of its not being attached to the soil, would not be regarded as realty ordinarily, it may become a part of the real property upon which it rests if an intention to that effect is manifested. Freeman v. Lynch, 8 Neb. 192; Doscher v. Blackiston, 7 Oregon 143; Lipsky v. Borgmann, 52 Wis. 256, 38 Am. Rep. 735.

I. DEFINITIONS—Accessory Generally.—An accessory is one who is not the chief actor in a felonious offense, nor present at its performance, but is in some way concerned therein, either before or after the act committed.¹

1. 4 Bl. Com. 34; U. S. v. Hartwell, 3 Cliff. (U. S.) 227; Able v. Com., 5 Bush (Ky.) 698; Connaughty v. State, 1 Wis. 171, 60 Am. Dec. 370.

An accessory is "one who participates in a felony too remotely to be deemed a principal." 1 Bishop New Crim. Law, § 663.

1 C. of L.—17.

These definitions embody the common-law conception of an accessory. Statutory definitions have substantially changed the meaning of the term in several states. Thus, in the Illinois Criminal Code the term is so defined as to include principals in the second degree. 1 Starr & Curtis's Illinois Annot. Stats. 828, ¶ 331.

Accessory Before the Fact.—An accessory before the fact is one who, being absent at the time the crime is committed, yet procures, counsels, or commands another to commit it.¹

Accessory After the Fact.—An accessory after the fact is one who, knowing the felony to have been committed, receives, relieves, comforts, or assists the felon.²

II. ACCESSORY DISTINGUISHED FROM PRINCIPAL³—1. Constructive Presence.—It results from the definitions that absence from the scene of the crime is necessary to constitute an accessory either before or after the fact.⁴ The most ancient authorities of the law recognized a third species of accessories, namely, accessories at the fact. These, however, were at an early period distinguished as principals in the second degree, or aiders and abettors. To bring one within this class, his presence at the commission of the felony is necessary; but it is held a presence, in construction of law, if he is near enough to render assistance to the main design should the need arise.⁵ Thus, constructive presence may be actual absence. But in all cases the accused is an accessory merely, if he is too far from the scene of the crime to render assistance if the occasion should arise.⁶

Mr. Bishop's definition, quoted in Spear v. Hiles, 67 Wis. 361, is "a person whose will contributes to a felony committed by another as principal, while he himself is too far away to aid in the felonious act." 1 Bishop New Crim. Law, § 673.

Accessories before the fact are termed accomplices in the Penal Code of Texas. Cook v. State, 14 Tex. App. 101; Ogle v. State, 16 Tex. App. 361.

Com., 11 Bush (Ky.) 154; State v. Cassady, 12 Kan. 423; Harris v. State, 7 Lea (Tenn.) 124; Warden v. State, 24 Ohio St. 146.

3. Principal and Accessory Before the Fact Distinguished.—In State v. Poynier, 36 La. Ann. 572, Manning, J., observed: "The distinction between principals and accessories before the fact is in most cases a distinction without a difference, and often requires nice and subtle verbal refinements to express it. In some of our states it has been abolished by statute—in others, judicial decisions have attenuated it until it is perceptible only by a close mental effort. The fact is, it is not a creature of statutory law, but wholly of judicial construction, the origin of which is so vague and indeterminate that the text-writers have not found out where to place it. It is supposed to have originated at a time when criminal lawyers puzzled their wits and taxed their ingenuity to invent metaphysical shades of distinction, such for instance as that between principals and accessories at the fact, which once existed but is now exploded. The distinction between principals and accessories before the fact is fast following its kindred technical refinement."

4. Absence Necessary to Constitute an Accessory.

—If the party were present when the offense was committed, he is not an accessory. Rex v. Gordon, 1 Leach C. C. 515; 1 East P. C. 352; Rex v. Butteris, 6 C. & P. 147. See Reg. v. Brown, 14 Cox C. C. 144; Able v. Com., 5 Bush (Ky.) 698; Hatley v. State, 15 Ga. 346; Dugger v. State, 27 Tex. App. 95; U. S. v. Hartwell, 3 Cliff. (U. S.) 221; State v. Farr, 33 Iowa 561; 4 Bl. Com. 35. See also remarks of Shope, J., in Usselson v. People, 149 Ill. 612.

How Modified by some of the Criminal Codes.—But it is otherwise under the peculiar definition of the criminal codes of some of the states: "An accessory is he who stands by, and aids, abets or assists, or who, not being present, aiding, abetting or assisting, hath advised, encouraged, aided or abetted the perpetration of the crime." 1 Starr & Cur. Illinois Annot. Stats. 828, § 331; Usselson v. People, 149 Ill. 612. So in Nevada, see State v. Hamilton, 13 Nev. 386. See also statutes of California. See also infra this title, Dependence of Accessory on Principal—As Modified by Statute.

5. See the title AIDER AND ABETTOR; see also 1 Russell's Crim. L. 49.

6. 1 Hawk P. C. c. 29, § 16; State v. Poynier, 36 La. Ann. 577; State v. Hamilton, 13 Nev. 386; Reg. v. Tuckwell, Car. & M. 215; Wixson v. People, 5 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 119; Rex v. Kelly, R. & R. C. 421. "The last cited case," says Sir James Stephen, Dig. Crim. L. art. 37, note, "perhaps marks the line between a principal in the second degree and an accessory. In that case B. stole horses and brought them to A., who was waiting half a mile off; A. and B. then rode away on them. It was held that A. was an accessory before the fact."

"Although an act be committed in pursuance of a previously concerted plan between the parties, those who are not present, or so near as to be able to afford aid and assistance at the time when the offense is committed, are not principals." Per Goldthwaite, J., in State v. Wisdom, 8 Port. (Ala.) 511, citing Rex v. Soares, R. & R. 25; Rex v. Davis, R. & R. 113; Archbold's Crim. L. 44.

2. Actors in a Common Criminal Design.—The principle that, where several persons are engaged in a common criminal design, with a distribution of the parts, and each takes the part assigned to him, all are equally guilty, is often applied to distinguish principal from accessory.¹

3. Principal Ex Necessitate.—Where the nature of the means employed to

For obvious reasons the tendency of the courts has been to consider parties, though at a distance from the scene of crime, as aiders and abettors, that is principals, rather than accessories. See the title AIDER AND ABETTOR. Since the passage of statutes making the offense of an accessory before the fact a substantive felony of the same grade as that of the principal criminal, the distinction has become unimportant and practically obsolete.

1. When all the Participants are Principals—Accomplices and Principals Distinguished.—Com. v. Ahearn, 160 Mass. 300; Reg. v. Kelly, 2 C. & K. 379; 61 E. C. L. 3; Rex v. Standley, R. & R. C. C. 305; State v. Nash, 7 Iowa 347; State v. Shelledy, 8 Iowa 479; State v. Myers, 19 Iowa 517; State v. Heyward, 2 Nott. & M. (S. Car.) 312; 10 Am. Dec. 604; Trimble v. State (Tex. Crim. App., 1894), 26 S. W. Rep. 727. See also the title CRIMINAL CONSPIRACY.

In Smith v. State, 21 Tex. App. 123, it is said, collecting the authorities in that state: "We believe that the distinction drawn by us between principal offenders and accomplices as known to our code has been as clearly and accurately stated as we are able to present it, in the cases of Cook v. State, 14 Tex. App. 96, and Bean v. State, 17 Tex. App. 61. In the former case it is said: 'We are of opinion that the proper distinction between these two characters of offenders is this: The acts constituting an accomplice are auxiliary only, all of which may be and are performed by him anterior and as inducements to the crime about to be committed; whilst the principal offender not only may perform some antecedent act in furtherance of the commission of the crime, but, when it is actually committed, is doing his part of the work assigned him in connection with the plan and furtherance of the common purpose, whether he be present where the main fact is to be accomplished or not. Where the offense is committed by the perpetration of different parts which constitute one entire whole, it is not necessary that the offenders should be in fact together at the perpetration of the offense, to render them liable as principals. In other words, an accomplice under our statute is one who has completed his offense before the crime is actually committed, and whose liability attaches after its commission by virtue of his previous acts in bringing it about through the agency or in connection with third parties. The principal offender acts his part individually in furtherance of and during the consummation of the crime.' In Bean v. State it is said: 'The dividing line between the two is the commencement of the commission of the principal offense. If the parties acted together in the commission of the offense, they are principals. If they agreed to commit the offense together, but did not act together in its commission, the one who actually committed it is the principal, while the other, who is not present at the commission, and who was not in any way aiding in its commission, as by keeping watch or by securing the safety or concealment of the principal, would be an accomplice. To constitute a principal, the offender must either be present where the crime is committed or he must do some act during the time when the offense is being committed which connects him with the act of commission in some of the ways named in the statute. Where the acts committed occur prior to the commission of the principal offense, or subsequent thereto, and are independent of, and disconnected with, the actual commission of the principal offense, and no act is done by the party during the commission of the principal offense, such a party is not a principal offender, but is an accomplice or an accessory according to the facts.' In Welsh v. State, 3 Tex. Ct. 413, where the employer ordered his servants to take all the cattle they could find, and that in the meantime he would go ahead and make arrangements to ship or sell them, he was held to be a principal offender, because he was engaged at the time of the theft in performing his part in the consummation of the conspiracy to steal and dispose of them. In Scale v. State, 7 Tex. App. 361, part of the conspirators were to steal the horses in question, whilst the rest were to get up provisions and an outfit to enable them all jointly to take the horses to Fort Elliott and sell them. (See statement in McKeen v. State, 7 Tex. App. 631.) They were all held principal offenders because doing their separate parts and acting together in consummating the conspiracy. In McC Campbell v. State, 9 Tex. App. 124, 35 Am. Rep. 726, it is said: 'If the facts should show an actual participancy by appellant in the original fraudulent taking, a conviction may be sustained for the offense charged, although the appellant may not have been personally present at such taking.' In Cohea v. State, 9 Tex. App. 173, it is said: 'He need not be actually present at the taking, if the act was committed in pursuance of a common intent and a previously formed design where the mind united and concurred with that of the actual taker.'"

One of the Confederates Signalling to the Others—A Principal.—In State v. Hamilton, 13 Nev. 386, one Laurie had conspired with others to rob a stage on the road from Eureka to some point in Nye County. Laurie was to observe when the stage left Eureka, and by building a fire on a mountain in Eureka County to signal his confederates in Nye County, thirty or forty miles off. On the principle that by building such fire he acted a part in a common criminal design, he was held to be a principal. See also State v. Tally (Ala., 1894), 15 So. Rep. 722.

Party Absent from the Scene to Facilitate Commission of the Crime—A Principal.—In State v. Poynier, 36 La. Ann. 572, it is held that one who, with knowledge that a crime has been determined on, keeps away from the scene to facilitate its execution, is a principal, although not near enough to give assistance physically.

effect the crime is such that the criminal is absent when the crime is accomplished, his absence does not make him an accessory, but he is ex necessitate the principal.¹

4. Acting through Innocent Agent.—If one accomplishes a criminal design through the instrumentality of an innocent agent, he is the principal; but if the agent is himself privy to the criminal intent, the absent director of the crime is but an accessory.²

III. WHO MAY BE AN ACCESSORY.—One may be an accessory by procuring a crime, although such procurer is incompetent to commit the offense in person, by reason of age, sex, condition, or class.³

IV. OFFENSES WHICH ADMIT OF ACCESSORIES—Common Law Felony.—By the common law only crimes of the grade of felony admit of accessories.⁴

Statutory Felony.—Statutory felonies have, in this respect, the incidents of felonies at common law, and consequently admit of accessories,⁵ and so with general statutory definitions of felony.⁶

Treason.—All in any way concerned in the higher crime of treason are principals.⁷

1. Thus, where one lays poison, or prepares a trap or pitfall, for another, he is ex necessitate the principal. 4 Bl. Com. 34. 35.

If A. gives B. a forged note in order that B. may utter it, if the latter is ignorant of the note being forged, the uttering by the latter is the uttering of the former although A. was absent at the time of the actual uttering. Rex v. Palmer, 1 New Rep. 96, 2 Leach 978. So too where a counterfeit is passed by an innocent boy, acting for a guilty principal. Com. v. Hill, 11 Mass. 136; Gregory v. State, 26 Ohio St. 510, 20 Am. Rep. 774. But if he who received the note knew that it was forged, the person who gave it is but an accessory. Rex v. Soares, R. & R. C. C. 25.

3. See U. S. v. Bayer, 4 Dill. (U. S.) 407; State v. Sprague, 4 R. I. 257; U. S. v. Snyder, 14 Fed. Rep. 554; State v. Comstock, 46 Iowa 265; Lord Audley's Case, 3 How. St. Tr. 413; People v. Chapman, 62 Mich. 280; People v. McKane (N. Y., 1894), 38 N. E. Rep. 950.

A man may be accessory before the fact in stealing his own goods, if he procure another to do so with a felonious design. Cro. Eliz. 537.

The majority of the cases cited concern aiders and abettors, but the principle is announced as to accessories before the fact as well, and evidently applies to them. There is no reason in principle why the same should not be true of accessories after the fact, but no cases seem to have arisen.

Petit Larceny.—Petit larceny, although a felony at common law (2 East Cr. L. 736; 3 Chitt. Cr. L. 924), never admitted of accessories. 1 Hale P. C. 530; Foster 73; Rex v. Evans, Foster 73; 2 East P. C. 744; Ward v. People, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 395, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 144; State v. Goode, 1 Hawks (N. Car.) 463; State v. Barden, 1 Dev. (N. Car.) 518. And in states where all larceny has been reduced to the grade of petit larceny by statute, there can be no accessories. State v. Fox, 94 N. Car. 928; State v. Gaston, 73 N. Car. 93, 21 Am. Rep. 459.

5. Where an act of parliament declares an offense to be felony, though it mentions nothing of accessories before or after, yet virtually and consequentially those that counsel or command the offense are accessories before the fact, and those who knowingly receive the offender are accessories after. 1 Hale P. C. 614; 3 Inst. 59; Rex v. Bear, 2 Salk. 417; Reg. v. Tracy, 6 Mod. 30; Rex v. Sadi, 1 Leach C. C. 468; Rex v. Soares, R. & R. 25; U. S. v. Wilson, Baldw. (U. S.) 104; Hughes v. State, 12 Ala. 458; Meister v. People, 31 Mich. 99; State v. Pybass, 4 Humph. (Tenn.) 442. Yet while this is the presumption, a clear expression of the legislative will overcomes it, and the whole becomes largely a question of statutory construction. 1 Hale P. C. 614; Meister v. People, 31 Mich. 99. See Stamper v. Com., 7 Bush (Ky.) 612.

6. Where a statute defines felony as an offense for which the punishment is imprisonment in the state prison, every such offense admits of accessories before the fact. Nichols v. State, 35 Wis. 308.

7. Treason.—Every act of incitement, aid, or protection, which in felony would render a man accessory before or after the fact, in the case of high treason (whether by common law or by statute) makes him a principal. 2 Inst. 183; 1 Hale P. C. 613; 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 29, § 2, 5; Foster 341; 4 Bl. Com. 35; 1 Roscoe Cr. Ev. (8 Am. ed.) 181; Throgmorton's Case, 1 Dyer 98 b. pl. 56; Somerville Case, 1 Anderson 109; Anonymous, J. Parker*, 1 Mill (S. Car.) 333; State v. Lymburn, 1 Brev. (S. Car.) 397; State v. Goode, 1 Hawks (N. Car.) 463. High treason at common law is the only treason known to American law, or to English law since the statute 9 Geo. IV. chap. 31, abolishing petit treason, and high treason has become simply treason.

The Maxim, "in Treason all are Principals," Considered.—While the cases all announce that Misdemeanor.—The same is true in regard to the lower offenses which are misdemeanors.¹

"in treason all are principals," or that "there are no accessories in treason," the application of this principle is involved in doubt. In Queen v. Tracy, 6 Mod. 30, Lord Holt said: "It is to be known that a fact which will make one accessory in felony, in treason and trespass make him a principal; and sure one may leave the matter either way, viz., making him principal or laying it special, as the case may appear upon evidence. In treason all are principals, and if upon statute 25 Edw. III. c. 2, one conspires the death of the queen and is committed to prison for the same, and one procures him to escape or harbor him after such time as he knows him charged with treason, or to have committed treason, you may indict him upon the special matter that A. committed treason and that B. knew of it and received him, and yet this is not one of the treasons mentioned by that statute, but it is so by necessary consequences of law."

If this dictum be correct the indictment may be either special or against the defendant as principal. If the accessory may be indicted as principal it would naturally result that he may be tried independently of and before the actual principal. But the authorities are otherwise.

In U. S. v. Burr, 4 Cranch (U. S.) 469, Marshall, C. J., after examining the reason of the rule requiring the trial of the principal to precede that of the accessory in felonies, said: "The whole reason of the law, then, relative to the principal and accessory, so far as respects the order of trial seems to apply in full force to a case of treason committed by one body of men in conspiracy with others who are absent. If from reason we pass to authority, we find it laid down by Hale, Foster, and East, in the most explicit terms, that the conviction of some one who has committed the treason must precede the trial of him who has advised or procured it. This position is also maintained by Leach, in his notes on Hawkins, and is not, so far as the court has discovered, anywhere contradicted." This seems to reduce the rule that there can be no accessories to treason to an empty form of words. Chief Justice Marshall, going further, seems inclined to hold that the whole doctrine of accessorial treason has no application to treason as defined in the Constitution of the United States. In the same case he says: "The authority of the English cases on this subject depends in a great measure on the adoption of the common-law doctrine of accessorial treasons. If that doctrine be excluded, this branch of it may not be directly applicable to treasons committed within the United States. If the crime of advising or procuring a levying of war be within the constitutional definition of treason, then he who advises or procures it must be indicted on the very fact, and the question whether the reasonableness of the act may be decided, in the first instance, in the trial of him who procured it, or must be decided in the trial of one who committed it, will depend upon the reason, as it respects the law of evidence, which produced the British decisions with regard to the trial of principal and accessory, rather than on the positive authority of those decisions."

1. Misdemeanors.—1 Hale P. C. 613; 4 Bl. Com. 36; U. S. v. Mills, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 138; Scott v. State, 30 Ala. 503; English v. State, 35 Ala. 428; Hubbard v. State, 10 Ark. 378; Sanders v. State, 18 Ark. 198; Kinnebrew v. State, 80 Ga. 232; Stratton v. State, 45 Ind. 468; Lay v. State (Ind. App., 1895), 39 N. E. Rep. 768; State v. Gurnee, 14 Kan. 111; State v. Ruby, 68 Me. 543; State v. Murdock, 71 Me. 454; Com. v. Dale, 144 Mass. 363; Williams v. State, 12 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 59; Hogsett v. State, 40 Miss. 522; Wagner v. State (Neb., 1894), 61 N. W. Rep. 85; State v. Dowell, 106 N. Car. 722, 19 Am. St. Rep. 568; People v. Lyon, 99 N. Y. 210; State v. Munson, 25 Ohio St. 381; Curlin v. State, 4 Yerg. (Tenn.) 143. The general doctrine is thus stated by Dick, D. J., in U. S. v. Sykes, 58 Fed. Rep. 1000: "In misdemeanors, any person who advises, procures, aids, or abets in the commission of the offense, or who, having knowledge that such offense has been committed, in any way assists the wrongdoer in concealing his crime or in making his escape from the officers of the law, is a principal; the general rule of law being that whatsoever participation in the transactions either before or after the fact would make the party an accessory in felony will make him a principal in a misdemeanor, and he may be so charged in a bill of indictment." The statement of this rule of law is usually limited to accessories before the fact. Participation in misdemeanors after the fact is committed is hardly noticed by the law. See Stratton v. State, 45 Iowa 468; Kinnebrew v. State, 80 Ga. 232.

In U. S. v. Gooding, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 460, Story, J., said: "Under such circumstances [in misdemeanors] there is no room for the question of actual or constructive presence or absence; for whether present or absent, all are principals. They may be indicted and punished accordingly. Nor is the trial or conviction of an actor indispensable to furnish a right to try the person who aids or abets the act; each in the eye of the law is deemed guilty as a principal."

Reason of the Rule.—The reason of this rule of the law is thus stated by Blackstone, 4 Com. 36: "In trespass" (and trespass is here to be taken in its wide sense as equivalent to misdemeanor, see 1 Bish. New Crim. L. § 625; Anderson's Dict of Law, sub voce) "all are principals, because the law, qua de minimis non curat, does not descend to distinguish the different shades of guilt in petty misdemeanors."

Illustrations.—Thus, one who employs another to commit, or incites another to, any of the following offenses is a principal:

Assault and Battery.—Rex v. Jackson, 1 Lev. 124; State v. McClintock, 8 Iowa 203; Bell v. Miller, 5 Ohio 250; Baker v. State, 12 Ohio St. 214; State v. Lymburn, 1 Brev. (S. Car.) 397; Dunman v. State, 1 Tex. App. 593.

Assault with Intent to Commit Rape.—State v.

Manslaughter.—Since from the nature of the offense there can be no deliberation or premeditation in manslaughter, it follows that there can be no accessories before the fact therein,⁷ but there may be accessories after the fact.⁸

Forgery.—In forgery, it was anciently laid down that there could be no accessories, but this applies only to forgery at the common law, which was but a misdemeanor.⁹

V. DEPENDENCE OF ACCESSORY ON PRINCIPAL—1. At Common Law.—The conception which was the basis of the whole doctrine of accessories at the common law, was that of an offense at once distinct and dependent.¹

In what Manner Distinct.—It was distinct, so that it was necessary to draw the in-

For a Discussion of Exceptions to the Rule as to misdemeanors, see Harney v. State, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 113, where a student buying liquor within four miles of an incorporated institution of learning, where the law forbade a sale within such limits, was held not to be guilty of the offense.

A Few Cases cast some Doubt upon the Rule as to misdemeanors. See Rex v. Else, R. & R. C. C. 142; Hatley v. State, 15 Ga. 346. But these have been expressly overruled and disapproved in Reg. v. Greenwood, 2 Den. C. C. 453; Killebrew v. State, 80 Ga. 232.

In Illinois, under the statutory definition of accessories, there may be accessories in misdemeanors as in felonies. Van Meter v. People, 60 Ill. 168.

7. Manslaughter.—1 Hale P. C. 616, citing Rex v. Bibithe, 2 Rep. 43; Adams v. State, 65 Ind. 565; State v. Desmond, 5 La. Ann. 398. Yet in some cases there may be accessories to manslaughter. In Reg. v. Gaylor, 7 Cox C. C. 253; Dears. & B. C. C. 288, the prisoner had procured certain drugs and gave them to his wife, with intent that she should take them in order to produce abortion. She took them in his absence and died from their effects. On an indictment against him for manslaughter, it was objected that he was only an accessory before the fact, and that in law there cannot be an accessory before the fact to manslaughter. It was held that he was properly found guilty of manslaughter. During the argument, Bramwell, B., said: "Suppose a man for mischief give another a strong dose of medicine, not intending any further injury than to cause him to be sick and uncomfortable, and death ensues, would not that be manslaughter? Suppose, then, another had counselled him to do it, would not he who counselled be an accessory before the fact?" See also People v. Newberry, 20 Cal. 440; Stipp v. State, 11 Ind. 62; State v. Bogue, 52 Kan. 79.

8. No Accessories Before the Fact in Manslaughter.—In Rex v. Greenacre, 8 Car. & P. 35; 34 E. C. L. 280, Greenacre was indicted for murder, and Gale as accessory after the fact. It was held that if the offense of Greenacre was reduced to manslaughter, Gale might, notwithstanding, be found guilty as accessory after the fact. In charging the jury, Tindal, C. J., said: "It will not be necessary, in order to find the prisoner Gale guilty of the offense with which she is charged, that the prisoner Greenacre should have been guilty of murder; but if he was guilty of another felony, viz., the offense of manslaughter, if she consorted with him, and, knowing that he had committed the offense, assisted in any way to screen him from the hand of justice, it will be sufficient." See Reg. v. Richards, L. R. 2 Q. B. Div. 311.

1. In Stoops v. Com., 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 491; 10 Am. Dec. 482, Duncan, J., said: "The offense of the accessory, though different from that of the principal, is yet, in judgment of law, connected with it, and cannot subsist without it."

dictment against the accessory as such, and if the evidence showed the accused to be a principal, there could be no conviction,¹ and a trial and acquittal in one capacity was no bar to indictment in the other.²

In what Manner Dependent.—Its dependence was embodied in the maxim accessorius sequitur naturam sui principalis, the accessory follows the nature of his principal. From this it results: first, that the accessory cannot be guilty of a greater offense than his principal; and, second, that it is necessary to establish the guilt of the principal before the accessory can be tried.³

Statute of Limitations.—It has been held that accessory and principal are so far identified that the Statute of Limitations runs against the former no more than against the latter.⁴

2. As Modified by Statute—Accessory Before the Fact.—The tendency of modern legislation as concerns accessories before the fact has been to do away with the technical rules, by the operation of which the offense of the accessory was regarded as derivative and dependent. Some statutes in addition to retaining the common-law remedies against such offenders provide that they may be indicted and convicted of a substantive felony whether the principal offender shall or shall not have been convicted.⁵ Under other statutes the distinctions between principals and accessories before the fact have been practically swept away, and the latter are regarded merely as substantive offenders whose guilt is wholly independent of that of the principal.⁶

In the opinion in the last case all the authorities are reviewed by Smith, J., and the opinion of Lord Hale (1 P. C. 625, 626; 2 P. C. 244) that one acquitted on a charge of being principal could not afterwards be indicted as accessory before the fact is shown to have been finally overruled, and the errors of Mr. Wharton, § 532 Am. Crim. Law, are pointed out. See also State v. Buzzell, 58 N. H. 257; 42 Am. Rep. 586; Reynolds v. People, 83 Ill. 479; 25 Am. Rep. 410.

Under modern statutes, whereby one may be indicted as principal and punished on evidence of being an accessory before the fact, or (in some jurisdictions) indicted as an accessory and convicted as principal, this must be otherwise.

3. 4 Bl. Com. 36; U. S. v. Burr, 4 Cranch (U. S.) 469. This principle appears at every point in the common-law rules regulating the indictment and trial of accessories. Thus, the indictment against an accessory must aver the principal's guilt. Rex v. Baldwin, 3 Camp. 265; Jordan v. State, 56 Ga. 92; Ulmer v. State, 14 Ind. 52; *Tully v. The accessory could be tried only after the conviction or outlawry of the principal unless both were tried together. Foster, 360; 1 Hale P. C. 623; U. S. v. Burr, 4 Cranch (U. S.) 503; Ex parte Bowen, 25 Fla. 214; Simmons v. State, 4 Ga. 465; Edwards v. State, 80 Ga. 127; Harty v. State, 3 Blackf. (Ind.) 386; Com. v. Phillips, 16 Mass. 426; State v. York, 37 N. (Tenn.) 442. On the trial of the accessory proof of the principal's guilt was essential. See infra this title, Evidence.

4. The Crime of an Accessory Before the Fact to a Murder is Murder, and is not barred by the Statute of Limitations. People v. Mather, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 256.

5. Such is the statute of 7 Geo. IV. c. 64, which has been followed by many of the states of the Union. When the indictment is for a substantive offense under such a statute, proof of the principal's guilt seems essential. State v. Ricker, 29 Me. 84. See Tully v. Com., 11 Bush (Ky.) 154.

6. Accessory Before the Fact Regarded as Substantive Offender.—Thus, one may be indicted as a principal and convicted on evidence which at common law would have established that he was an accessory before the fact. Reg. v. Manning, 2 C. & K. 886, 61 E. C. L. 886; Wicks v. State, 44 Ala. 398; Raiford v. State, 59 Ala. 106; Griffith v. State, 90 Ala. 583; Jolly v. State, 94 Ala. 19; People v. Outeveras, 48 Cal. 19 (overruling earlier cases); People v. Rozelle, 78 Cal. 84; Minich v. People, 8 Colo. 451; State v. Hamlin,

Accessory After the Fact.—The guilt of an accessory after the fact is still regarded as derivative, as at common law; but many modern statutes provide that such an accessory may be indicted and tried whether the principal offender has or has not been previously convicted, or has been pardoned, or is or is not amenable to justice.¹

VI. ACCESSORY BEFORE THE FACT—1. Generally.—In order that a person may be guilty as an accessory before the fact, it is necessary, first, that he should have shared the criminal or mischievous design of the principal felon; and, second, that that design should have been substantially effected through his incitement thereto.

2. Intent.—There must be a criminal design,² but it is immaterial whether it

People*, 49 Ill. 410; Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 242; Usselson v. People, 149 Ill. 612; Wade v. State, 71 Ind. 535; Bonsell v. U. S., 1 Green (Iowa) 111; State v. Comstock, 46 Iowa 265; State v. Hessian, 58 Iowa 68; State v. Empey, 79 Iowa 460; State v. Baldwin, 79 Iowa 714; State v. Pugsley, 75 Iowa 742; State v. Cassady, 12 Kan. 551; State v. Beebe, 17 Minn. 241; State v. Fredericks, 85 Mo. 145; State v. Orrick, 106 Mo. 111; State v. Chapman, 6 Nev. 320; People v. Blivins, 112 N. Y. 79; 8 Am. Rep. 701; People v. Batterson, 50 Hun (N. Y.) 44; Campbell v. Com., 84 Pa. St. 187; Brandt v. Com., 94 Pa. St. 290; Com. v. Hughes, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 430; State v. Duncan, 7 Wash. 336. So it seems in Massachusetts under the Massachusetts Gen. Sts. § 168, s. 4. Com. v. Wallace, 108 Mass. 12. And so by statute in Mississippi. See Mississippi Annotated Code (1890), § 950.

In Arkansas one who incites to felony can only be indicted as an accessory. Smith v. State, 37 Ark. 274; Williams v. State, 41 Ark. 173.

In Ohio one indicted for forgery cannot be convicted on proof that he induced the crime, being absent. Chidester v. State, 25 Ohio St. 433, but compare Hanoff v. State, 37 Ohio St. 178; 41 Am. Rep. 496; Wilson v. State (Ohio), 2 Cin. Ct. Rep. 40.

In Virginia the accessory must be indicted as such and cannot be indicted for a substantive felony. Hatchett v. Com., 75 Va. 925.

1. See e.g., Stat. 24 and 25 Vict. c. 94, § 3; New York Pen. Code, § 32. Cf. Reg. v. Fallon, 1 L. & C. 217.

So an accessory after the fact cannot be indicted as a principal. People v. Gassaway, 28 Cal. 405; People v. Keefer, 65 Cal. 232; State v. Allen, 37 La. Ann. 685; Wade v. State, 71 Ind. 535; State v. Jones, 3 Wash. 175.

In Iowa, quære whether an accessory after the fact is indictable and punishable as a principal. State v. Empey, 79 Iowa 460.

2. Criminal Design Necessary.—Where persons are indicted as accessories to an assault with intent to kill, they cannot be convicted unless there was a common purpose in the minds of the principal and the defendants to kill, and the assault was done in the attempt to accomplish such common purpose, or unless the assault was made by the principal with an intent in his mind to kill, of which the defendants had knowledge, and they did some act in furtherance of the attempted accomplishment of such purpose. State v. Hickam, 95 Mo. 322; 6 Am. St. Rep. 54.

To constitute one an accessory before the fact to the felony of uttering a forged note, he must have known when he gave the advice that the note was forged; otherwise he has done no wrong. State v. Seran, 28 N. J. L. 519.

If a particular intent is an essential element in the crime, an accessory before the fact must participate in such intent. Wagner v. State (Neb., 1894), 61 N. W. Rep. 85.

In Hicks v. U. S., 150 U. S. 443, H. was indicted jointly with R. for the murder of C. Before the day of trial R. was killed, whereupon H. was tried separately. It was clearly proved at the trial that H. did not kill C., nor take any part in the physical struggle which resulted in his death at the hands of R. There was evidence tending to show that by his language and gestures H. abetted R. The court instructed the jury that if the facts show that he either aided or abetted or advised or encouraged R., he was made a participant in the crime as thoroughly and completely as though he had with his own hand fired the shot which took the life of the man killed. This instruction was held error, the court saying: "It omitted to instruct the jury that the acts or words of encouragement and abetting must have been used by the accused with the intention of encouraging and abetting R. So far as the instruction goes, the words may have been used for a different purpose, and yet have had the actual effect of inciting R. to commit the murderous act."

It is necessary in all cases that the accessory have the same intent with the principal. Meister v. People, 31 Mich. 99.

Feigned Accomplice.—Since in such case there is no criminal intent, a person who joins others in the commission of a crime for the purpose of exposing it and bringing the criminals to punishment is not an accessory before the fact. People v. Collins, 53 Cal. 185; Campbell v. Com., 84 Pa. St. 187; Com. v. Hollister, 157 Pa. St. 13; Williams v. State, 55 Ga. 391.

Illustrations.—In the following cases the defendants were held not to be accessories:

A man supplies a pregnant woman with poison; he knows that she means to use it to procure her own abortion, but acts unwillingly, being influenced by her threats of self-destruction if he refuses, and hoping that she will change her mind. She does so use it and dies. Even if the woman is guilty of self-murder, originated with the principal or accessory.¹ A bare knowledge and concealment of the fact that a felony is to be committed is not sufficient to render one an accessory;² nor will words that amount to a bare permission make an accessory.³

3. Relation between Crime and Incitement—In what Guilt Consists.—The guilt of an accessory before the fact consists in his having incited to a crime afterwards accomplished;⁴ but if the principal commits the crime contemplated, it is immaterial that he accomplished it in a manner or under circumstances differing from those suggested by the accessory, or that the incitement was general without any specification of time, manner, or place.⁵

When a Different Crime is Committed.—Yet if the principal varies totally and substantially from the terms of the instigation, and commits an entirely different crime, the person who has incited him will not be accessory to such crime.⁶ The the man is not an accessory before the fact thereto. Reg. v. Fretwell, L. & C. 161.

A. acts as a stakeholder in a prize-fight between B. and C. Otherwise he has nothing to do with the fight, and he is not present at it. B. and C. fight, and B. is killed. A. is not an accessory before the fact to the manslaughter of B., even if there can be an accessory before the fact in such a case. Reg. v. Taylor, L. R. 2 Cr. Cas. Rep. 147; 12 Moak Eng. Rep. 636.

One who is merely present at a homicide but does not participate therein is not an accessory. Lowery v. State, 72 Ga. 649.

1. In Keithler v. State, 10 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 192, there was an indictment against one Keithler as accessory before the fact to a murder committed by Silas. Starkey, C. J., said: "It is not material that Keithler should have originated the design. If Silas had previously formed it and Keithler encouraged him to carry it out by stating falsehoods or otherwise, he is guilty."

2 Knowledge and Concealment of Fact that Crime is to be Committed.—1 Hale P. C. 616; 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 29, § 23; Tullis v. State, 41 Tex. 598; Alford v. State, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 299.

L. swore that M., himself, and several others were members of a secret organization called "Ku-Klux;" that this band was bound by oath to keep secret the doings and works of their order; that H. rendered himself obnoxious to the order, and that it was resolved that H. should be put to death. When this resolution was adopted L. was present, but opposed the resolution and never did assent to it. M. and one R. volunteered to do the act. In the course of the following week M. & R. came to witness's house, and after night picked up their guns and left, telling the wife of the witness to set the clock back, as they were going to kill H., but returned after a while and stated that the night was too dark to accomplish their purpose. Some time after that H. was killed, and M. soon afterwards confessed to witness that he and R. had done it, and described how they had done the act. L. had kept the secret until about one year before the trial, when he divulged it. His reason was that he was afraid of personal violence at the hands of the band. He had been examined as a witness before the coroner's jury that held the inquest over H.'s dead body, and also before a grand jury, and had denied any knowledge of the authors of the crime. It was held that L. was not an accomplice. Melton v. State, 43 Ark. 367.

In order to render one liable as accessory before the fact to a crime, the evidence must with reasonable certainty point out the particular crime to which he is accessory, and show that he had knowledge of, and aided in, its commission. State v. Clouser, 69 Iowa 313.

3. So, if A. says he will kill J. S., and B. says, "You may do your pleasure for me." 1 Hale, P. C. 616; 2 Hawk. P. C. b. 2, c. 29, § 16.

4. If One Counsels the Commission of a Felony, but the individual to whom such counsel is given does not commit the felony, the person who has given the counsel is not liable as an accessory. Ogden v. State, 12 Wis. 532; 78 Am. Dec. 754.

Soliciting and Inciting a person to commit an offense, where no other act is done except the soliciting and inciting, is a misdemeanor only. Reg. v. Gregory, 10 Cox C. C. 459; 1 L. R. C. C. 77; 36 L. J. M. C. 60; 16 L. T. N. S. 388; 15 W. R. 774; State v. Jordan, 75 N. Car. 27.

5. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 29, s. 20; Hughes v. State, 79 Ala. 31; Griffith v. State, 90 Ala. 583; Sage v. State, 127 Ind. 15; State v. Tazwell, 30 La. Ann. 884. Where death results from a felonious act of the principal, brought about by the counsel or command of the accessory, the latter is guilty, although death may not have resulted immediately or directly from the acts of either of the wrongdoers. Nor is it necessary that the acts or words of the accessory should directly incite or expressly command the principal to commit the homicide; it is enough if it appears that the acts or words of the accessory were intended to secure the unlawful killing of the deceased, and that they effected that result. Sage v. State, 127 Ind. 15.

It makes no difference whether the advice or encouragement is by acts or words, Brennan v. People, 15 Ill. 511; or whether it be by words spoken or printed in a newspaper, Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1.

6. Foster 369.

When Principal Departs from Terms of the Instigation.—Thus, if A. commands B. to set fire to another's house, and he in so doing commits a robbery, A. is accessory, but not to the robbery, for that is a thing of a distinct and un-consequential nature. 1 Hale P. C. 617; 4 Bl. Com. 37.

A. counsels B. to poison C. B. gives C. a poisoned apple. C. hands the apple to D., who, B. remaining silent, eats it and dies. A. is not accessory to the murder of D. Saunders' Case, Plowd. 475.

On an indictment against W. for procuring instigator is, however, an accessory before the fact, though his instructions are exceeded and the crime committed is different from that contemplated by him, if it is a probable consequence of his advice and likely to flow from it;¹ or if the crime committed is the result of a mistaken attempt to follow the instructions given by him.²

Withdrawal of Advice—Notice.—A person is not an accessory before the fact who has advised the commission of a crime, but who repents before it has been accomplished and withdraws his advice, if the principal before the execution of the crime has notice that the advice has been withdrawn.³

Direct Communication Unnecessary.—It is not essential that there should have been direct communication between the accessory and the principal felon; it is enough if the accessory directs an intermediate agent to procure another to commit the felony.⁴

VII. ACCESSORY AFTER THE FACT.—1. Generally.—Three conditions must unite to render one an accessory after the fact: first, the felony must be complete; second, the accessory must have knowledge that the principal committed the felony; third, the accessory must harbor or assist the principal felon.⁵

2. The Felony Complete.—The offense of an accessory after the fact consists in harboring the perpetrator of a felony. It follows that in order to fix the alleged accessory's guilt it is essential that the felony should be complete.⁶

R. and P. to wound, etc., with intent to maim, etc., one S., it is error to admit testimony of a rape committed by R. and P. after they had broken open the dwelling where S. was lodging, because the rape was a distinct offense from that charged in the indictment, and unconnected therewith, and because it was a total and substantial departure from that instructed, and W. could not be held responsible as accessory thereto. Watts v. State, 5 W. Va. 532; State v. Lucas, 55 Iowa 321; State v. Lucas, 57 Iowa 501. See People v. Knapp, 26 Mich. 112; Huling v. State, 17 Ohio St. 583.

1. When Crime Committed a Probable Consequence of the Advice.—So, when murder results from an attempted robbery, or the burning of two houses from the arson of one. Foster 370.

If A. procures C. to commit a robbery, and C. commits a murder to conceal the robbery, A. is guilty as accessory before the fact to the murder. State v. Davis, 87 N. Car. 514.

But one who has only advised or encouraged a misdemeanor is not necessarily responsible for a murder committed by his co-conspirator, not in furtherance but independent of the common design. People v. Keifer, 65 Cal. 232.

2. Where Wrong Person is Murdered.—A. may be accessory before the fact to the murder of B., if the murder was committed by C. in the belief that B. was another person whose description was given by A. to C., with the intention that such other person should be murdered by C. Foster P. C. 370-372.

If the intent be to kill one person, and the principal, by mistake, kills another, this will not be a defense to the accessory. Wynn v. State, 63 Miss. 260.

3. Effect of Withdrawal of Advice.—If A., after advising another to murder a third person, withdraws his advice by letter, and the letter is duly received, but notwithstanding the murder is committed afterward, there cannot be conviction of A. as accessory before the fact. 1 Hale C. P. 618.

4. Foster 125; 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 29, §§ 1, 10,

Earl of Summerset's Case, cited in 19 Howell's St. Tr. 804; Rex v. Cooper, 5 C. & P. 535; Com. v. Smith, 11 Allen (Mass.) 243. It will be sufficient even if the accessory does not name the person to be procured, but merely directs the agent to employ some person. Rex v. Cooper, 5 C. & P. 535.

5. State v. Davis, 14 R. I. 281; Wren v. Com., 26 Gratt. (Va.) 952.

6. Felony must be Complete.—Harrel v. State, 39 Miss. 702; 80 Am. Dec. 95; State v. Davis, 14 R. I. 281; Wren v. Com., 26 Gratt. (Va.) 952. In Harrel v. State, 39 Miss. 702; 80 Am. Dec. 95, Harrel was indicted as accessory after the fact to the crime of murder, committed by R. H. The court, by Smith, C. J., said: "The evidence adduced on the trial rendered it highly probable, if not certain, that the aid and assistance which were proved to have been given by the plaintiff in error, with the intent to enable R. H. to effect his escape, were, in point of fact, given after the mortal blow was dealt, but before the death of the party whose life had been assailed, but which occurred within a very short time thereafter. * * * It is clear that the felony charged in the indictment to have been committed by the said R. H. was the murder of T. H., and not an assault and battery upon him with intent to commit murder. It is therefore certain that until T. H. died, the felony alleged in the indictment, and in respect to which the plaintiff in error was charged as accessory after the fact, was not consummated. In order to fix the guilt of the party charged as accessory after the fact, it is essential that the alleged felony should be complete. Until such felony has been consummated, any aid or assistance rendered to a party, in order to enable him to escape the consequences of his crime, will not make the person affording such assistance guilty as an accessory after the fact. This is the rule recognized, without exception, by all the authorities. 1 Hale 622; 2 Hawkins, ch. 29, § 35; 4 Bl. Com. 38; 3 Greenleaf on Ev. p. 47; Roscoe's Crim. Ev. 220."

3. Accessory's Knowledge of Felony.—The accessory must have notice express or implied of the principal having committed a felony in order that his guilt as accessory may be established.¹

4. Accessory's Act of Assistance.—The act which renders one an accessory after the fact is assistance rendered to the felon personally,² either to conceal the crime or to evade justice.³ It matters not that this assistance be rendered through an

Where one is charged as an accessory to a crime, it must appear that the crime was committed by the principal; it is not enough to show that the defendant harbored A., charged with the murder, unless it be also shown that A. committed the murder. Poston v. State, 12 Tex. App. 408.

When Larceny is Complete.—Where goods have been so far removed from the possession of the owner that their further removal could not be deemed a continuing part of the original taking, the offense of larceny is so far complete that one engaging in their further removal will be only an accessory. 2 Russ. on Crimes, 9 Ed. *547. Thus, where K. was indicted for theft and it appeared that H. & S. broke open a warehouse and stole thereout certain goods, which they carried along the street thirty yards and then fetched K., who was apprised of the robbery, and assisted in carrying away the property, it was held that he was only an accessory and not a principal. Rex v. King, R. R. C. C. 332.

But see Conner v. State, 25 Ga. 515; 71 Am. Dec. 184, where the effect of the ruling seems to be that one may become a principal in larceny by receiving and appropriating the stolen property from the hands of the actual thieves ten days after the original theft. See also Minor v. State, 58 Ga. 551.

1. Knowledge of Accessory Requisite.—2 Hawk. P. C. c. 29, § 32.

The attainder of the felon is not of itself notice to all persons in the same county, and neither in justice nor in reason does it create an absolute presumption of notice, though it may be evidence to go to a jury. Rex v. Burridge, 3 P. Wms. 497.

One who aids in the disposition of stolen property is not thereby guilty of larceny either as principal or accessory, unless he knows the property to have been stolen. Knowledge of the crime is essential to constitute an accessory after the fact. State v. Empey, 79 Iowa 460; Rex v. Lee, 6 C. & P. 536; 25 E. C. L. 530.

Knowledge of the commission of the felony must be brought home to the accused, and whether he had such knowledge is always a question for the jury. Wren v. Com., 26 Gratt. (Va.) 952.

It is sufficient that the alleged accessory had good reason to believe the person aided by him guilty of felony, and fleeing from justice, to render aid given him unlawful. It is not necessary to prove that the accessory had actual knowledge of the facts connected with the guilt of the perpetrator of the principal crime. Tully v. Com., 13 Bush (Ky.) 142.

2. Accessory Rendering Assistance.—To substantiate the charge of harboring a felon, it must be shown that the party charged did some act to assist the felon personally. Reg. v. Chapple, 9 C. & P. 355; 38 E. C. L. 150.

In Loyd v. State, 42 Ga. 221, the court said: "We hold that both at common law and under our statute the law contemplates some assistance or act done to the felon himself." See also People v. Dunn, 7 N. Y. Cr. Rep. 174.

Receiving Stolen Property.—So the mere receipt of stolen goods knowing them to have been stolen did not make an accessory at the common law. 1 Hale P. C. 616; People v. Teal, 1 Wheel. Cr. Cas. (N. Y.) 199, note; People v. Dunn, 7 N. Y. Cr. Rep. 174; People v. Sheppardson, 48 Cal. 189.

But it is otherwise where such receipt is for the purpose of facilitating the escape from justice of the principal felon, or is attended with some benefit to him. Loyd v. State, 42 Ga. 221.

By statute, however, the receiver of stolen property is made an accessory after the fact. The earliest of such statutes was 3 W. & M. c. 9, s. 4; 3 Chit. Cr. L. 951. See, generally, the title RECEIVING STOLEN PROPERTY.

3. What Constitutes an Accessory After the Fact.—Where a person is charged as an accessory after the fact to a murder, the question for the jury is, whether such person, knowing the offense to have been committed, was either assisting the murderer to conceal the death, or in any way enabling him to evade the pursuit of justice. Rex v. Greenacre, 8 C. & P. 35.

In Reg. v. Hansill, 3 Cox C. C. 597, Erle, J., said: "The assistance must tend to prevent the principal felon from being brought to justice. The question is, did [the accused] after the felony was completed, assist the felon to elude justice?"

In People v. Dunn, 7 N. Y. Cr. Rep. 173, Cullen, J., said: "To constitute an accessory it is not sufficient to assist the prisoner to elude punishment, because failing to prosecute or preventing the attendance of witnesses would produce that result. But to constitute the offense one must help the prisoner to elude or evade capture."

In Wren v. Com., 26 Gratt. (Va.) 956, Christian, J., said: "As to the receiving, relieving, and assisting one known to be a felon, it may be said in general terms, that any assistance given to one known to be a felon in order to hinder his apprehension, trial, or punishment is sufficient to make a man accessory after the fact; as that he concealed him in the house, or shut the door against his pursuers, until he should have an opportunity to escape; or took money from him to allow him to escape; or supplied him with money, a horse or other necessities, in order to enable him to escape; or that the principal was in prison, and the jailer was bribed to let him escape; or conveyed instruments to him to enable him to break prison and escape. This and such like assistance to one known to be a felon would constitute a man accessory after the fact. 1 Hale 619, 621; 2 Hawk. c. 29, § 26. But merely suffering the agent, and that the accessory personally does no act of relieving;¹ but mere inaction or omission does not constitute an accessory after the fact;² nor even writing to witnesses not to appear against the felon,³ nor receiving money not to testify against him.⁴ Assistance rendered to an accessory before the fact constitutes one an accessory after the fact.⁵

5. Harboring Wife or Kindred.—By common law, the wife might harbor her husband without incurring liability as an accessory, but the exemption extended no further than this.⁶ Other relations are protected by statute in various states.⁷

principal to escape will not make the party accessory after the fact; for it amounts at most but to a mere omission. 1 Hale 619; 9 H. iv. 1. Or if he agree for money not to prosecute the felon; or if, knowing of a felony, fails to make it known to the proper authorities: none of these acts would be sufficient to make the party an accessory after the fact. If the thing done amounts to no more than the compounding a felony, or the misprision of it, the doer will not be an accessory. 1 Bish. § 633; 1 Hale 618. 'The true test (says Bishop, § 634) whether one is accessory after the fact, is to consider whether what he did was done by way of personal help to his principal, with the view of enabling his principal to elude punishment; the kind of help rendered appearing to be unimportant.' In Reg. v. Chapple, 9 C. & P. 355, it was held that 'to substantiate the charge of harboring a felon, it must be shown that the party charged did some act to assist the felon personally.' This decision is in strict accordance with the established principles of the common law. See Arch. Crim. Plead. and Prac. 78, 79, note."

Illustration.—A., a lad who was a clerk in a banking-house, robbed his employers: after doing so, he went to the lodging of B., who was much older than himself, and who had relations in America. A. stayed twenty minutes at B.'s lodgings; and after that, on the same night, A. and B. started together by the coach, and went from Reading to Liverpool, intending to embark for America. It was held that B. might be convicted as an accessory after the fact, in harboring, receiving, and maintaining A., the principal felon. Rex v. Lee, 6 C. & P. 536.

Aid Rendered for Other Purposes.—Under the statutes of Missouri one cannot be punished as an accessory after the fact who conceals or aids a felon, not in order that he may escape from justice, but for some other purpose. State v. Reed, 85 Mo. 194.

So in Kansas, where P. was about to be arrested for rape, and F. who was a surety for P. on certain notes, learned of the impending arrest and visited P. in order to make arrangements with regard to said notes, and immediately after the visit of F., P. fled, it was held that F. was not an accessory, even though during such visit he said something which caused P. to abscond. The guilty intent is essential. State v. Fry, 40 Kan. 311.

One who knowing of a crime conceals it from the magistrate from anxiety for his own safety is not an accessory after the fact. Carroll v. State, 45 Ark. 539.

Sufficiency of Evidence.—Under Texas Penal Code, § 86, an accessory is defined as "one who, knowing that an offense has been committed, conceals the offender, or gives him any other aid, in order that he may evade an arrest or trial, or the execution of his sentence;" and evidence which established that immediately after the commission of homicide the principal and the accused had a private conversation after which the principal mounted a horse and disappeared, and that the accused induced the only two other witnesses of the crime to testify to a statement, fabricated by himself, to the end that upon the trial the principal might be acquitted or released on nominal bond, was held sufficient to constitute the accused an accessory within the statute and the purview of the general law. Blakeley v. State, 24 Tex. App. 616, 5 Am. St. Rep. 912.

1. Assistance Rendered through Agent.—A prisoner who employed another person to harbor the principal felon may be convicted as accessory after the fact, though he himself did no act of relieving. Rex v. Jarvis, 2 M. & Rob. 40. See also State v. Hudson, 50 Iowa 157, where the defendant, on trial as accessory after the fact, sent money to the principal felon by the latter's wife and brother.

2. Mere Inaction or Omission not Sufficient.—So, merely suffering the principal to escape, 1 Hale P. C. 619; or knowing of a felony and not discovering it, 1 Hale P. C. 371, 618.

Mere silence, or approval of the commission of a felony after it is done, does not constitute one an accessory. People v. Johnson, 81 Mo. 483; State v. Hann, 40 N. J. L. 228.

But see White v. People, 81 Ill. 333, where it was held that if two persons are the only ones present at the killing of another, and one does the killing and the other does not aid, abet, or assist, but afterwards they both with guilty knowledge conceal the fact of the crime, the one not participating is an accessory after the fact.

3. 3 Inst. 139; 1 Hale P. C. 620.

4. Roscoc Cr. Ev. (8th Am. ed.) 187, citing Moo. 8.

5. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 29, § 1; State v. Payne, 1 Swanst 383.

6. Common Law Exemption.—1 Hale P. C. 621; People v. Dunn, 7 N. Y. Cr. Rep. 187.

The husband is even liable for harboring his wife, People v. Dunn, 7 N. Y. Cr. Rep. 187; and the relations of master and servant, brother and sister, and the like, are not protected, 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 2, § 34.

7. Statutory Exemptions.—Thus, in Rhode Island and Missouri, husband or wife, parent or grandparent, child or grandchild, brother or sister, by consanguinity or affinity, are protected. State v. Davis, 14 R. I. 281; State v. Reed, 85 Mo. 194.

So in Vermont. State v. Butler, 17 Vt. 145.

The protected relations in Texas include domestic servants. Texas Penal Code, § 87.

VIII. ACCESSORY GUILTY ALSO IN ANOTHER CAPACITY.—A man may be guilty as accessory both before and after the fact, as where he incites another to larceny, and after the crime is accomplished in his absence, assists the actual thief in secreting the stolen property.¹ Again, the acts which constitute one an accessory may also make him guilty of another substantive felony.²

IX. EVIDENCE—Accessory's Guilt Dependent upon that of Principal.—Since the accessory's guilt is dependent on the guilt of the principal, it is necessary to establish the guilt of the latter upon the trial of the accessory.³ The accessory may controvert the principal's guilt even after the latter's conviction,⁴ and proof of the acquittal of the principal is a complete defense of the accessory.⁵

Statutory Modifications.—These rules have been much modified by statute, and now in many jurisdictions the acquittal of the principal offers no obstacle to the conviction of the accessory.⁶

1. Same Party Guilty as Accessory both Before and After the Fact.—Norton v. People, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 137; Rex v. Blackson, 8 C. & P. 43; Minor v. State, 58 Ga. 551; Able v. Com., 5 Bush (Ky.) 698.

2. The fact that the circumstances proved for the purpose of showing aid to the principal would constitute the offense of subornation of perjury, will not defeat the prosecution of the accused as accessory after the fact to murder. In such case the prosecutor may frame the indictment for either offense. Blakeley v. State, 24 Tex. App. 616; 5 Am. St. Rep. 912; Groves v. State, 76 Ga. 808.

3. People v. Collins, 53 Cal. 185; Ex parte Bowen, 25 Fla. 214; Bowen v. State, 25 Fla. 645; Edwards v. State, 80 Ga. 127; Tully v. Com., 11 Bush (Ky.) 154; State v. Ricker, 29 Me. 84; Territory v. Dwenger, 2 N. Mex. 73; Buck v. Com., 107 Pa. St. 486; Poston v. State, 12 Tex. App. 408; Armstrong v. State (Tex. App., 1894), 26 S. W. Rep. 829; Hatchett v. Com., 75 Va. 925; Ogden v. State, 12 Wis. 532; 78 Am. Dec. 754. Compare State v. Jones, 7 Nev. 208.

When the accessory is tried before the conviction of the principal, acts and conduct of the principal immediately following the commission of the offense and tending to show that he committed it are competent evidence to prove the guilt of the principal. State v. Rand, 33 N. H. 216; State v. Richter, 29 Me. 84.

Any evidence is admissible to establish the principal's guilt which would be admissible against him were he on trial. State v. Duncan, 6 Ired. (N. Car.) 98; Buck v. Com., 107 Pa. St. 486.

Plea of Guilty—Confessions, Admissions.—A plea of guilty received and recorded is equivalent to a prior conviction of the principal. Groves v. State, 76 Ga. 808; State v. Sims, 2 Bailey (S. Car.) 29; State v. Crank, 2 Bailey (S. Car.) 66; 23 Am. Dec. 117; Jones v. People, 20 Hun (N. Y.) 545.

For the sole purpose of ascertaining the guilt of the principal his confession is admissible on the trial of an accessory before the fact. Morrow v. State, 14 Lea (Tenn.) 475; Self v. State, 6 Baxt. (Tenn.) 244; Rex v. Blick, 4 C. & P. 377; 17 E. C. L. 428. Only such confessions of a principal as would be competent evidence on his own trial are admissible on the trial of an accessory. Smith v. State, 46 Ga. 298. Yet the principal's confessions, admissions, or declarations have been excluded as against the accessory. Rex v. Turner, 1 M. C. C. 347; State v. Newport, 4 Harr. (Del.) 567; State v. Rand, 33 N. H. 216; Ogden v. State, 12 Wis. 532; 78 Am. Dec. 754; Buck v. Com., 107 Pa. St. 486. See Territory v. Dwenger, 2 N. Mex. 73.

4. Accessory may Controvert Principal's Guilt.—Rex v. Smith, 1 Leach C. C. 288; Levy v. People, 80 N. Y. 327; State v. Duncan, 6 Ired. (N. Car.) 98. Thus, the accessory may show that the offense of his principal did not amount to felony, but to a mere breach of trust, Rex v. Smith, 1 Leach C. C. 298; or that there was no crime committed, or that his principal was, not in a situation where he could take part as principal, Com. v. Knapp, 10 Pick. (Mass.), 477; 20 Am. Dec. 534. The guilt of the principal being open for the accused to controvert, it is open for the prosecution to rebut his proof thereon and to produce evidence of the commission of the principal crime aliunde the record. Levy v. People, 80 N. Y. 327.

5. U. S. v. Crane, 4 McLean (U. S.) 217; Bowen v. State, 25 Fla. 645; McCarty v. State, 44 Ind. 214; 15 Am. Rep. 232; Ray v. State, 13 Neb. 55; State v. Ludwick, Phill. (N. Car.) 401; State v. Jones, 101 N. Car. 719.

6. Under Some Statutes Acquittal of Principal no Bar to Conviction of Accessory.—Reg. v. Pulham, 9 C. & P. 280; Reg. v. Hughes, Bell C. C. 242; People v. Bearss, 10 Cal. 68; People v. Newberry, 20 Cal. 439; State Bogue, 52 Kan. 79; State v. Patterson, 52 Kan. 335; People v. Kief, 126 N. Y. 661; Noland v. State, 19 Ohio 131; Evans v. State, 24 Ohio St. 456.

On the trial of B., who was jointly charged with K. with the crime of manslaughter, the evidence tended to show that K. was guilty as principal, and B. as accessory before the fact. It was held that the acquittal of K. was not a bar to a prosecution against B. under the information. State v. Bogue, 52 Kan. 79. In this case the court by Allen, J., said: "It is contended that the subsequent acquittal of Doctor Kidd compels the vacation of the judgment against the defendant, and his discharge from further prosecution. It may be conceded that, at common law, the acquittal of the principal acquitted the accessory also, and that the conviction of the principal must precede or accompany that of one charged as an accessory. (1 Whar. § 237; 1 Bish. New Crim. Law, § 667.) Section 115 of the criminal code provides:

Record of Principal's Conviction as Evidence.—The record of the principal's conviction is prima facie but not conclusive evidence of his guilt.¹

Corroboration of Evidence of Accessory After the Fact.—An accessory after the fact is not an accomplice of his principal so that his testimony needs corroboration in order to convict the principal.²

X. PUNISHMENT.—The offense of an accessory before the fact was, at common law, a felony punishable in the same manner as the principal felony.³ The modern statutes generally abolish all distinction between an accessory before the fact and principal, and provide the same punishment for both.⁴ Accessories after the fact were felons by common law, but they were usually allowed the benefit of clergy.⁵ Prosecutions against them were rare.⁶ The tendency of modern

'Any person who counsels, aids or abets in the commission of any offense may be charged, tried and convicted in the same manner as if he were principal.' The evident purpose of the legislature of our own and other states where similar statutes have been enacted was, to do away with those subtle distinctions of the common law between principals in the first and second degree and accessories before the fact, and to permit the trial of participants in the crime independently of each other, so that each should suffer punishment for his own guilt without being dependent on the result of the prosecutions against others. Of course, if the crime be committed through the instrumentality of another, the acts of such instrument, essential to establish the guilt of the person on trial, must be shown. The statute does not in any manner enlarge or diminish the essential elements of criminality. It merely does away with a somewhat arbitrary nomenclature which has come down from English jurisprudence, and has been found to be a serious stumbling-block in the administration of criminal justice. We think a guilty accessory may be punished, even though the principal escape."

1. Record of Principal's Conviction Prima-facie Evidence.—Com. v. Knapp, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 477; 20 Am. Dec. 534; State v. Sims, 2 Bailey (S. Car.) 29; State v. Chittum, 2 Dev. (N. Car.) 49; State v. Duncan, 6 Ired. (N. Car.) 236; State v. Mosley, 31 Kan. 355; Anderson v. State, 63 Ga. 675; Baxter v. People, 7 Ill. 578; People v. Buckland, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 592; Levy v. People, 80 N. Y. 327.

Such record is properly introduced in evidence in the form of a certified copy of the original minutes of the court, where the principal was tried and convicted under the New York statute. People v. Gray, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 465.

In Keithler v. State, 10 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 192, such a record is held to be admissible to prove the conviction of the principal, and all its legal consequences, "though of course not evidence of the guilt of the prisoner," the accessory. See Lyne v. State, 36 Miss. 617.

It was held in State v. Crank, 2 Bailey (S. Car.) 66; 23 Am. Dec. 117, that the record of the conviction of the principal must be introduced, if the accessory is brought to trial after such conviction; but if the accessory is charged also as aider and abettor, the guilt of the principal may be proved by parol, although he has been convicted.

The record may be introduced though the conviction of the principal was founded on evidence not admissible against the accessory. State v. Chittum, 2 Dev. (N. Car.) 49. Compare State v. Sims, 2 Bailey (S. Car.) 29.

The accessory cannot take advantage of error in the record against the principal. State v. Duncan, 6 Ired. (N. Car.) 236.

An averment of the conviction of the principal is supported by the record, however erroneous the judgment may be. Rex v. Baldwin, 3 Cam. 265.

In California, the distinction between principals and accessories before the fact being abolished, the accessory is to be tried as a principal, and the record of the conviction of the principal is inadmissible. People v. Bearss, 10 Cal. 68.

2. Lowery v. State, 72 Ga. 649; Allen v. State, 74 Ga. 769. But compare Polk v. State, 36 Ark. 117.

3. 4 Bl. Com. 39; 3 Inst. 88; Able v. Com., 5 Bush (Ky.) 698.

4. Accessory Before the Fact and Principal Punished alike under Modern Statutes.—In Brennan v. People, 15 Ill. 517, it is said: "One who counsels or procures another to commit a crime, although he may be absent when the act is done, is equally guilty with the one perpetrating it. By the express provisions of our statute he is deemed to be a principal offender, and may be indicted and punished as such." Loughridge v. State, 6 Mo. 594; People v. Kennedy, 5 Cal. 133; Hatchett v. Com., 75 Va. 925; Nuthill v. State, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 247. But the accessory can receive no greater punishment than his principal; and if there be mitigating circumstances in favor of the principal whereby his punishment is reduced, the punishment of the accessory shall also be reduced. Nuthill v. State, 11 Humph. (Tenn.) 247.

A statute providing that the accessory before the fact "shall receive and suffer the same punishment as would be inflicted on the person convicted of having stolen or feloniously taken the said goods," etc., was held not to be violated by a sentence of accessory and principal to the same term of imprisonment, although the sentence provided alternative fines for both, and the fine of the accessory was the larger of the two. Anderson v. State, 63 Ga. 675. In this case Bleckley, J., said: "The better construction [of the statute] probably is that the latter [punishment of accessory] shall not exceed what the former [punishment of principal] might have been had the court seen proper to inflict the maximum of the law."

5. 4 Bl. Com. 39.

6. "Prosecutions against such persons [ac-statutes is to consider their offense as a minor and separate offense, and to provide a lighter punishment therefor.¹

XI. JURISDICTION.—The jurisdiction of the offense of an accessory is in the county where his offense was committed, although the principal's offense was in another county.² Under an act of Congress giving exclusive jurisdiction of an offense to the United States courts, an accessory to such offense cannot be prosecuted in a state court.³

XII. EXTRADITION OF ACCESSORIES.—Under the extradition laws in force between the United States and Canada, an accessory before the fact to an extraditable offense may be extradited; but it is otherwise in the case of an accessory after the fact.⁴

cessories after the fact] grounded on the common law are seldom instituted at the present time, nor do they appear to have been frequent for many years past, nor to have had any great effect. Foster, 372." 1 Russ. Cas. (9th Am. ed.) 66.

1. See the criminal statutes generally.

But in Tennessee the common-law rule was followed with certain exceptions. Long v. State, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 287.

2. Accessory to Crime Committed in Another County or State.—Where Tried.—People v. Hodges, 27 Cal. 340; Tully v. Com., 13 Bush (Ky.) 142; State v. Hamilton, 13 Nev. 386; Baron v. People, 1 Park. Cr. Rep. (N. Y.) 246; People v. Hall, 57 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 342.

In some states, by statute, the accessory may be tried in the county where his own offense or that of the principal was committed. See New York Pen. Code, § 32.

Under Massachusetts Gen. Sts. c. 168, § 5, one who procures a felony to be committed in a county of that commonwealth, by means of letters written elsewhere, can be convicted in that county as accessory before the fact. Com. v. Pettes, 114 Mass. 357.

Where a felony is procured in one state to be committed in another state, the accessory before the fact cannot be tried in the latter state. State v. Moore, 26 N. H. 448; 59 Am. Dec. 354; Johns v. State, 19 Ind. 421. Compare State v. Cassady, 12 Kan. 550; People v. Adams, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 190; State v. Chapin, 17 Ark. 561; 65 Am. Dec. 452.

In State v. Moore, 26 N. H. 448; 59 Am. Dec. 354. Woods, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "At common law, an accessory to the crime committed in another county, it is said, could be indicted in neither county. 1 Chitty's Cr. L. 178; 1 Hale 62, 3. But by the statute of 2 and 3 Edw. VI. chap. 24, § 4, it was enacted, 'That when any murder or felony shall be hereafter committed and done in one county, and another person or more shall be accessory or accessories in any manner of wise to any such murder or felony in any other county, that an indictment—found or taken against such accessory or accessories upon the circumstances of such matter, before the justices of peace or other justices or commissioners to inquire of felonies, in the county where such offenses of accessory or accessories in any manner or wise shall be committed or done—shall be as good and effectual in the law as if the said principal offense had been committed or done in the same county where the same indictment against such accessory shall be found.' Upon the question before us, in connection with the provisions of this statute, we have looked into the authorities, and will now refer to them briefly and state the result. The law upon this subject, we think, is quite clear and well established, unless our statutes may be found to have altered it. In 1 Chitty's Cr. L. 191, the doctrine is laid down thus: 'If a shot be fired in one county, or poison be administered, which becomes fatal in another, the venue must be laid in the latter; but it would be otherwise if A. in one county should procure B., a guilty agent, to commit a murder in the second, because in that case A. would be an accessory before the fact, and triable as such in the county where he was guilty of the murderous contrivance. On the other hand, if a person unconscious of the guilty design, as a child without discretion, be employed in the commission of murder, the venue must be laid in the county where the death happened, for they are merely the instruments, and the contriver is the principal.' * * * According to the authorities cited, which are believed to contain and to show what was the law of England upon the subject under consideration, after the passage of the act of 2 and 3 Edward VI. chap. 24 (A.D. 1549), we think there can be no doubt that in England an accessory in a felony before the fact could, in virtue of that act, be tried for the offense only in the county in which he committed the offense of procuring or advising the commission of the principal offense, which was committed in another county. And it seems to us that this view is in accordance with the general principle of the common law that crimes are local, and can only be tried in the county where they are committed. The crime of the accessory, if it can be regarded as committed anywhere, is committed at the place where the intelligent agent is procured to commit the principal act. And, so far as we are advised, the law of England remained the same from the passage of the act aforesaid to the time of the American Revolution."

1. Crutchfield v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 76 N. Car. 320.

The word accident, when used to express a result produced by human action, is generally if not universally understood to mean a thing done or a disaster caused or produced without design or unintentionally; an event or occurrence which happens unexpectedly from the uncontrollable operations of nature alone and without human agency; or an event resulting undesignedly and unexpectedly from human agency alone, or from the joint operation of both. Morris v. Platt, 32 Conn. 85.

The Equitable Definition of the Term "Accident" includes not only inevitable casualties, such as are caused by the act of God, but also those that arise from unforeseen occurrences, misfortunes, losses, and acts or omissions of other persons without the fault, negligence, or misconduct of the party. Bostwick v. Stiles, 35 Conn. 198; Alexander v. Bailey, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 639. See the title ACCIDENT (IN EQUITY).

The word accident, in its legal sense, has been defined to be "(1) an event happening without the concurrence of the will of the person by whose agency it was caused; (2) an event that takes place without one's foresight or expectation." State v. Lewis, 107 N. Car. 978.

Business Misfortunes.—Accident does not include the usual misfortunes in business. Langdon v. Bowen, 46 Vt. 512.

Accident and Negligence.—In McCarty v. New York, etc., R. Co., 30 Pa. St. 251, it was contended that the trial judge's use of the word accident led the jury to believe that a loss occasioned by an accident was something different from a loss occasioned by negligence, whereas the two are identical. The appellate court said: "If accident and negligence be not opposites, we cannot regard them as identical without confounding cause and effect. Accident, and its synonyms casualty and misfortune, may proceed or result from negligence, or other cause known or unknown. What the court meant, and in effect said, was, that the loss complained of may have resulted from the negligence of the defendants or from other causes beyond their control—if from the first, they would be liable for it; if from the last, they would not—and the jury were left to determine from the evidence whether it was fairly ascribable to that cause for which, they were thus instructed, the defendants would be liable. It is impossible for us to see any error in such instructions."

In Henry v. Grand Ave. R. Co., 113 Mo. 525, where the trial judge had instructed that, "if the jury believe from the evidence that the injuries sustained by the plaintiff were merely the result of accident, then your verdict will be for the defendant." This was held to be no error. The appellate court said: "The further objection is made that the court erred in giving defendant's first instruction; and it is insisted that it entirely eliminates the question of negligence. Especially is the use of the word accident objected to. Mr. Webster defines accident as 'a coming or falling; an event that takes place without one's foresight or expectation; an event which proceeds from an unknown cause, and therefore not expected; chance; casualty; contingency.' This objection, we think, is overcome by the use of the word 'merely,' next preceding it—a word the meaning of which is well understood, and implies, as used in this instruction, that there must not have been any negligence or carelessness on the part of the employee of the defendant contributing to the injury. Words should be taken in their usual and ordinary meaning, and as generally understood. Henry, etc., Co. v. Evans, 97 Mo. 47. And we think, when used in this instruction, it was understood to mean that if the injury was purely accidental, and without fault on the part of defendant's servant, it was not liable. It is admitted by counsel in their brief that, if some qualifying term had been used, the objection to the word accident would not obtain; for instance, 'unavoidable' or 'inevitable.' It seems to us, however, that the use of the word 'merely' made the instruction quite as intelligible and as easily understood as if the word 'unavoidable' or 'inevitable' had been used, and that it did not, as contended for, eliminate the question of negligence."

Result of Negligence—Omission.—A charge was asked that if "the jury believe that the death of the slave was the result of accident and without design, then the plaintiff could not recover." The appellate court said: "Accident, in this connection, may be defined, 'chance, casualty, an event that takes place * * * without design' (Webster's Dic-

dent turns upon the fact whether the person causing the accident was guilty of negligence or not; if there is no fault there is no liability. While this subject will be elaborately treated elsewhere in this work,¹ it has been thought not amiss to give here a number of cases in which the facts have been held to constitute an accident for which the defendant was not liable.² To tionary). As we understand the charge, it asserts the proposition that duties omitted cannot constitute the negligence to which the law attaches accountability; that there must also be acts of commission. This view is erroneous. Diligence, when the law imposes it as a duty, implies that 'we shall do those things we ought to do, and leave undone those things we ought not to do.' It requires action as well as forbearance to act. Accident repels the imputation of faults committed, but not of duties omitted." Armstrong v. Holley, 29 Ala. 305.

Personal Injuries through Accident.—As to a state of facts warranting the use of the term accident as the cause of plaintiff's injuries, see Field v. Davis, 27 Kan. 407.

Snowstorm—Charter Party.—An exception in a charter party against "riots, strikes, or any other accident" does not include a snowstorm. An accident is not an ordinary occurrence, but something which happens out of the ordinary course of things. A snowstorm, however, is one of the ordinary operations of nature, and may be described rather as an incident than an accident. Fenwick v. Schmalz, L. R. 3 C. P. 313.

1. See the title NEGLIGENCE.

2. Railroads. (See also the titles CARRIERS OF PASSENGERS; NEGLIGENCE; RAILROADS.)—If a railroad bed, engine, and cars are in good order, and the engineer and other attendants are skilful and careful, and yet the rail breaks and the train is crushed, and the employees and passengers are killed, that is an unusual and unexpected event from a known cause, and therefore an accident. But if the track is out of order and the engine worn and unmanageable, and on account thereof there is the like result as above stated on the good road, that is not an unusual and unexpected event, but a usual and expected event from such a cause; it is not an accident, but it is negligence. Crutchfield v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 76 N. Car. 320.

Where a railroad employee, in getting out of the way of a train suddenly started without signal, stepped between the railroad track and a sandbank two feet distant, and while there a quantity of sand fell from the bank, striking him and knocking him against the moving cars, and the wheels of one of the cars ran over his leg and injured him, it was held that, as the immediate and direct cause of the injury was the falling of one of the bank, and this was not the effect or consequence of the omission or act of the defendant, the plaintiff could not recover. Handelun v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 72 Iowa 709.

A railroad company is not liable in damages for the death of a man caused by the explosion of a torpedo with which he intermeddled while walking on the railroad track, and which had been placed there by the company as a danger signal to approaching trains. Carter v. Columbia, etc., R. Co., 19 S. Car. 20, 45 Am. Rep. 754.

Where a mule caught his foot in a hole in a railroad track, the company was held not liable, as the hole was so small that no one could have foreseen the result. Nelson v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 30 Minn. 74.

A Telegraph Wire sagged across a track from no known cause, and struck a brakeman upon a moving train, and broke. In an unexplained manner the wire became fastened to the brake, and at the same time coiled around the deceased, dragging him for some distance and inflicting injuries causing his death. It was held that this was an unforeseen accident for which the defendant was not liable. Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. Locke, 112 Ind. 404.

Accidents from Machinery. (See also the titles MASTER AND SERVANT; FELLOW SERVANTS.)—So accidents from machinery are within the rule where their liability to happen is proved only by their happening. Richards v. Rough, 53 Mich. 212; Sjogren v. Hall, 53 Mich. 274.

Leakage of Water from a Neighboring Dam or Reservoir. (See also the titles DAMS; SURFACE WATERS; WATER COMPANIES.)—Where water from a newly constructed reservoir broke through some old vertical shafts apparently filled with earth, and flooded a mine, which ran to passages connected with the old shafts, it was held that the constructor of the reservoir was liable for the damage caused. Fletcher v. Rylands, L. R. 1 Exch. 265, affirmed in L. R. 3 H. L. 330. Blackburn, J., said: "We think the true rule of law is that the person who, for his own purposes, brings on his lands and collects and keeps there anything likely to do mischief if it escapes  is prima facie answerable for all the damage which is the natural consequence of its escape." This doctrine was repudiated in Losee v. Buchanan, 51 N. Y. 476, 10 Am. Rep. 623, where it was held that one who erected upon his premises a steam boiler, having in it no defect known to him, or discoverable by the application of known tests, and who operated it with care and skill, was not answerable to an adjacent proprietor for damages caused by its explosion. "Here, if one builds a dam  and the lands of a neighbor are thus flooded, he is not liable for the damage without proof of some fault or negligence on his part." The English view is also disapproved in Garland v. Towne, 55 N. H. 57, 20 Am. Rep. 164, and Marshall v. Welwood, 38 N. J. L. 339. As supporting the English view, see Ball v. Nye, 99 Mass. 582, 97 Am. Dec. 56; Shipley v. Fifty Associates, 106 Mass. 198; Wilson v. New Bedford, 103 Mass. 261, 11 Am. Rep. 352; Gorham v. Gross, 125 Mass.

Floods. (See also the title FLOODS.)—Damage from extraordinary flood falls under this rule. Brown v. Susquehanna Boom Co., 109 Pa. St. 57, 58 Am. Rep. 708. Also delay from flood. American Express Co. v. Smith, 33 Ohio St. 511, 31 Am. Rep. 561.

Fences. (See also the titles FENCES; INJURIES TO ANIMALS.)—In Robinson v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 32 Mich. 322, it was held that the company was not liable for injuries to animals, due to the blowing down of its fences by a sudden and heavy wind. See also Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Truitt, 24 Ind. 162; Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 26 Ohio St. 124.

Civil Damage Act. (See also the title CIVIL DAMAGE ACTS.)—In Bobier v. Clay, 27 Q. B. (Ont.) 438, it was held, where the deceased, being intoxicated, fell off a bench in the barroom and was placed upon the floor in a small room adjoining, with nothing under his head, and died of apoplexy or congestion of the brain, that this was not a case of death by accident within the statute, but of death from natural causes induced by intoxication.

Assault—Self-defense. (See also the title ASSAULT AND BATTERY.)—Where one in defending himself against an assault injures a bystander, the injury is an accident, and the injurer not liable. Morris v. Platt, 32 Conn. 75.

To the same effect is Paxton v. Boyer, 67 Ill. 132, 16 Am. Rep. 615. See also Welch v. Durand, 36 Conn. 182, 4 Am. Rep. 55.

In Weaver v. State (Tex. Crim. App., 1894), 24 S. W. Rep. 648, it was held error to refuse an instruction that the defendant should be acquitted if the striking was accidental.

Accidentally Striking Another.—The defendant having interfered to part his dog and the plaintiff's, which were fighting, in raising his stick for that purpose accidentally struck the plaintiff in the eye, severely injuring him. It was held that he was not liable. Brown v. Kendall, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 292.

The defendant threw a stone at the plaintiff's daughter and put out her eye. It appeared that the injury was accidental. It was held that the plaintiff could not recover. Harvey v. Dunlop, Hill & D. Supp. (N. Y.) 193.

Accidental Shooting. (See also the titles HOMICIDE; MANSLAUGHTER; MURDER.)—One hunting in a wilderness is not bound to anticipate the presence of another man, and he is not liable for an injury caused unintentionally by him to a person of whose presence he was not aware. Bizzell v. Booker, 16 Ark. 308.

Several persons were having a playful altercation, during which one of them, in sport, pointed at another an old pistol thought to be unloaded, but which went off and killed the latter; this was held not to be manslaughter. Robertson v. State, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 239.

In Weaver v. Ward, Hob. 134, it was held that, where one soldier wounds another in skirmishing for exercise, an action for trespass will not lie unless it appears that the defendant was guilty of negligence.

Manslaughter. (See also the titles HOMICIDE; MANSLAUGHTER; MURDER.)—A being on board a ship, and B in a boat alongside, had a dispute about the payment for some goods, both being intoxicated. A, to get rid of B, pushed away the boat with his foot; B, reaching out to lay hold of a barge to prevent his boat from drifting away, overbalanced himself and fell into the water and was drowned. A was charged with manslaughter on the coroner's inquisition. It was held, on the trial, that the facts did not constitute that offense. Rex v. Waters, 6 C. & P. 328, 25 E. C. L. 423.

Explosions are within the rule. Allison Mfg. Co. v. McCormick, 118 Pa. St. 510; Losee v. Buchanan, 51 N. Y. 476, 10 Am. Rep. 623; Spencer v. Campbell, 9 W. & S. (Pa.) 32; U. S. v. Taylor, 5 McLean (U. S.) 242; Marshall v. Welwood, 38 N. J. L. 339; Reg. v. Gregory, 2 F. & F. 153. See also the title EXPLOSIONS.

Children. (See also the title INJURIES TO CHILDREN.)—Where a child of tender years, not possessing sufficient discretion to avoid danger, is permitted by his parents to be on a public highway without any one to guard him, and is there run over by a traveler and injured, neither trespass nor case lies against the traveler unless the injury was voluntary or arose from culpable negligence on his part. Hartfield v. Roper, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 615, 34 Am. Dec. 273.

Where a child came upon the defendant's premises without permission and fell into an uncovered cistern, it was held that the defendant was not liable. Hargreaves v. Deacon, 25 Mich. 1.

Animals Fera Nature—Domestic Animals. (See also the title ANIMALS.)—For accidental damage by animals fera nature, as, for example, bees, there is no liability. Earl v. Van Alstine, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 630.

Rats are, it seems, a necessary evil in navigation, and their presence therefore in a ship in reasonable numbers does not render her unseaworthy. Their action is not an act of God, but it is an inevitable accident; and therefore if they gnaw a hole in a ship and let in the sea-water, this is a "danger or accident of the seas" within the meaning of the ordinary exception in a charter party, and the owners are not liable. Pandorf v. Hamilton, 16 Q. B. Div. 629. Compare Carstairs v. Taylor, L. R. 6 Exch. 217.

The owner of a domestic animal is not in general liable for an injury committed by such animal, unless it be alleged and shown that the defendant had notice of its vicious propensities. Van Leuven v. Lyke, 1 N. Y. 515. But the owner of a mischievous dog will be liable even as regards a trespasser who is bitten in the daytime by the animal, it being at large on its master's premises.

Horses. (See also the title HORSES.)—Where horses become frightened and run away, the owner or driver is not responsible for the damages that they may do, if he is without fault, or for damage from other causes. Brown v. Collins, 53 N. H. 442, 16 Am. Rep. 372; Bigelow v. Reed, 51 Me. 325; Unger v. Forty-second St., etc., R. Co., 51 N. Y. 497; Strouse v. Whittlesey, 41 Conn. 559; Center v. Finney, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 94; Goshorn v. Smith, 92 Pa. St. 435; Goodman v. Taylor, 5 C. & P. 410, 24 E. C. L. 385.

In Gibbons v. Pepper, 4 Mod. 405, it was held that if a horse runs away with his rider and strikes against another, the rider is not liable.

In Wakeman v. Robinson, 1 Bing. 213, 8 E. C. L. 478, the defendant's horse was frightened and ran against that of the plaintiff, injuring him. The defendant was held not liable. To the same effect see Goodman v. Taylor, 5 C. & P. 410, 24 E. C. L. 385; Vincent v. Stinehour, 7 Vt. 62, 29 Am. Dec. 145.

In Holmes v. Mather, L. R. 10 Exch. 261, the defendant's horse, while being driven by his servant, ran away and knocked down and injured the plaintiff. It was held that the plaintiff could not recover damages.

Fires—Sparks from a Steam Dredge. (See also the title FIRES.)—It has been held that a steam dredge emitting sparks and causing neighboring property to take fire is within the rule. Hinds v. Barton, 25 N. Y. 544; Teall v. Barton, 40 Barb. (N. Y.) 137.

Fires—Sparks from Locomotives. (See also the title FIRES.)—The test in the case of a chartered railroad company is whether, in using its engines, it fails in the diligence which good specialists in this department are accustomed to exercise. Flynn v. San Francisco, etc., R. Co., 40 Cal. 14, 6 Am. Rep. 595; Rood v. New York, etc., R. Co., 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 80; Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Yeiser, 8 Pa. St. 366; Aldridge v. Great Western R. Co., 3 M. & G. 515, 42 E. C. L. 272; Morris, etc., R. Co. v. State, 36 N. J. L. 553; Field v. New York Cent. R. Co., 32 N. Y. 339.

In Jones v. Festiniog R. Co., L. R. 3 Q. B. 733, it was held that the rule is otherwise as to unchartered railroads, and that the emission of sparks is in itself evidence of negligence.

Fire Spreading from One's Premises. (See also the title FIRES.)—In Clark v. Foot, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 422, the rule is thus laid down: If A sets fire to his own fallow ground, as he may lawfully do, which communicates to and fires the woodland of B, his neighbor, no action lies against A, unless there was some negligence or misconduct in him or his servant. See also Tourtellot v. Rosebrook, 11 Met. (Mass.) 460; Thurston v. Hancock, 12 Mass. 220, 7 Am. Dec. 57; Barnard v. Poor, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 378; Bachelor v. Heagan, 18 Me. 32; Hewey v. Biebl, 28 Minn. 139; Reiper v. Nichols, 31 Hun (N. Y.) 491; Read v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 44 N. J. L. 280; Johnson v. Barber, 10 Ill. 425, 50 Am. Dec. 416; Burton v. McClellan, 3 Ill. 434; Ayer v. Starkey, 30 Conn. 304 (under statute).

A party who sets fire to logs and brush on his own land is not liable to an action, though it is blown on the lands of his neighbor and burns his barn, unless the party setting the fire is also guilty of negligence or carelessness in setting it at that place and time. Fahn v. Reichart, 8 Wis. 255, 76 Am. Dec. 237; Hays v. Miller, 6 Hun (N. Y.) 320.

In Read v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 44 N. J. L. 282, it was held that without negligent kindling or guarding of a fire no liability could be fixed upon a person from whose premises it spread and destroyed the property of another. The court cited, as sustaining the position, Vaughan v. Menlove, 3 Bing. N. Cas. 468, 32 E. C. L. 208; Filliter v. Phippard, 11 Q. B. 347, 63 E. C. L. 347; Tourtellot v. Rosebrook, 11 Met. (Mass.) 460.

In Filliter v. Phippard, 11 Q. B. 347, 62 E. C. L. 347, it is said that accidental means simply not arising from negligence.

Handling Dangerous Goods in Ignorance of their Character. In Kellar v. Shippee, 45 Ill. App. 381, an instruction which charged that the plaintiff in error was not liable if the colt (the subject of the action) lost its life accidentally, was held bad in failing to define accident so that the jury might understand that it meant an event causing damage, happening accidentally and without fault.

An accident may be defined as an event happening unexpectedly and without fault. Where there is fault there is liability; for example, where one drives against another by getting on the wrong side of the road in the dark. Leame v. Bray, 3 East 593. See also the title LAW OF THE ROAD.

An injurious accident raises a presumption of negligence against a carrier; but in Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Raiordon, 119 Pa. St. 583, it is said that the word accident must be understood as referring to such happenings as the exercise of proper care by the carrier could not have prevented.

In Sheldon v. Sherman, 42 N. Y. 484, 1 Am. Rep. 569, it was held that the owner of logs, which without his fault were carried by high water down a stream and deposited on the lands of another, was liable for the damage done to such lands; but the court rested his liability upon the fact that he reclaimed the logs, saying that if he had abandoned them there would have been no liability.

I. DEFINITION—Popular Sense.—In its popular sense the term "accident" signifies an event or occurrence which happens unexpectedly, from the uncontrollable operations of nature exclusively, or an event resulting undesignedly and unexpectedly from human agency alone, or an event resulting from the joint operation of both of the foregoing agencies.¹

In Equity.—Some writers on equity jurisprudence have not attempted to define the term "accident" in its equitable signification; others have made the attempt, with more or less success; all of them confess to the difficulty of arriving at a definition which will at once embrace all the elements requisite to the equitable idea and exclude all others.² Nevertheless the following, by a modern author, appears to be both comprehensive and accurate: "Accident is an unforeseen and unexpected event, occurring external to the party affected by it, and of which his own agency is not the proximate cause, whereby, contrary to his own intention and wish, he loses some legal right, or becomes subjected to some legal liability, and another person acquires a corresponding legal right, which it would be a violation of good conscience for the latter person, under the circumstances, to retain."³

1. Morris v. Platt, 32 Conn. 75.

2. In 1 Spence Eq. Jur., p. 628, it is said that every attempt to define "accident" in its judicial acceptation, even in modern times, has failed.

3. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. (2d ed.), § 823. This Distinguished from Mistake.—Accident differs from mistake in that the latter always supposes the operation of the will of the agent in producing the event, although that will is caused by erroneous impressions on the mind.¹

Accident—Surprise.—The terms "accident" and "surprise," though not strictly synonymous, have, as employed in legal parlance, substantially the same meaning, as each is used to denote some condition or situation in which a party to a cause is unexpectedly placed, to his detriment, without fault or negligence of his own, and against which ordinary prudence could not have guarded.²

Scope of Article.—This article will be confined to a treatment of the subject accident as constituting a head of equity jurisdiction. The term in its other relations will be defined and discussed elsewhere in this work, under titles referred to in the note below.³

II. ORIGIN AND RATIONALE OF THE EQUITABLE JURISDICTION.—The jurisdiction of chancery to afford relief in cases of accident is very ancient and perhaps coeval with its existence.⁴

definition was adopted in Kopper v. Dyer, 59 Vt. 482, 59 Am. Rep. 742; Herbert v. Herbert, 49 N. J. Eq. 70; Lott v. Kaiser, 61 Tex. 669; Gottlieb v. Stranahan (Brooklyn City Ct.), 19 N. Y. Supp. 161.

Other Definitions.—In Jeremy Eq. Jur., bk. 3, pt. 2, p. 358, the term in this connection is described as "an occurrence in relation to a contract, which was not anticipated by the parties when the same was entered into, and which gives an undue advantage to one of them over the other in a court of law." Mr. Story takes exception to this definition as being too narrow, in that accidents relievable in equity may arise in connection with subjects other than contracts; and as being further defective because it does not exclude instances of unexpected events and occurrences resulting from the negligence or misconduct of the party seeking relief. That learned author suggests the following: "By the term 'accident' is here intended not merely inevitable casualty, or the act of Providence, or what is technically called vis major, or irresistible force, but such unforeseen events, misfortunes, losses, acts, or omissions, as are not the result of any negligence or misconduct in the party." 1 Story Eq. Jur. (13th ed.), p. 84. This definition was adopted by the court in Alexander v. Bailey, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 639; Bostwick v. Stiles, 35 Conn. 198; Simpson v. Montgomery, 25 Ark. 370, 99 Am. Dec. 228. But Mr. Pomeroy objects to it as giving the popular rather than the technical idea of the term, and also as comprehending cases which are not accidents, but mistakes. See 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. (2d ed.), § 823, note. And in the justness of this objection Rowell, J., for the court in Kopper v. Dyer, 59 Vt. 482, 59 Am. Rep. 742, concurs.

Lord Chancellor Cowper in Bath v. Sherwin, 10 Mod. 3, said: "By accident is meant, when a case is distinguished from others of the like nature by unusual circumstances." But this is so very loose and inaccurate as to be of no practical value. See Simpson v. Montgomery, 25 Ark. 373, 99 Am. Dec. 228.

In Smith's Man. Eq. Jur. 36, "accident" is spoken of as "an unforeseen and injurious occurrence not attributable to mistake, neglect, or misconduct." And this definition is adopted in Bispham's Princ. of Eq., p. 229.

Georgia Code.—In the code of Georgia it is said: "An accident relievable in equity is such an occurrence, not the result of negligence or misconduct of the party seeking relief in relation to a contract, as was not anticipated by the parties when the same was entered into, and which gives an undue advantage to one of them over another in a court of law." Georgia Code 1882, § 3112.

Avoiding Effect of Deed in Terms Absolute.—In Lott v. Kaiser, 61 Tex. 667, a father conveyed land to his minor children by a deed purporting to have been made in consideration of natural love and affection, and to convey in presenti, containing no reservation or exception whatever. The grantor attempted to show by parol evidence that he intended the deed to take effect at his death; that he signed it with the intention of remaining in possession; and that the only object of making it was to protect the property conveyed against the claims of his wife in the event of his death. It was held that the legal effect of the instrument could not be so controlled; that such a claim of accident in the execution of the deed could not avail; its execution was not an accident, for the accident that will afford ground for relief in such a case must be an unknown and unexpected event occurring externally to the grantor, and of which his own agency is not the proximate cause.

Accident was a circumstance on which relief might have been obtained under the Roman system of jurisprudence, on the ground of natural justice.¹

Essentials.—The aid of equity may not, however, be successfully invoked in every case of accident. In order that the jurisdiction may be maintained, two conditions must concur: first, the suitor must be, in good conscience, entitled to the relief; second, there must be the impossibility of obtaining suitable relief in a court of law.² But when these two circumstances exist, equity will restore the rights which have been lost by accident.³

Subsequent Acquisition of Jurisdiction by Courts of Law.—It should be observed that when the jurisdiction of chancery has once rightfully attached to a given subject matter, on account of the original denial by courts of law of a suitable remedy, it is not affected by a subsequent assumption of jurisdiction by such courts, nor because authority to grant relief has been conferred upon them by legislative enactment.⁴

III. IN WHAT CASES EQUITY WILL INTERPOSE—1. Forfeitures and Penalties.—Originally, the jurisdiction of chancery to relieve against forfeitures and penalties arose in cases where default was attributable to accident; but subsequently it was enlarged, and now embraces all cases of default from whatsoever cause arising, and irrespective of the question of accident. The treatment here will be confined to cases of accidental forfeitures; the subject of forfeitures generally will be discussed elsewhere in this work.⁵

General Rule.—It may be stated as a general rule, that if a party is prevented by unavoidable accident, and without his fault or negligence, from a literal execution of his agreement, and thereby a penalty or forfeiture is incurred, chancery will relieve therefrom, upon the terms of his making compensation, if necessary, or of doing everything else in his power to satisfy the equitable claims of the other party; and this although the agreement is not entirely pecuniary, and is not one measured by pecuniary compensation.⁶

Accidental Default of Mortgagor.—When a mortgagor, without neglect or fault, is prevented by accident from paying an instalment at the time specified in a decree of foreclosure, equity will afford relief, but on terms that he satisfy the equitable rights of the other party.⁷ In one instance, where the mortgagor

2. In 2 Black. Com. 431 it is stated: "Many accidents are also supplied in a court of law; as loss of deeds, mistakes in receipts or accounts, wrong payments, deaths which make it impossible to perform a condition literally, and a multitude of other contingencies."

3. To correct and relieve against accidents and mistakes is one of the principal objects and most ordinary duties of courts of equity. Simpson v. Montgomery, 25 Ark. 370, 99 Am. Dec. 228. See the cases cited in the succeeding sections.

Forfeiture of Estate Conditioned for Maintenance of Grantee.—In Henry v. Tupper, 29 Vt. 358, it was held that equity may relieve against the forfeiture of an estate conditioned for the maintenance and support of the grantee when the forfeiture is accidental and unintentional and not attended with irreparable injury; but that it rests in the sound discretion of the court when relief shall be granted in such cases.

7. Kopper v. Dyer, 59 Vt. 477, 59 Am. Rep. 742. Here the mortgagor had taken means to obtain the money for redeeming the premises which made it reasonably certain that he would succeed; but he did not, by reason of the failure of the party promising the money to meet him at the appointed time; and as the result of this unexpected occurrence, of which his agency was not the cause, he was delayed until after banking hours and was thereby prevented from sending the money to the clerk of the court in season for payment within the time named by the decree. It was held that this was an accident, and that the mortgagor was entitled to redeem.

In Bostwick v. Stiles, 35 Conn. 195, which is in all essential respects like the foregoing case, a similar conclusion was reached.

Failure to Redeem Land—False Return of was prevented by accident from reaching the place of the foreclosure sale until after the sale was completed, the court ordered a resale, but on terms.¹

2. Judgments—General Rule.—Any fact which clearly proves it to be against good conscience to execute a judgment, and of which the injured party might have availed himself at law but was prevented from so doing by accident, without any fault or negligence on his part, will justify an application to a court of chancery, which will enjoin further action on the judgment, or set it aside so that a new trial may be had upon the merits.²

No Relief in Case of Negligence—Rule Inflexible.—The rule is absolutely inflexible that it must appear that the omission of the complainant to avail himself of the defense at law was unmixed with any negligence in himself or his agents.³

Illness of Counsel.—In one instance where the failure to defend the suit was due to the absence of the complainant's counsel, occasioned by illness, and in consequence his property was sacrificed, equity interposed and set aside the sale.⁴

Sheriff.—Where a party failed to redeem land in time because he was misled by the records of the court, upon which was spread the date of sale as taken from the sheriff's false return, this stating a date subsequent to the proper one, it was held that he could not be thus deprived of his right of redemption provided he tendered the proper amount within the requisite time from the original entry, although the record was subsequently changed so as to show the proper date, he being ignorant of the alteration until too late. Alexander v. Bailey, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 636.

1. Adams v. Haskell, 10 Wis. 123. In this case the accident was the breaking down of the vehicle containing the mortgagor's agent, while on the way to the sale. The court said: "This was an unavoidable accident, for which no one connected with this case was probably responsible. So there was really no objection to confirming the sale. But the circuit court, upon application, thought proper to order a resale upon the conditions named in the order. This was a very sound exercise of discretion, under the circumstances, and we think the terms imposed reasonable and just."

Appeal from Probate of Will.—In Burbeck v. Little, 50 Vt. 713, a petition under Gen. Stat. Vermont, c. 38, § 5, for allowance of an appeal from the probate of a will, alleged that the petitioner was the niece and one of the heirs at law of the testator; that by reason of "the accident" of residing out of the state she did not hear of the testator's death, nor of the probate of his will, until after the time for appeal from the probate had elapsed, although notice of probate was duly published. On demurrer to the petition it was held that there was no accident within the meaning of the statute, and the petition could not be maintained.

3. Richmond Enquirer Co. v. Robinson, 24 Gratt. (Va.) 548; Thomason v. Fannin, 54 Ga. 367.

In Pollock v. Gilbert, 16 Ga. 398, 60 Am. Dec. 732, it was said that the rule is stern and inflexible, that a party cannot ask for relief in equity on the ground that he has failed to make a legal defense at law, even where the judgment at law is manifestly wrong, unless he was prevented from doing so by fraud or accident, unmixed with any fraud or negligence in himself or agent.

And the court in Meem v. Rucker, 10 Gratt. (Va.) 509, states the general rule as follows:

"Now, that a party to whom a day and an opportunity have been allowed to make his defense against a demand set up against him in the court of law, but who has wholly failed to avail himself of them, will not be entertained in the court of chancery on a bill seeking relief against the judgment which has been rendered against him in consequence of his default, upon grounds which might have been successfully taken in the court of law, unless some reason, founded in fraud, accident, surprise, or some adventitious circumstance beyond the control of the party, be shown why the defense was not made in that court, is a proposition which has been so repeatedly affirmed that it has become a principle and maxim of equity as well settled as any other whatever."

4. Brown v. Elliott, 17 N. J. Eq. 353.

3. Powers—Non-execution.—Equity assumes no jurisdiction in the case of the non-execution of a mere naked power, resulting from accident.¹

Powers Coupled with a Trust.—This rule, however, does not apply to powers coupled with a trust; where powers of this character are required to be executed by the trustee in favor of certain persons, and they fail of execution by accident, equity will afford suitable relief.²

Defective Execution.—In case of defective execution on account of accident, or in case of an agreement to execute, which is looked upon as a sort of defective execution, equity will, under some circumstances, interpose and decree a complete execution.³

The Defects Remedied.—The defects that will be corrected are such as occur in matters of form, as, for example, the want of a signature, seal, witnesses, and the like, and not such as are of the essence of the power.⁴

To Whom Relief Granted.—This equitable jurisdiction will be exercised only in favor of persons who are in a moral sense entitled to relief, and where there are no countervailing equities;⁵ as, for instance, in favor of purchasers,⁶ creditors,⁷ wives, legitimate children,⁸ and charities;⁹ but not in behalf of husbands,¹⁰ illegitimate children,¹¹ remote relations,¹² strangers,¹³ or the donee himself.¹⁴

Confined to Powers Created by Private Individuals.—These principles apply only to powers created by private persons, and do not extend to those created by statute; the defective execution of powers of this latter kind cannot be helped by courts of equity.¹⁵

4. Confusion of Boundaries.—Another instance of the exercise of the equitable jurisdiction, partly referable to the occasion of accident, is where confusion exists relative to the boundaries between adjoining estates.¹ And in case of a rent charge where, on account of such confusion, the remedy by distress therefor is defeated, equity will grant relief.²

5. Lost Instruments.—One of the most familiar instances of equitable interference on the ground of accident is where bonds or other instruments giving legal rights have been lost.³ As this subject will be treated exhaustively elsewhere in this work, further reference here is unnecessary.⁴

6. Other Instances.—There are certain other cases in which this extraordinary jurisdiction will be exercised, and which are referable to the occasion of accident.

Administration of Estates—Deficiency of Assets.—If an executor or administrator pays debts, legacies, or distributive shares upon the supposition that the assets are adequate to meet all demands, and it turns out that they are inadequate, he may obtain relief in equity, as otherwise he would innocently suffer from what the law regards as an accident.⁵

Bills and Notes—Accidental Omission of Indorsement.—Where, upon the transfer of a bill of exchange or promissory note, an indorsement thereof is intended, but is accidentally omitted, the transferee, or, in the event of his death, his executor or administrator, may be compelled in equity to make the indorsement.⁶

Failure of Contract of Apprenticeship—Bankruptcy of Master.—Where a minor is bound out as apprentice, and a large premium is paid to the master, who becomes bankrupt in the course of the apprenticeship, equity will interpose and apportion the premium, upon the ground of the failure of the contract by reason of accident.⁷

Annuity Secured by Public Stock—Reduction of Latter by Statute.—Where an annuity is directed by a will to be secured by public stock, and an investment therein is made, sufficient at the time, but subsequently rendered insufficient by an act of parliament in reference to the stock, equity will decree the deficiency to be made up by the residuary legatees, on the ground of accident.⁸

IV. IN WHAT CASES EQUITY WILL NOT INTERPOSE—1. General Principles—Equal Equities.—Relief from the consequences of accident is never given when the party against whom it is asked has an equity equal to or greater than that of the party seeking it.⁹

Negligence.—And the same is true when the accident is the result of the negligence or fault of the party invoking the aid of the court.¹⁰

Bona Fide Purchasers.—It is a general rule that courts of equity will not interfere to grant relief against a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice, on the ground of accident, as he has an equal equity to the protection of the court. Ligon v. Rogers, 12 Ga. 292.

10. Ex p. Greenway, 6 Ves. Jr. 812; Marine Ins. Co. v. Hodgson, 7 Cranch (U. S.) 332; Sedam v. Williams, 4 McLean (U. S.)

Mere Expectancy.—Again, equity will not interpose at the instance of one whose claim is not a vested right, but a mere expectancy. To illustrate: If a testator is prevented by accident from making a will in favor of a certain person, equity cannot relieve against the disappointment, as its jurisdiction does not extend to accidents which prevent voluntary dispositions of estates.¹

2. Contracts.—In matters of express contract, the fact that the party has been prevented by accident from discharging the obligations created, or that he has been without fault, or that he has been accidentally prevented from deriving the full benefit of the contract on his side, constitutes no ground for equitable interposition.² The reason is this: the party was free to guard against such contingencies by his contract, and as he did not so guard against them, the law presumes an intentional general liability.³

An exception to the general rule is found in the case of contracts involving penalties and forfeitures.⁴ Further reference to this subject here is unnecessary, as it will be treated exhaustively under a subsequent title.⁵

3. Lost Records.—Chancery has no jurisdiction to supply or re-establish the records of courts of law which have been destroyed by accident. This power pertains to the court in which the record was made, and is a power inherent in courts of general jurisdiction.⁶

Confirming Title Dependent upon Lost Records.—But equity may confirm a title acquired by virtue of a judicial sale, when the record of the decree and proceedings under which it was had are subsequently lost or destroyed.⁷

Bond Destroyed by Obligor.—Equity will not grant relief to an obligee in a bond who has destroyed or suppressed the same. Davis v. Davis, 6 Ired. Eq. (N. Car.) 418.

Intervention of Incumbrances.—In Gotthelf v. Stranahan (Brooklyn City Ct.), 19 N. Y. Supp. 161, the date appointed for the execution of a conveyance of city lots by the vendor, with covenants against incumbrances (9th of February), was postponed several times at the instance of the vendor, in order that he might remove squatters; finally, on the 4th of May he tendered a conveyance with the required covenants, as of the date originally fixed. In the meantime an assessment for improvements had been made against the property. The vendor had known of the likelihood that the assessment would be made, and by his remonstrance might have defeated it. Moreover, by prompt proceedings he might have removed the squatters, and completed the contract before the assessment was made. It was held that the intervention of the assessment, and the dealings of the parties considered with reference thereto, did not entitle the vendor to relief on the ground of accident.

I. DEFINITION.—Accident Insurance is an insurance against personal injury, or loss of life, by accident, and, though applied to a particular class of risks, depends upon essentially the same principles as other kinds of insurance. The value of the interest insured is not capable of exact determination after loss, as in the case of fire and marine insurance, but it may be fixed by the parties within such limits as will not make it a wager policy.¹

Distinguished from Casualty Insurance.—The distinguishing feature of accident insurance is that it indemnifies against the effects of accidents resulting in bodily injury or death. Its field is not to insure against loss or damage to property although occasioned by accident. So far as the latter class of insurance has been developed, it has been with reference to boilers, plate-glass, and perhaps to domestic animals, and injuries to property by street-cars, and is popularly known as Casualty Insurance.²

Field of Accident Insurance Extended.—Accident insurance was originally confined to accidents to the person of the insured, but it has lately been extended to cover contracts of indemnity of the assured against losses by injuries to persons in whom he has an insurable interest, because legally liable for the consequences of the accident.³

1. May on Insurance (3d ed.), §§ 7, 535.

2. See the titles BOILER INSURANCE; PLATE-GLASS INSURANCE; and the other kinds of Casualty Insurance.

3. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp. v. Merrill, 155 Mass. 404. Here it was held that policies of insurance to indemnify the assured, as owner of a horse, vehicle, or elevator causing accidental personal injuries for which he may be legally liable, against claims for compensation therefor, or as landlord or tenant for such injuries to persons other than employees or persons injured by elevators, or as a builder or contractor for such injuries to workmen employed by other contractors, and to the public, caused by the assured and his own workmen, but not caused by a subcontractor or his workmen, all cover legitimate varieties of accident insurance, and may lawfully be issued by a foreign insurance company licensed to issue accident policies and

II. THE APPLICATION—Policy Referring to Application.—Where the policy provides that "in consideration of the statement of facts warranted to be true in the application for this policy, and of the payment" of certain sums, the company "hereby insures," etc., the application so referred to in the policy constitutes a part of the contract of insurance.¹ And in such case there can be no recovery if the statements in the application are not true.² And this, regardless of whether the statements were or were not material to the risk, since the agreement of the parties is conclusive and the question of materiality is no longer an open one.³

Application not Made Part of the Contract.—But where the application is not made a part of the contract and the policy contains no warranty of the truth of the statements in the application, both the materiality and the truth of the statements of the assured in applying for the policy are to be determined by the jury; and in an action on the policy a recovery may not be defeated unless such statements, or some of them, are found to be both material and untrue.⁴

Statements Expressing the Applicant's Understanding of the Effect of the Insurance.—Statements in the application expressing the applicant's understanding of what will be the effect of the insurance cannot control the legal construction of the policy subsequently issued and accepted, notwithstanding the application warrants the facts stated therein to be true, and the policy is expressed to be made "in consideration of the warranties made in the application."⁵

Policy Differing from Application.—Where the policy as delivered contains provisions not in the application, and which are not accepted by the applicant, they may be treated as waived by the company, and constituting no part of the insurance contract.⁶

General Rule of Construction.—The contract of insurance is construed liberally in favor of the insured, it being held, usually, that the failure of the applicant to mention a physical infirmity from which he had at a former period suffered, but from which he was at the time of the application free, so that it did not increase his liability to accidental injury, nor contribute in any respect to the injury in question, will not affect the policy.⁷ employers' liability policies, or by any company organized under the Massachusetts Insurance Act of 1887, c. 214, § 29, cl. 5; and the fact that a foreign insurance company has issued such policies is not a cause for the revocation of its license. In Cram v. Equitable Acc. Assoc., 58 Hun (N. And if this certificate * * * has been * * * obtained through misrepresentation * * * then the same shall be absolutely null and void." The application for the certificate required an answer to the following question: "4th. Occupation? If more than one, name them all"; which was answered, "Oil producer;" and also to the following question: "State the duties required of you under that occupation;" which was answered, "Supervising only." The undisputed evidence was that the insured had a small lease of oil lands upon which he had two or more wells which he managed and operated himself, doing every part of the work alone which could be done by one man; that he tended his own boilers, ran his own engine, pumped his wells, "pulled" his wells, and made his own repairs, without assistance except upon extraordinary occasions. It was held that the representations made by the insured were incorrect, and that the certificate was, for that reason, void.

Statements as to Bodily or Mental Infirmity.—An anemic murmur, indicating no structural defect of the heart, but caused by a tempo-

III. PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS—1. In General.—The same general rules in regard to the payment of premiums, giving notice as to same, etc., which govern other insurance, apply in the case of accident insurance.¹ Ordinarily the rary weakened condition of the body, is not within the meaning of the term "bodily or mental infirmity" in the application in which the applicant states his freedom from such infirmity. Manufacturers' Acc. Indemnity Co. v. Dorgan, 58 Fed. Rep. 945.

Erysipelas.—In a suit on an accident policy where the petition alleged that the deceased died of erysipelas, resulting from an accidental laceration of the finger, an answer averring that in the contract of insurance the deceased had warranted "that he had never had, and had not then, any bodily or mental infirmity, whereas in truth * * * said deceased had on various occasions prior thereto been afflicted with, and was then subject to and infected with, erysipelas, * * * and that he eventually died of erysipelas," was held to be demurrable as failing to state a defense, because it did not show that erysipelas was an infirmity which increased the risk of death in the event of accident. Bernays v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 45 Fed. Rep. 455.

Nearsightedness.—In Cotten v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 41 Fed. Rep. 506, the application contained a warranty that the applicant did not have, neither was subject to, any bodily infirmity. The evidence showed that he was nearsighted. This was held to be not a bodily infirmity within the meaning of the warranty.

Fits.—The insured stated that he was not suffering from any disease which would retard recovery or be aggravated by personal injury; that he never had fits, disorders of the brain, or bodily or mental infirmity which would thereby render him liable to personal injuries. There was evidence that the deceased had been thrown from a horse, striking his head, and had fits. There was also testimony by those who had known him for years, that he was strong and robust, and that they had never known of his having any ailment. It was held that the weight of the evidence was not in favor of misrepresentations as to his physical condition. Brink v. Guaranty Mut. Acc. Assoc. (Supreme Ct.), 28 N. Y. St. Rep. 921.

Former Insanity.—The defendant insured M. against accidents. M. had been a canvasser for the defendant, and the president had cautioned him not to insure insane persons. M. had been insane, but had been pronounced cured. He did not disclose this fact upon his application for insurance, but stated that there were no circumstances rendering him peculiarly liable to accident. It was held that the conversation with the president had no bearing upon the application, and that if the deceased did not conceal any facts which in his own mind were material in making the application the policy was not void. Mallory v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 47 N. Y. 52, 7 Am. Rep. 410.

Statements as to Occupation.—The application stated that the insured was a "livery stable proprietor not working." It was shown that he employed men to do the work, but sometimes harnessed and drove the horses himself. It was held that the statements sufficiently apprised the defendant of the character of his duties, and that if anything more definite was required it was the defendant's duty to ascertain the facts by proper inquiries. Brink v. Guaranty Mut. Acc. Assoc. (Supreme Ct.), 28 N. Y. St. Rep. 921.

In Murphey v. American Mut. Acc. Assoc. (Wis., 1895), 62 N. W. Rep. 1057, the policy was conditioned upon the truthfulness of the representations in the application. On the issue as to whether the plaintiff at the time of the application was a carpenter, he testified that at the time of the application he was "cutting cordwood," that afterward he was "framing timbers—framing]sets and caps." Several witnesses, without being contradicted, testified that he was not a carpenter. It was held that a finding of the jury that the plaintiff was a carpenter should be set aside as against the evidence.

In Perrins v. Marine, etc., Ins. Soc., 2 El. & El. 317, 105 E. C. L. 316, the insured described himself as "A. B., Esq." He was, in fact, an ironmonger. It was held that the policy was not thereby avoided. This was upon the ground that the statement was simply imperfect, and not untrue.

Statement as to Other Insurance.—In Craig v. Imperial Union Acc. Assoc. Co., 1 Scot. L. T. R. 646, the insured being asked, "Have you ever been insured with other companies?" answered that he was insured in The Railway Passenger Co., but concealed the fact that he was also insured with The General Accident Corporation. There was no evidence that he acted fraudulently. It was held that the fact undisclosed had no bearing on the risk, and therefore did not affect the contract.

Statement as to Marriage.—In Standard L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Martin, 133 Ind. 376, the facts in the application were warranted to be true, and the application contained the following: "Write policy payable, in case of death by accident under its provisions, to Mrs. Fred. Martin, whose relation to me is that of wife." The insured was a single man. The statement was held to be neither a warranty nor a material representation.

But see Smith v. Baltimore, etc., R. Co. (Md., 1895), 32 Atl. Rep. 181. Here the application provided that the truth of answers to questions should be a condition precedent to the payment of benefits, and that the beneficiaries whom the insured could name were limited to wife and children if married, and father and mother if single. The deceased named as his beneficiary a person whom he falsely alleged to be his wife. It was held on demurrer in an action by the child of a former wife of the deceased, who at the time of his taking the policy had been divorced, that there could be no recovery, on the ground that the applicant's misstatement defeated the right of anybody to recover.

premiums are payable in instalments, and the policies provide that there shall be no recovery thereon for injuries which are received during any insurance-period for which the premium has not been actually paid.¹

When Policy Takes Effect.—Where the application, expressly made a part of the policy, provides that the company shall not be liable for injuries occurring before the "receipt and acceptance" of the application and fee, the insurance is not operative until acceptance, and the company is not estopped to deny liability for injuries received by the applicant prior thereto, by having received the application and retained the fee.²

Inconsistency between Application and Policy.—But where the application states that the applicant will be entitled to no benefits "until after the receipt and acceptance of this application and the membership fee and the amount of one assessment" by a designated officer, and the policy provides for the payment of a certain sum upon its delivery, and a further sum, but without specifying when the latter is payable, the policy takes effect upon the delivery thereof and the payment of the sum called for by the policy upon delivery.³

Default in Premium Falling Due after the Accident.—Where the policy provides for indemnity if the death of the insured occurs within ninety days after accident, and from the effects thereof, and death does so occur within the time limited, the circumstance that before the death of the insured his policy expired because of default in paying an assessment falling due after the accident does not relieve the company from liability, since its liability attached immediately upon the occurrence of the injury.⁴

Premium Sent by Mail.—The question whether an assessment, claimed to have been remitted to the company by post, was in fact received by it prior to the injury of the assured, is one for the jury to determine.⁵

Notice.—Where, according to the certificate of membership in an association operating on the assessment plan, members were entitled to one month, after notice of the assessment, to pay the same, and on the envelope containing the certificate was indorsed "first assessment payable February 1st," the failure to pay before that date an assessment made January 1st, and of which the member had received no notice, was held not to forfeit the certificate. Ball v. North Western Mut. Acc. Assoc., 56 Minn. 414.

Where the by-laws of a mutual benefit association provided for the forfeiture of membership in the event of the failure of the member to pay any assessment "within thirty days from the date of the notice thereof," a notice which was mailed so as to reach the insured November 30th, and which demanded payment on or before December 28th, was held not sufficient to sustain a forfeiture. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc., etc., v. Mueller, 151 Ill. 254.

2. "Receipt and Acceptance" of Application.—Coker v. Atlas Acc. Ins. Co. (Tex. Civ. App., 1895), 31 S. W. Rep. 703. In this case it was expressly stated in the application that the company would not be liable for any bodily injury happening prior to the receipt and acceptance of the application and the membership fee by the general agent in Boston. The application had been given to the agent in Texas April 2d. The injury was received April 5th. Across the face of the application was written the following, "accepted April 8th," which was the same date as the issuance of the policy. Insured died April 12th. The pleading of the plaintiff did not allege that it was accepted at any other date, but it was argumentatively stated that the application was received on April 5th and not rejected. It was held that this pleading was not sufficient to overcome the effect of the written acceptance set out in the plea as a bar thereto, and the agreement on the part of the assured that the liability of the company should not extend to any injury prior to the date of such acceptance.

Oral Agreement for Present Insurance—Wisconsin.—Under R. S. Wisconsin, § 1979, an oral agreement for present insurance made by the agent of an accident insurance company is binding upon the latter, although the application signed by the person to be insured contained (unknown to the applicant) a provision that the company should not be liable for any injury happening prior to the receipt and acceptance of the application and membership fee by the secretary and general manager, and the policy subsequently issued bore date two days later than the oral agreement. Mathers v. Union Mut. Acc. Assoc., 78 Wis. 588.

2. Payment by Order on Wages.—It is customary for companies insuring railway and other corporation employees to take orders from the insured on his employer to pay the premiums as they fall due, the amount of the same to be deducted from his wages. In such cases it is generally held that the insurer must notify the insured of the nonpayment of his order before he may insist upon the forfeiture of the policy.¹

A provision, in a policy issued to a railroad employee, that the insured shall leave in the hands of a designated official of the road the instalments of premium as agreed in an order of the insured on such official to retain the instalments out of his wages, is complied with by the insured leaving the instalments in the hands of the designated official without seeing that he turns them over to the company.² In one instance where the company failed to present the order for payment before the death of the insured, although several months had intervened, it was held estopped to set up the defense of nonpayment of the premium.³

3. Waiver by Agent of Condition as to Payment.—The company may be bound by the waiver, on the part of its general agent, of the conditions of the policy as to payment of premiums.⁴

1. Eury v. Insurance Co., 89 Tenn. 427; Lyon v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 55 Mich. 141. In this latter case it was held that the payment of premiums will be presumed to have been made out of a fund provided and assigned for that purpose until notice of nonpayment is given to the insured.

Where the company waives a cash payment of the premium and accepts in lieu thereof an order for the same, given by the insured on a third person, and gives a receipt for the amount, it cannot defeat a recovery on the policy and insist upon a forfeiture as for nonpayment of the premium without having given the insured notice of the nonpayment of the order. National Ben. Assoc. v. Jackson, 114 Ill. 533. The court here distinguishes the case from one where the insured gives his promissory note for the premium which he fails to pay at maturity, and where the policy provides for forfeiture for nonpayment of the note.

Payment of Premium by Order on Employer—No Wages Earned.—In Bane v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 85 Ky. 677, the company issued to the plaintiff an accident policy for one year from January 10th. In payment of the premiums plaintiff gave an order on his employer for twenty dollars, payable in instalments of five dollars each, to be deducted from his wages for the months of January, February, March, and April. The drawee of the order did not accept it, but paid the January and February instalments. He did not pay those of the two months succeeding, the plaintiff not working during that time. On the first of May the plaintiff resumed work, and on the 10th of the same month there was due him more than ten dollars; and on the 28th of the same month he met with the accident for which the action on the policy was brought. The company did not demand the balance of the order from the drawee, nor notify the plaintiff of its nonpayment, nor return or offer to return it, nor notify the plaintiff that the contract was at an end. The policy by its terms divided the twelve months into four periods, of two, two, three, and five months, respectively, and provided that each of the four instalments of the order should apply to the payment of the premium for a single period, and that no liability should be incurred by reason of an accident occurring within a period for which the instalment should not have been actually paid. It was held that the action, under the circumstances, could not be maintained. To the same effect is McMahon v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 77 Iowa 229.

2. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Johnson (Miss., 1895), 17 So. Rep. 2.

3. Cotten v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 41 Fed. Rep. 506.

4. Waiver by General Agent.—Standard Acc. Ins. Co. v. Friedenthal, 1 Colo. App. 5. In this case the person who delivered the policy having the apparent authority of a general agent, and therefore being such as to third persons, the insurer was held bound by his waiver as to the condition of payment of premiums. See also Mathers v. Union Mut. Acc. Assoc., 78 Wis. 588.

Waiver by Soliciting and Collecting Agent.—In Kerlin v. National Acc. Assoc. (Ind., 1893), 35 N. E. Rep. 39, it is held that an agent of an insurance company with authority to solicit applications and collect premiums has authority to waive a provision in the policy calling for payment of premiums in quarterly instalments, and to accept payment of the whole annual premium in advance. Here the insured tendered the collection agent the full amount of his annual premium, and the agent accepted only a part thereof and promised to pay the company the residue in satisfaction of a debt owing by him to the insured. It was held that the company was bound by the agent's waiver of the cash payment, since the insured, who acted in entire good faith, had a right to rely on the agent's representation that the transaction constituted payment in full of the premium.

But in Cronkhite v. Accident Ins. Co. of North America, 35 Fed. Rep. 26, it is said that while authority to give credit and to change the terms of the policy belongs to the general agent having power to complete the contract, it does not extend to a mere subagent or soliciting agent who is charged merely with the matter of collecting premiums or soliciting insurance. The facts in this case were as follows: A obtained an accident policy, the general agent giving him until November 1st, following, to pay the premium. At that date, in company with B, who was a soliciting agent for the company, and who had conducted the negotiations with A and was authorized to collect the premium, A went to the general agent's office to make the payment, but was informed by the person who had acted as general agent at the time of the issuance of the policy that he was no longer such agent, and that his successor was absent. Thereupon A and B went out, and the latter promised the former that he would return in the afternoon and himself pay the amount of the premium and look to him for reimbursement. He did call at the office several times during the afternoon, but was unable to find the general agent, so the premium was not paid. It was held, in an action on the policy, that A had not exercised sufficient diligence to avoid a forfeiture for nonpayment of the premium.

4. Estoppel to Deny Payment—By Language of Policy.—The company may be estopped by reason of the terms of the policy to deny that the premiums have been paid.¹

By Acknowledgment of Payment in Policy.—And it has been held, on grounds of public policy, that the company will be estopped to prove, for the purpose of avoiding the contract of insurance, that the premium, acknowledged in the policy to have been paid, was not in fact paid.²

5. Forfeiture for Nonpayment.—The clause providing for forfeiture for nonpayment of premiums is inserted in the policy for the benefit of the insured and may be waived by him; and courts will find a waiver upon slight evidence when the equity of the claim made is, under the contract, in favor of the insured.³

1. When Insurer Estopped to Deny Payment as against the Beneficiary.—Kline v. National Ben. Assoc., 111 Ind. 462, 60 Am. Rep. 703. In this case it was held that where both the policy of insurance, which provides that it is incontestable except on the ground of fraud, and the application state, the one by express words and the other by a clear implication, that the consideration has been paid, the insurer is estopped to deny payment as against the beneficiary, and the policy is enforceable by the latter, although part of the premium was not in fact paid, but instead orders were given therefor by the insured on his employer, who at his request refused to pay them, and notwithstanding the orders stipulated that if they were not paid the insured's right would be thereby forfeited. See also Wright v. Mutual Ben. L. Assoc., 43 Hun (N. Y.) 61; Wood v. Dwarrior, 11 Exch. 493; Wheaton v. Hardisty, 8 El. & Bl. 232, 92 E. C. L. 231.

Payment of Indemnity—Not Conclusive of Payment of Premium.—In Melin v. Accident Ins.

Co. of North America, 70 Wis. 579, the facts were these: A policy for one year was issued to a brakeman, who gave an order on the railroad company by which he was employed, for the premiums, aggregating thirty dollars, payable in four equal instalments. The policy provided that in the event of any injury to the insured before the actual payment of the first instalment, then the sum of all unpaid instalments called for by said order should be deducted from the amount due for such injury, and the order should thereupon be cancelled. Each instalment was to pay the premium for a definite insurance period, the periods being two, two, three, and five months, respectively. There was to be no liability by reason of any injury occurring in any insurance period for which the premium had not been actually paid. Before the payment of the first instalment the insured was injured, and the company paid him $22.50 in cash and credited the first instalment of $7.50 as paid. Nothing was ever paid on the order of the railroad company. Just before the expiration of the year the insured was killed. In an action on the policy it was held that the cash payment to the insured on account of his injury, to which under the policy he was not entitled unless the instalments of premium had been paid, did not raise a conclusive presumption that all such instalments had in fact been paid.

3. Waiver of Forfeiture.—Lyon v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 55 Mich. 141.

An insurance company will not be permitted to insist upon a forfeiture if by any agreement, either express or implied by the course of its conduct, it induces the insured honestly to believe that the premiums will be received after the appointed day. Sweetser v. Odd Fellows Mut. Aid Assoc., 117 Ind. 97; Painter v. Industrial L. Assoc., 131 Ind. 69.

In Equitable Acc. Ins. Co. v. Van Etten, 40 Ill. App. 232, the policy was issued in consideration of promissory notes given by the appellee for the premium; and the policy was conditioned that it should be void if any such note due before the happening of the accident was not paid when due; the last of such notes (the others being then paid) was due and unpaid seven months before the accident. The notes were on their face payable at the office of the company at Chicago. From the evidence it appeared that such notes were more frequently in fact paid by

IV. FORM, SCOPE, AND GENERAL NATURE OF POLICY.—The ordinary accident policy provides for an indemnity of a fixed sum per week in case of accidental injury, for twenty-six weeks, and a fixed sum in case of death within ninety days after the accident.¹

The more recent policies also provide for a fixed sum in case of loss of sight, hands, or feet, which was a provision formerly more generally inserted in English policies.

Where an insurance company is authorized to insure against disabilities to persons by sickness or disease or other bodily infirmity it may issue general accident policies. One who loses a leg or arm, or is otherwise disabled, whether temporarily or permanently, by external or violent means, is one suffering from an imperfection, and is to that extent disabled by a bodily infirmity.²

As applied to liability insurance the policies cover injuries for which the insured may be responsible under the Employers' Liability Acts, generally called "Employers' Liability Policy," or injuries for which the insured may be legally liable either to employees or to the public.³

In the absence of a statutory provision requiring the contracts of insurance to be in writing they may be parol.⁴

Accordingly the policy may be reformed so as to conform to the nature of the understanding between the parties where it does not express the contract between the parties as they understood it.⁵

V. CONSIDERATION OF THE TERMS OF THE POLICY—1. Accidents and Injuries Usually Insured against—a. ACCIDENTAL INJURIES IN GENERAL—Accident Defined.—An accident, according to the generally received meaning of the term, is defined as the happening of an event without the aid and design of a person, and which is unforeseen,⁶ and in this sense the word is to be understood, in the ab-being sent to the places where the insured were employed, or elsewhere by casual meetings between agents of the company and the insured, and that the company, if the notes were not paid when due, still treated them and the policies as in force by sending notices to the assured, and also sending the notes in the hands of agents to collect them. The testimony of the appellee was that the agent of the company told him that he would collect at the place of business of the appellee, and that the other three notes for premiums on the policy were in fact so paid. The only part of this testimony disputed by the appellants was that, as to one of the three notes, it was paid by deduction from a former claim of the appellee. In fact the note in question was in the hands of an agent for collection probably before it was due. He did not present it, but laid it away and forgot it, and no notice was given to the appellee by anybody of anything calling his attention to the matter. It was held that under the circumstances the appellant could not insist upon a forfeiture.

1. For a standard form of accident policy, see Richards on Insurance (2d ed.), p. 598, Appendix.

See Dawson v. Accident Ins. Co., 38 Mo. App. 355, for a policy which insured as an accident indemnity policy simply, and provided no indemnity in case of instant death.

2. Miller v. American Mut. Acc. Ins. Co., 92 Tenn. 167.

3. Employers' Liability Assur. Co. v. Merrill, 155 Mass. 404.

4. In Rhodes v. Railway Pass. Ins. Co., 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 71, the plaintiff met the defendant's agent in the street and gave him 50 cents premium for a day's insurance. The agent promised to make out the policy. It was held that the plaintiff could maintain an action on the contract after loss.

5. Frank v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. (Neb., 1895), 62 N. W. Rep. 454. In this case the defendant's agent issued a ticket to plaintiff stating verbally that one third of the amount of the policy would be paid in case of the loss of a foot. The ticket did not contain this provision. It was held that the policy could be reformed to the agreement as mutually understood. In Henderson v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 65 Fed. Rep. 438, the insured asked for a policy which would cover intentional injuries inflicted by another, and the policy was issued with the exception against liability for such injuries, and was reformed after loss. See infra, this title, Agents.

Ultra Vires Contract.—Where an insurance company, which under its charter can insure only against accidents to travelers, issues a general accident policy, the contract is ultra vires, and the remedy of the insured is in disaffirmance of the contract and for an accounting. Miller v. American Mut. Acc. Ins. Co., 92 Tenn. 167. See, generally, the title ULTRA VIRES.

6. Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 112 N. Y. 472, 8 Am. St. Rep. 758.

Accidental is that which happens without design or expectation; it is defined as "the happening of an event without the design and aid of a person, and which sence of plain unequivocal exceptions and provisions, in a policy insuring against injury or death caused by accidental means.¹

If a result is such as follows from ordinary means voluntarily employed and in a not unusual or unexpected way, it cannot be called a result effected by accidental means.² But if in the act which precedes the injury something is unforeseen." This definition excludes the idea of design, and makes the event wholly involuntary. The opposite of accident is design, volition, intent. Williams v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc. (Supreme Ct.), 14 N. Y. Supp. 728, 38 N. Y. St. Rep. 378.

An accident is an event that takes place without one's foresight or expectation; an event which proceeds from unknown causes and therefore not expected; a chance, casualty, contingency. Accidental signifies happening by chance or unexpectedly; taking place not according to the usual course of things; casual, fortuitous. North American L., etc., Acc. Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. St. 43, 8 Am. Rep. 212; Mallory v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 47 N. Y. 52, 7 Am. Rep. 410.

An accident is an event happening without any human agency, or, if happening through human agency, an event which under the circumstances is unusual and not expected to the person to whom it happens. McGlinchey v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 80 Me. 251, 6 Am. St. Rep. 190.

An accident is that which takes place without one's foresight or expectation. Burkhard v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 102 Pa. St. 262, 48 Am. Rep. 205; Equitable Acc. Ins. Co. v. Osborn, 95 Ala. 201; Ripley v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co. (U. S. C. C.), 2 Bigelow Life & Acc. Ins. Cas. 738; Providence L. Ins., etc., Co. v. Martin, 32 Md. 315; Supreme Council, etc., v. Garrigus, 104 Ind. 140, 54 Am. Rep. 293.

Some violence, casualty, or vis major is necessarily involved in the term "accident." Sinclair v. Maritime Pass. Assur. Co., 3 El. & El. 478, 107 E. C. L. 476.

For a review of the various definitions of the term "accident," see Lovelace v. Travelers' Protective Assoc. (Mo., 1894), 28 S. W. Rep. 877. See also Fenwick v. Schmalz, L. R. 3 C. P. 313; Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 89 Cal. 170, 23 Am. St. Rep. 455; Duncan v. Preferred Mut. Acc. Assoc. (Super. Ct.), 13 N. Y. Supp. 620; Schneider v. Provident L. Ins. Co., 24 Wis. 28, 1 Am. Rep. 157.

Death by Accident has been defined to be death from any unexpected event which happens as by chance, or which does not take place according to the usual course of things. North American L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. St. 51, 8 Am. Rep. 212; Bacon v. U. S. Mut. Acc. Assoc., 44 Hun (N. Y.) 607.

Co.*, 89 Cal. 170, citing 1 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law (1st ed.) 87; Supreme Council, etc. v. Garrigus, 104 Ind. 140; Lovelace v. Trav. Protective Assoc. (Mo., 1894), 28 S. W. Rep. 877; Providence L. Ins., etc., Co. v. Martin, 32 Md. 315; Schneider v. Provident L. Ins. Co., 24 Wis. 28, 1 Am. Rep. 157.

In Lovelace v. Travelers' Protective Assoc. (Mo., 1894), 28 S. W. Rep. 877, it was held that the word "accident" in a policy of accident insurance was to be interpreted so as to give effect to the intention of the parties as expressed by the language they had used, and the term being no further limited than by its use in contradistinction to "death from natural causes," it was to be given its usual, natural, and popular meaning.

2. U. S. Mut. Acc. Assoc. v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100.

Injury Resulting from Swinging Indian Clubs.

—Where death was alleged to have occurred by reason of injury sustained from exercising with Indian clubs, it was held that if the deceased used the clubs for exercise, and, in the ordinary way of taking such exercise, without the occurrence of any unusual circumstance interfering with such use, or causing any unforeseen, accidental, or involuntary movement of the body, and in the use of the clubs in this manner there occurred the rupture of a blood-vessel, then the cause of the injury was not accidental; on the other hand, if there occurred any unforeseen accident, or involuntary movement of the body of the deceased which brought about in connection with the use of the clubs the injury, or if there occurred any unforeseen or unexpected circumstance which interfered with or obstructed the usual course of the exercise, and thereby was produced an involuntary movement, strain, or wrenching of the body by means of which the injury was caused, then the means might be said to be accidental. McCarthy v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (U. S., 1879), 7 Rep. 486.

Jumping from a Train.—Where a person was injured internally by jumping in great haste from a railroad train at a station and running a considerable distance, which action was not necessary to his safety, but was voluntarily undertaken to effect an important object which required haste, the injury cannot be said to be caused by accidental means within the meaning of the policy. Southard v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 34 Conn. 574.

Sunstroke.—Sunstroke or heat prostration contracted in the course of one's ordinary business is not an accidental injury within the terms of a policy insuring against bodily injury sustained through "external, violent, and accidental means," but expressly excepting "any diseases or bodily infirmity." Dozier v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 46 Fed. Rep. 446.

In Sinclair v. Maritime Pass. Assur. Co., 3 El. & El. 478, 107 E. C. L. 476, the policy assured against "any personal injury from or by reason or in consequence of, any accident which should happen to him, or upon any ocean, sea, river, or lake." The assured was the master of a ship, and in the course unforeseen, unexpected, and unusual occurs which produces the injury, then the injury has resulted through accidental means.¹

of his voyage arrived on the southwest coast of India, and in the usual course of his vocation suffered sunstroke, from the effects of which he died. It was held that his death must be considered as having resulted from a natural cause, and not from accident within the meaning of the policy. The policy did not contain the words "external, violent," and yet the chief justice held that the term "accident," as used in the policy, involved necessarily some violence, casualty, or vis major. He said: "We cannot think disease produced by the action of a known cause can be considered as accidental. Thus disease or death engendered by exposure to heat, cold, damp, the vicissitudes of climate, or atmospheric influences, cannot, we think, properly be said to be accidental; unless, at all events, the exposure is itself brought about by circumstances which may give it the character of accident. Thus, by way of illustration, if, from the effects of ordinary exposure to the elements, such as is common in the course of navigation, a mariner should catch cold and die, such death would not be accidental; although if, being obliged by shipwreck or other disasters to quit the ship and take to the sea in an open boat, he remained exposed to wet and cold for some time, and death ensued therefrom, the death might properly be held to be the result of accident. It is true that in one sense disease or death, through the direct effect of a known natural cause, such as we have referred to, may be said to be accidental, inasmuch as it is uncertain beforehand whether the effect will ensue in any particular case. Exposed to the same malaria or infection one man escapes, another succumbs. Yet diseases thus arising have always been considered not as accidental, but as proceeding from natural causes. In the present instance the disease called 'sunstroke,' although the name would at first seem to imply something of external violence, is, so far as we are informed, an inflammatory disease of the brain, brought on by exposure to the too intense heat of the sun's rays. It is a disease to which persons exposing themselves to the sun in a tropical climate are more or less liable, just as persons exposed to the other natural causes to which we have referred are liable to disastrous consequences therefrom. The deceased in the discharge of his ordinary duties about his ship became thus affected, and so died."

Unforeseen Result of Ordinary Occupation.—Where it appeared that the deceased, who had just risen from bed and was in the act of putting on his stockings, died suddenly, and that the cause of death was pressure upon the heart, resulting from the fact that the colon of the deceased had fallen out of its place and become folded, it was held that the death was not accidental within the meaning of a policy insuring against "bodily injury caused by violent, accidental, external, and visible means." Clidero v. Scottish Acc.

Ins. Co., 29 Scot. L. Rep. 303. Lord Adams, in delivering the judgment, said: "A person may do certain acts, the result of which may produce unforeseen consequences and may produce what is commonly called accidental death; but the means are exactly what the man intended to use, and did use, and was prepared to use. The means were not accidental, but the result might be accidental. Now, if that is so, where does the question of accident come in here? There is no evidence * * * that anything unusual or exceptional occurred as to the means or cause of this death. The man was just doing what he meant to do, and apparently a most unfortunate and unexpected result happened—the man's death."

1. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc. v. Barry, 131 U. S. 100.

Thus the following injuries have been held to have resulted through accidental means:

Disease Caused by Accident.—Strains caused by stooping or lifting. Hamlyn v. Crown Accidental Ins. Co. (1893), 1 Q. B. 750; Martin v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 1 F. & F. 505; Owen v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (Ind.), 12 Ins. L. J. 75; Reynolds v. Equitable Acc. Assoc., 49 Hun (N. Y.) 605, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 13; Gale v. Mutual Aid, etc., Assoc., 66 Hun (N. Y.) 600.

Peritonitis caused while using a pitchfork. North American L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. St. 43, 8 Am. Rep. 212; or by a fall, Barry v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 23 Fed. Rep. 712; 131 U. S. 100; Freeman v. Mercantile Mut. Acc. Assoc., 156 Mass. 351.

Death from hernia caused by a fall, Fitton v. Accidental Death Ins. Co., 17 C. B. N. S. 122, 112 E. C. L. 122; 2 Bigelow Ins. Cas. 649; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Murray, 16 Colo. 296; or from pneumonia resulting from weakened condition caused by accidental injury. Isitt v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 22 Q. B. Div. 504; Peck v. Equitable Acc. Assoc., 52 Hun (N. Y.) 255.

Tetanus caused by an accidental cut. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Melick, 65 Fed. Rep. 178.

Blood poison or erysipelas resulting from a fall or cut accidentally received. Martin v. Equitable Acc. Assoc., 61 Hun (N. Y.) 467; Accident Ins. Co. v. Young, 20 Duval (Montreal) 280.

Fever following a fall and wound. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Thomas (Ky., 1891), 17 S. W. Rep. 275.

Bright's disease following a fall. Cross v. Ry. Acc. Ins. Co. (N. P., 1871), cited in Bliss on Life Insurance (1st ed.) 71.

Rupture of the tympanum of the ear caused by diving. Rodey v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 3 N. Mex. 316. See infra, this title, Accidents and Injuries Usually Excepted.

Accident Caused by Disease.—An injury resulting from an attack of disease, as vertigo or fits, is a ground for recovery under an accident policy. Tennant v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 31 Fed. Rep. 322; Manufacturers' Acc. Indemnity Co. v. Dorgan, 58 Fed. Rep. 945.

Negligence—Intention.—The definition does not exclude an injury caused in part by the negligence of the insured,¹ nor injuries inflicted on the insured intentionally by another where the injury is not the result of misconduct or participation of the insured party.²

b. EXTERNAL, VIOLENT, AND ACCIDENTAL MEANS.—Accident policies usually restrict the liability of the insured to injuries effected through external, violent, and accidental means. This provision is construed beneficially for the insured. The term "external" refers to the means of the injury and not to the injury itself,³ and the fact that an injury is accidental and unnatural imports

See infra, this title, Accidents and Injuries Usually Excepted.

Death by Fright.—Death by fright, caused by a horse running away, is an accidental injury within the meaning of the policy. McGlinchey v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 80 Me. 251, 6 Am. St. Rep. 190.

Drowning.—So death by drowning. Trew v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 5 H. & N. 211, 6 H. & N. 839, 7 Jur. N. S. 878; Wingspear v. Accident Ins. Co., 6 Q. B. Div. 42; *Reynolds v. Accidental Ins. Ct.) 36; Knickerbocker Casualty Ins. Co. v. Jordan, 7 Cinc. L. Bull. (Ohio) 71; McDonald v. Refugee Assur. Co. (Scotland), 27 Scot. L. R. 764, 17 Sess. Cas. (Scot.) 955.

Asphyxiation.—So asphyxiation by gas in the atmosphere. Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 112 N. Y. 472, 8 Am. St. Rep. 758; Pickett v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co., 144 Pa. St. 79; U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc. v. Newman, 84 Va. 52.

Somnambulism.—So falling from a window or car while walking in sleep. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Harvey, 82 Va. 949; Scheiderer v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 58 Wis. 13, 46 Am. Rep. 618.

Poison.—So taking poison by mistake. Healey v. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 133 Ill. 556, 23 Am. St. Rep. 637, reversing 35 Ill. App. 17.

As to taking poison when there is a special provision in the policy excepting death by poison, see infra, this title, Accidents and Injuries Usually Excepted.

Suicide while Insane.—So death by the insured's hanging himself while insane. Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandal, 120 U. S. 527.

Stepping off Cars.—So stepping off a train of cars and falling through a concealed hole in a bridge. Burkhard v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 102 Pa. St. 262, 48 Am. Rep. 205.

Stumbling under a Railroad Train.—So stumbling and falling under a railroad train. Equitable Acc. Ins. Co. v. Osborn, 90 Ala. 201.

Fighting.—So death resulting from a fight in which the insured was the aggressor, though ignorant that his opponent was armed. Lovelace v. Travelers' Protective Assoc. (Mo., 1894), 28 S. W. Rep. 877.

Sting of Insect.—So death caused by the sting of a venomous insect. Preferred Mut. Acc. Assoc. v. Beidleman, 1 Monaghan (Pa.) 481.

There is nothing in the definition of the word "accident" which excludes negligence of the insured party as one of the elements contributing to produce the result. An accident may be an unusual result of a known cause and, therefore, unexpected to the parties. Freeman v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 144 Mass. 572.

Intentional Injury.—Where another intentionally injures a person, the injury not being the result of misconduct or the participation of the injured party, but being unforeseen, it is as to him accidental, although inflicted intentionally by the other party. Hutchcraft v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 87 Ky. 300, 12 Am. St. Rep. 484; Phelan v. Trav. Ins. Co., 38 Mo. App. 640; Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 89 Cal. 170, 23 Am. St. Rep. 455, citing 1 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 87; Insurance Co. v. Bennett, 90 Tenn. 256.

Insured Hanged by Mob.—It was accordingly held to be an accident where insured was hanged by a mob. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Johnson (Miss., 1895), 17 So. Rep. 2.

Express Provision Requiring Care.—Where there is an express provision requiring the insured to use due care and diligence for personal safety, the negligence of insured will defeat recovery. See infra, this title, Accidents and Injuries Usually Excepted.

3. In American Acc. Co. v. Reigart, 94 Ky. 547, the insured lost his life by eating a piece of beefsteak that in the attempt to swallow accidentally passed into his windpipe, choking him to death in a few minutes. It was held that death was caused by external, violent, and accidental means within the mean-an external and violent agency as its cause.¹

External or Visible Sign of Injury.—Akin to the provision that the injury must be the effect of external, violent, and accidental means, is the exception often inserted in accident policies that the insurance shall not extend to injuries of which there is no external or visible sign. This provision has reference only to cases of bodily injury which do not result in death.² There may be ex-ing of the policy. The court, by Pryor, J., said: "It was not designed that there should be such external violence, as a fall, a kick, or a blow, on the person, as would cause death or an injury, before the liability of the company should arise. This language was inserted in the contract to protect the company against hidden or secret diseases resulting in injury where there was no manifestation of harm to the external body. They were not attempting to restrict their liability to a particular kind of accidents, but were guarding the contract by the use of such terms as would prevent liability for injuries not originating from accidental causes, and that were liable to occur at any time from natural causes. * * * It is plain, we think, that the means or that which caused the injury should be external, and not that the injury should have been external."

A Suicide while Insane is an injury effected through external means. Crandal v. Accident Ins. Co., 27 Fed. Rep. 40, 120 U. S. 527. See also infra, this title, Accidents and Injuries Usually Excepted, subd. Internal Injuries.

1. In Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 112 N. Y. 472, 8 Am. St. Rep. 758, it appeared that the insured was found dead in his bed in his room at a hotel. The gas had, in some way, been turned on; the atmosphere was filled with it, and death was caused by breathing the atmosphere. It was held that death was occasioned by external and violent means within the meaning of the policy, the court saying: "That a death is the result of accident, or is unnatural, imports an external and violent agency as cause." This case overrules in part Hill v. Hartford Acc. Ins. Co., 22 Hun (N. Y.) 187, where it was held that the death of a physician resulting from drinking, by mistake, water from a goblet in which there was poison was not effected through external and violent means. See also Trew v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 6 H. & N. 839; Winspear v. Accident Ins. Co., 6 Q. B. Div. 42, 29 Moake Rep. 488; Eggenberger v. Guarantee Mut. Acc. Assoc., 41 Fed. Rep. 172; Healey v. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 133 Ill. 556, 23 Am. St. Rep. 637; McGlinchey v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 80 Me. 251, 6 Am. St. Rep. 190; Mallory v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 47 N. Y. 52, 47 Am. Pollock v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 102 Pa. St. 230, 48 Am. Rep. 204 (distinguished in Pickett v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co., 144 Pa. St. 93), and Bayless v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 14 Blatchf. (U. S.) 144, where death by accidental poisoning was held not due to external and violent means, are opposed to the weight of authority. For further illustrations of the interpretation of the words as to external, violent, and accidental means, see infra, this title, Accidents and Injuries Usually Excepted, subds. Poison, Inhalation of Gas, Disease, Lifting or Overexertion.

Violent, Accidental, External, and Visible Means.—The plaintiff effected an insurance with defendants against "any bodily injury caused by violent, accidental, external, and visible means." The policy contained a proviso excepting, among other things, injuries arising from "natural disease or weakness, or exhaustion consequent upon disease." In stooping to pick up a marble dropped by a child the plaintiff dislocated the cartilage of his knee. Before the accident the plaintiff had not suffered from any weakness of the knee or knee-joint. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Hamlyn v. Crown Accidental Ins. Co. (1893), 1 Q. B. 750.

In discussing the meaning of the requirement that injury must arise from a violent, accidental, external, and visible cause, Lopes, L. J., says: "In stooping to pick up the marble the plaintiff used some extra exertion and some extra physical force, and I think that the expression 'violent' is satisfied by the facts which attended the injury. The cause of the injury was accidental in the sense that the injury was a casualty and unforeseen and unexpected. Then comes the word 'external,' and in construing that word it is important to bear in mind the other part of the policy which deals with matters internal. Looking at the contrast between matters external and matters internal, it is suggested that the resistance of the floor supplies the external cause. I think a more obvious cause is the act of reaching after the marble and the wrench which accompanied that act. That stooping and reaching after the marble was certainly not an internal cause, but was, in my opinion, an external cause within the policy. Once admit that there is an external cause, it is plain that it was a visible one, and that condition also of the policy is satisfied."

2. Eggenberger v. Guarantee Mut. Acc. Assoc., 41 Fed. Rep. 172; McGlinchey v. Fidelity, etc., Ins. Co., 80 Me. 251, 6 Am. St. Rep. 190; Mallory v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 47 N. Y. 52, 7 Am. Rep. 410; Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 45 Hun (N. Y.) 313, 112 N. Y. 452, 8 Am. St. Rep. 758.

In McGlinchey v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 80 Me. 251, 6 Am. St. Rep. 190, Peters, C. J., said: "The policy declares that the insurance shall not extend to bodily injuries unless the external sign of the injury is visible, 'nor to any death caused' in certain ways

ternal signs of a wholly internal injury,¹ and it has been held that the sign of an injury is visible within the meaning of the policy if it is apparent to the touch, though not perceptible to the eye.²

c. TOTAL DISABILITY.—All accident policies contain provisions whereby the insured becomes entitled to a certain indemnity in case of "total disability;" and the members of benefit societies usually become entitled to the whole or a part of the benefit in a like case.

Total Disability a Relative Term.—What amounts to a total disability is, in general, a relative matter and depends largely upon the occupation and employment in which the person insured is engaged.³ But the phrase "total disability" is usually found in policies of insurance associated with limiting words of some kind, and the question therefore becomes largely one of the construction of the language of the policy. The most usual phrases found in the policies will now be examined, but it will be found that, even where the language of the policies is substantially similar, the courts are not in accord as to what is to be included under the term total disability.

To Prosecute One's Usual Employment.—The phrase "totally disabled from the prosecution of one's usual employment," in an accident insurance policy, has been held to mean wholly disabled from doing substantially all kinds of one's accustomed labor to some extent. A disability that simply prevents the insured doing as much in a day's work as before is not total, but one that prevents his doing certain portions of his accustomed work is total, although there are other portions that he is able to perform.⁴ named. There are reasons for the condition applying to a surviving claimant. He has unusual chances for feigning an internal injury, if disposed to defraud the insurer. But no such protection is required where the accident causes death. The dead body is external and visible sign enough that an injury was received."

1. In Barry v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 23 Fed. Rep. 712, affirmed in 131 U. S. 100, Dyer, J., instructed the jury upon this point as follows: "There must be an external and visible sign of the injury, but it does not necessarily follow from that that the injury must be external. * * * Visible signs of injury, within the meaning of this policy, are not to be confined to broken limbs, or bruises on the surface of the body; there may be other external indications or evidences which are visible signs of internal injury. Complaint of pain is not a visible sign, because pain you cannot see; complaint of internal soreness is not such a sign, for that you can not see; but if the internal injury produces, for example, a pale and sickly look in the face, if it causes vomiting and retching, or bloody or unnatural discharges from the bowels; if, in short, it sends forth to the observation of the eye, in the struggle of nature, any sign of the injury,—then those are external and visible signs, provided they are the direct results of the injury."

Effects Not at Once Apparent.—Where the policy excepts "injuries of which there is no visible external mark upon the body of the insured," a recovery may be had for injuries which, although not immediately apparent, are visible soon after the accident and as a consequence of the injury. Pennington v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co., 85 Iowa 468.

2. Gale v. Mutual Aid, etc., Assoc., 66 Hun (N. Y.) 600.

3. Hooper v. Accidental Death Ins. Co., 5 H. & N. 546; McMahon v. Supreme Council, 54 Mo. App. 468; Wolcott v. United L., etc., Ins. Assoc., 55 Hun (N. Y.) 98; Hutchinson v. Supreme Tent, etc., 68 Hun (N. Y.) 355.

In Wolcott v. United L., etc., Ins. Assoc., 55 Hun (N. Y.) 98, the court, upon the question of total disability, said: "Total disability must, from the necessity of the case, be a relative matter, and must depend largely upon the occupation and employment in which the party insured is engaged. One can readily understand how a person who labors with his hands would be totally disabled only when he cannot labor at all. But the same rule would not apply to the case of a professional man whose duties require the activity of the brain, which is not necessarily impaired by serious physical injury. If a person engaged in the general practice of medicine and surgery is unable to go about his business, enter his office, and make calls upon any of his patients, but is confined to the bed, as in this instance, and enabled only to exercise his mind on occasional applications to him for advice, he may be said to be totally disabled within the meaning of the provisions of this policy."

4. Instances — Farmer.—Sawyer v. U. S. Casualty Co. (Mass., 1868), 8 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 233. In this case a farmer was allowed to recover as for a total disability, because he was unable to do the ordinary and customary work on the farm, although he was able to milk a little, and do some light work in the barn.

Solicitor and Registrar of County Court.—To the same effect is Hooper v. Accidental Death Ins. Co., 5 H. & N. 546, where the insured was a solicitor and registrar of a county court, and was held to be "wholly disabled from following his usual occupation" by a severe-

Medical Practitioner.—In Wolcott v. United L., etc., Ins. Assoc., 55 Hun (N. Y.) 98, the circumstances were these: In the month of July, 1888, the plaintiff met with an accident by which his hip was injured, without fault on his part, and was totally disabled for a period of at least two weeks. At the end of this time, supposing himself recovered and able to resume his duties, which were those of a medical practitioner having in charge a general practice, he applied to the defendant for payment and stated his claim to be for two weeks at twenty-five dollars a week. This sum was paid him and a receipt was signed by him for the amount, but it was stated in the handwriting of the plaintiff, added to the printed form, to be up to date only. It turned out afterward, upon evidence which was uncontradicted, that the injuries sustained in July again prostrated him, and he was confined to his room and bed for a further period of four weeks, and was unable to go upon his rounds or to visit any patient. He did, however, during this time, as well as during the two weeks of his confinement, occasionally permit a patient to come to his bedside, when he would make some examination, and at times reached for or received certain medicines in his room which he advised to be administered, but never, so far as the evidence showed, did he leave his bed during this time. His attending physician was very strenuous in enforcing his advice that he should remain in bed. The question was, whether the plaintiff was totally disabled during the four weeks from the 13th of September to the 11th of October, 1888. The receipt which he gave did not preclude him from claiming for such subsequent total disability, which he did not apprehend at the time of the first payment. It was held that the foregoing facts did not preclude him from claiming, during the continuance of such subsequent four weeks' disability, the sum specified in the policy.

Iceman.—In Neafie v. Manufacturers' Acc. Indemnity Co. (Supreme Ct.), 28 N. Y. St. Rep. 55, the plaintiff was insured by a policy in which he was described as "by profession, occupation or employment, an iceman (proprietor)." The plaintiff at times helped in delivering ice, and while thus engaged received an injury which disabled him from engaging in the delivery of ice, although he was able to be about and give general directions to persons who took his place as iceman during the period of disability. It was held that the plaintiff was totally disabled within the meaning of the policy.

Switchman.—In Hutchinson v. Supreme Tent, etc., 68 Hun (N. Y.) 355, the facts were these: A member of a benefit association, who was a railroad switchman, lost all the fingers of one hand in coupling cars. The constitution of the association provided that "a member who, by reason of a disability incurred after admission to endowment membership, becomes wholly unable to direct or perform the kind of business or labor which he has always followed and by which alone he can thereafter earn a livelihood, shall be deemed entitled to disability benefits," which are stated to be "annually one tenth part of the sum for which his endowment certificate is issued." It was held, under this provision, that as the evidence showed that the plaintiff was totally disabled from performing the duties of a railroad switchman, and that for many years he had been engaged in that kind of labor, the verdict in his favor should be for the amount of the first installment of one tenth of his endowment falling due, with interest thereon from the commencement of the action.

Laborer—Wearing Truss.—In McMahon v. Supreme Council, 54 Mo. App. 468, upon the question whether the insured, a laborer whose usual occupation was digging cellars, was totally disabled from following his usual occupation by reason of an extensive hernia, which possibly might have been to some extent relieved by wearing a truss, the court said: "In determining the liability in such a case, the courts must consider both the mental and the physical capabilities of the assured, otherwise such a benefit certificate would be a delusion and a snare. The plaintiff's evidence tended to prove that in the fall of 1889 he became disabled as the result of hernia; that he was operated on three times without securing any relief; that his occupation was that of a day-laborer—engaged in digging cellars; that the rupture was of such a character as to unfit him for performing manual labor, and that he had been unable during the four years preceding the trial to earn a livelihood. His physical condition was well established by the testimony of three reputable physicians, all of whom concurred in the opinion that the plaintiff was permanently incapacitated to perform such labor as required lifting or unusual exertion. They were also of opinion that this rupture was so large that a truss could not be worn without great danger of serious injury, and that, even though the hernia could be reduced and held in place by a truss, the plaintiff could not perform labor which required much exertion. This evidence tended to prove that the plaintiff was totally and permanently incapacitated to follow his usual avocation, for the use of a pick, spade, or shovel certainly requires unusual exertion."

Permanent Disability—To Prosecute One's Usual or Some Other Occupation.—Under a provision that if a member becomes "permanently disabled from following his usual or some other occupation," he shall be entitled to a certain indemnity, it has been held that a member who is disabled from following his usual occupation is entitled to the benefit, although he may not be disabled from following some other occupation. Neill v. Order of United Friends (Supreme Ct.), 28 N. Y. Supp.

manently disabled from following his or her usual or other occupation," at the same time defines the disability which shall entitle the insured to recover as one which shall "permanently prevent the member from following any occupation whereby he or she can obtain a livelihood." In such cases it has been held that there can be no recovery if the insured can earn a living at any other occupation, although incapacitated for his own profession.¹ But the question whether the insured is disabled from prosecuting some other occupation is to be determined by a consideration of his education, experience, age, and natural ability.²

To Transact Any and Every Kind of Business Pertaining to One's Occupation.—The courts are not unanimous in the construction of the provision just stated. In the majority of cases the clause has received a strict construction, legal effect being given to the whole language employed, it being held that the insured is not disabled within the meaning of the policy so long as he is capable of performing any kind of business pertaining to his employment.³ But in one instance

928. In this case Brown, P.J., in delivering judgment, said: "The defendant reads this sentence as if 'or' was 'and,' and 'some other' 'all other.' It cannot be so construed. The word 'or' creates two cases in which the member may become entitled to the benefit fund. Who would be included in the second class of cases we need not now determine. When a member, who is permanently disabled from following some occupation other than his usual occupation asserts a claim to the fund, the expression 'some other occupation' will be construed and given its proper place in the contract. It is sufficient, for the present occasion, that the plaintiff is unable to follow his usual occupation. That fact brings his case within the contract. Under either reading, therefore, of the condition of the contract in question, the plaintiff's case, as made by the evidence, falls within it. He has lost a limb, which is a permanent disability. The loss renders him unable to follow his usual occupation, and its loss was by reason of an accident which happened while engaged in following his usual occupation."

1. Barber.—Albert v. Order of Chosen Friends, 34 Fed. Rep. 721. In this case the insured, a barber, received an injury which prevented him from following his occupation, but he opened a restaurant and thereby made a living. And the court held, on demurrer to an answer averring such facts, that the circumstance that the insured was obtaining a living from his business as a restaurant keeper was a good defense to the action, although the plaintiff was disabled from following his occupation as barber. It was contended in this case that the words "or other occupation" meant "or other like occupation," and that the fact that the insured was earning a living in a totally dissimilar occupation was no bar to a recovery. But the court said that there was no room for the application of the rule of ejusdem generis.

2. McMahon v. Supreme Council, 54 Mo. App. 468. In this case the plaintiff, a laborer whose usual occupation was digging cellars, was insured under a policy of the kind described in the text, and the court, after determining that he was so injured as to be totally disabled from following his usual occupation, proceeded as follows: "In determining whether the plaintiff was disabled to such an extent as to prevent him from pursuing some other avocation in which he could earn a livelihood, his former occupation, his education and business experience, his natural abilities, and his age must be considered. The plaintiff's evidence bearing on this branch of the case tended to show that the plaintiff was fifty-eight years old; that he was enfeebled and weakened by sickness to such an extent that he could walk only a few blocks at a time; that he could neither read nor write; that he was naturally weak-minded, and exceedingly ignorant,—all of which had a tendency to prove that he was incapable of earning a livelihood in any of the pursuits suggested by the defendant. We therefore conclude that the court committed no error in submitting the case to the jury."

3. Attorney-at-Law.—In U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc. v. Millard, 43 Ill. App. 148, while the policy was in force the insured, an attorney, fell and cut the thumb of his right hand on a chair, and for about twenty-six weeks was unable to use that hand. The evidence was that after the injury and during the time that indemnity was claimed under the policy the plaintiff was at his office during office hours and attending to professional business, advising clients, accepting employment as attorney, commencing suits, and he did not remember to have refused during that time to accept employment as an attorney on account of the injury. And in reply to the question as to what extent he was disabled, the plaintiff stated: "Simply to the extent of not being able to use my hand; that is all." The injury to the hand was severe, and plaintiff suffered much pain. It was held that the plaintiff could not recover, the injury being so slight as not to seriously interfere with the prosecution of his profession.

Merchant.—In Saveland v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 67 Wis. 174, 58 Am. Rep. 863, the insured, a merchant, received an injury to his ankle which rendered it necessary for him to go about his business in a buggy, and in it has been held that it is not incumbent upon the plaintiff to prove that the injury wholly disabled him from the doing of any and every kind of act necessary to be done in the prosecution of his business, but it is sufficient if he proves that his injury was of such a character and to such an extent that he was not able to do all the substantial acts necessary to be done in the prosecution of his business.¹

this way, even, he was able to attend to a small portion of his business only. On appeal, it was held that it was error on the part of the court to instruct the jury that the defendant was to pay the amount agreed, if by the accident the plaintiff had been disabled in any way from prosecuting the business in which he was engaged, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover for such time as he was "rendered wholly unable to do his accustomed labor; that is, to do substantially all kinds of his accustomed labor to some extent."

Leather-cutter and Merchant.—Where the insured was described as having the two-fold occupation of leather-cutter and merchant, it was held that in order to entitle him to indemnity he must be wholly disabled from the prosecution of any and every kind of business pertaining to the occupation under which he was insured; that is, the two-fold occupation of leather-cutter and merchant. Ford v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Rel. Co., 148 Mass. 153.

Manufacturer.—In Gracey v. People's Mut. Acc. Ins. Assoc., 21 Pittsb. L. J. 25, the insured was classed as a manufacturer. He received a fall on the ice, breaking his arm, necessitating the carrying of it in a sling. The injury and pain were such as to prevent him from lying in bed, and the only sleep he obtained for several weeks was in a chair. He was able to go to his factory and give a few general orders, but was not able to remain any length of time. The court held that he was not wholly "disabled from the prosecution of any and every kind of business pertaining to his occupation," within the meaning of the policy.

Retired Gentleman.—Where the party assured was described in the policy as a "retired gentleman," and had in fact no occupation, except to amuse himself, and received an injury while operating a buzz-saw at a wagon-manufacturing company's shop, of which he was a stockholder and director, and in consequence thereof was obliged to carry his arm in a sling and was deprived of its use to a greater or less extent during several months, he was denied a recovery, as he was not totally disabled and prevented from the prosecution of any and every kind of business pertaining to the occupation under which he received membership. Knapp v. Preferred Mut. Acc. Assoc., 53 Hun (N. Y.) 84.

Disability to Transact Any Business Includes Disability to Transact a Particular Business.—Where the defendant by its policy insured the plaintiff "under classification preferred (being a capitalist by occupation) * * * against loss of time * * * resulting from bodily injuries * * * which shall, independently of all other causes, immediately and wholly disable him from transacting any and every kind of business pertaining to his occupation above stated," it was held that the policy did not class the plaintiff as a capitalist, but simply insured him in a preferred class because he was a capitalist by occupation; that the policy, in order to entitle the plaintiff to recover, required that he be totally disabled from transacting any business pertaining to the occupation of capitalist; but that under the circumstances of the case it was not necessary to determine what kinds of business pertain to a capitalist, since the evidence showed, without conflict, that the plaintiff was totally disabled from transacting any business whatever, and as the whole must include the parts, that he was disabled from transacting any business as a capitalist. Bean v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 94 Cal. 581.

1. Billiard-saloon Keeper.—Young v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 80 Me. 244. In this case the occupation under which the plaintiff was insured was that of a billiard-saloon keeper. He admitted that he could do some acts necessary to be done in the business of billiard-saloon keeper, but claimed, and introduced evidence tending to prove, that he was wholly disabled from doing many of the material acts necessary to be done in that business. The trial court instructed the jury as follows: "Now the reasonable construction which must be put upon the language here used is, that it must have meant that if the plaintiff was so disabled as to be incapable of doing any and every kind of business pertaining to his occupation as a billiard-saloon keeper, then he would be wholly disabled from the prosecution of every kind of business pertaining to such occupation and entitled to the stipulated compensation. Otherwise, if he was not so disabled, he would not be entitled; and therefore, gentlemen, I instruct you as matter of law that the meaning of the language here used is, not that he must be so disabled as to prevent him from doing anything whatsoever pertaining to his occupation, or any part of his business pertaining to his occupation as billiard-saloon keeper, but that he must be so disabled as to prevent him from doing any and every kind of business pertaining to his occupation. There may be a difference between being able to perform any part of his business, and any and every kind of business pertaining to his occupation." And the appellate court, in holding that there was no error in this instruction, said: "The presiding justice might have gone farther and instructed the jury that to entitle the plaintiff to recover, it was not required to prove that his injury disabled him to such an extent that he had no physical ability to do what

To Transact Any and All Kinds of Business.—Under a provision for an indemnity where the insured is "totally disabled and prevented from the transaction of all kinds of business" there can be no recovery when the insured is totally disabled in his own occupation merely, provided he is able to engage in some other pursuit.¹

Total Inability to Labor.—Where the provision is to grant indemnity to the members of a relief association during "total inability to labor," and the insured is unable to earn a livelihood at the particular labor in which he was engaged at the time of the injury, but is capable of making as much or more money at some other employment, he may not recover.²

Total Loss of Business Time.—Under a policy providing for payment of a certain sum for the "total loss of such business time as may result" from the injury, reference is had to the loss of business time in the particular occupation of the insured, and not to the whole range of business pursuits.³

d. LOSS OF CERTAIN MEMBERS OF THE BODY—In General—Permanent and Partial Disablement.—In this connection the accident policies usually provide for indemnity in two classes of injuries. One class embraces injuries resulting in the loss of both hands or both feet, or the loss of a hand and a foot, or the complete and irrecoverable loss of sight in both eyes, and is called "permanent total disablement;" the other class embraces injuries resulting in the loss of one hand or one foot, or the complete and irrecoverable loss of sight in one eye, and is called "permanent partial disablement."

No Recovery for Temporary Disability.—When the contract of insurance provides for liability in case only of a total or partial but permanent disability, no liability exists if the disability is but temporary.⁴

was necessary to be done in the prosecution of his business, but that it was sufficient if he satisfied them that his injury was of such a character and to such an extent that common care and prudence required him to desist from his labors and rest so long as it was reasonably necessary to effectuate a speedy cure, so that a competent and skillful physician called to treat him would direct him so to do." One Injury Aggravated by Subsequent Injury.

—Where it appears that after the accident insured against, the assured was for a time able to labor, but became totally disabled some days later on receiving additional injuries which aggravated the first injury, the assured is not totally disabled and prevented from all kinds of business on account of the injury insured against. But if it should appear that, from the nature of the original injury, the assured would at some time become totally incapable of labor by reason of it, it would seem that the happening of the second injury would not deprive him of the right to recover. Rhodes v. Railway Pass. Ins. Co., 5 Lans. (N. Y.) 71.

Loss of All the Fingers.—It has been held that ordinarily the loss of all the fingers of one hand does not constitute total disability within the meaning of the provision in question. Hutchinson v. Supreme Tent; etc., 68 Hun (N. Y.) 355.

2. Baltimore, etc., Rel. Assoc. v. Post, 122

Pa. St. 579, 9 Am. St. Rep. 147. In this case Paxson, J., for the court said: "This was a relief association, not an accident insurance company. Its object was to relieve its members during the time when they were unable to work by reason of injury or sickness. Hence, if a member was injured in such a way that he could no longer earn a livelihood at the particular labor in which he was employed at the time of the accident, yet was capable of earning as much or more money in some other employment, it certainly was not the object of the association as expressed by its charter and by-laws that he should remain idle and draw benefits all his life."

3. Pennington v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co., 85 Iowa 468.

4. No Liability for Disability Merely Temporary.—Hollobaugh v. People's Ins. Assoc., 138 Pa. St. 595. In this case the certificate of membership stipulated for the payment of certain relief in the event of accidental injuries to the party, permanently disabling him totally or partially, and the maximum number of weeks during which relief would be allowed for each. Indorsed on the certificate was a clause that payment of weekly relief for periods scheduled should be in full satisfaction of all claims, whether the injuries were totally or partially disabling; the schedule specifying certain injuries with a period of relief for each, and stating that injuries not specified would be adjusted on their merits. It was held that the stipulation in the indorsement must be construed as applying to such injuries only as were within the terms of the contract found in the body of the certificate, and as the whole instrument provided for liability only in the event of a total or partial, but at the same time permanent, disability, no liability existed for disability which was temporary merely.

Feet and Hands.—It has been contended on behalf of the insurance companies that the provisions in regard to the "loss" of the hands and feet must be understood to imply an actual amputation or physical severance of those members from the body. But this view has not met with favor from the courts; it being held that to entitle the insured to recover, physical severance is unnecessary, but it is sufficient if he has been deprived entirely of the use of the feet and hands as members of the body. And there can scarcely be any doubt as to the soundness of this view, for if the feet and hands cannot be used for the purpose of moving about or walking, or for holding and handling things, they are in fact lost as much as though actually severed from the body.¹

Loss by Severance.—Many of the companies have altered their policies so as to read, "the loss of feet or hands by severance" thereof, but this provision has been held to be intended to refer to the manner rather than to the exact physical extent of the injury.²

1. Paralysis of Both Legs.—In Sheanon v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co., 77 Wis. 618, 20 Am. St. Rep. 151, the plaintiff was shot in the back while attempting to escape from a saloon quarrel commenced by other parties and in which he had no part. The ball pierced his spine and produced an immediate and total paralysis of the lower part of his body, entirely destroying the use of both feet. In holding that the insured had suffered "the loss of two entire feet" within the meaning of the policy the court said: "To our minds, the loss of the hands and feet embraced in the policy is an actual and entire loss of their use as members of the body, and if their use is actually destroyed so that they will perform no function whatever, then they are lost as hands and feet. In ordinary and popular parlance, when a person is deprived of the use of a limb, we say he has lost it. This is the ordinary sense attached to the word when used in such a connection. * * * The expression 'loss of feet' would generally be understood to mean a loss of the use of these members; and if the lower portions of the plaintiff's body and his feet are completely paralyzed, and he is permanently and forever deprived of their use, he has suffered 'a loss of two entire feet' within the meaning of the policy. This is the proper construction of the words of the contract. It is a forced and unnatural construction of the language as here used to hold that it means an actual amputation of these limbs, and does not embrace and include an entire deprivation of their use as members of the body."

Hand No Longer Useful as Such.—In Lord v. American Mut. Acc. Assoc. (Wis., 1894), 61 N. W. Rep. 293, it was contended that there was no such thing as the loss of the hand unless the injury was such as to require the amputation of the hand above the wrist. The court, in negating this contention, said: "That would be too much of a refinement upon language for practical purposes. The hand was for use, and if it was injured so as to become useless as a hand, then the defendant became liable for its loss under the contract."

Pennsylvania—Strict Construction of Policy.—

In one instance where the source of the difficulty did not lie in the foot or leg, but in another part of the body, to wit, the back, and the foot itself was not lost or injured, and might be used constantly by means of an artificial device, such as a plaster jacket, which prevented the injury in the other part of the body from affecting the use of the foot, though without this appliance the foot was useless, it was held that there could be no recovery as for loss of a foot. Stevens v. People's Mut. Acc. Ins. Assoc., 150 Pa. St. 132. In the opinion in this case there are some expressions, obiter, however, which seem to conflict with views expressed in the cases above cited.

2. Severance of Hand.—Where the plaintiff was insured under a policy providing for an indemnity for the "loss or severance of one entire hand," and the evidence showed that the fingers and heads of all the metacarpal bones of one of the plaintiff's hands had been taken off with a planer; that of the twenty-seven bones composing the skeleton of the hand thirteen bones were entirely gone and parts of five more; and the plaintiff testified that he had lost the use of the injured member as a hand, it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover under the provision of the policy above given. Sneck v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (Supreme Ct.), 34 N. Y. Supp. 545. The court in this case proceeded upon the ground that the provisions of the policy should be strictly construed as against the insurer, and that the specification in the policy as to the loss of an entire hand by severance was intended to refer to the manner rather than to the exact physical extent of the injury. This case virtually overrules the decision of the court in the same case upon a former trial. See Sneck v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (Supreme Ct.), 30 N. Y. Supp. 881.

In Lord v. American Mut. Acc. Assoc. (Wis., 1894), 61 N. W. Rep. 293, the question whether the tearing off of three fingers wholly and a part of the other, and cutting the hand and destroying the joint of the thumb, was "the loss of one hand, causing immediate, continuous, and total disability" of the same within the meaning of the con

Eyes.—When the policy provides for payment in the event of "the total and permanent loss of the sight of both eyes," and the insured has lost the sight of one eye before the insurance is effected, and this fact is known to the general agent of the company, he is entitled to recover upon sustaining the loss of the remaining eye. The principle is this: under such a clause, it is the loss of sight that is insured against, and this is just as complete in the case stated as though both eyes were lost during the currency of the policy; and the knowledge of the agent of the fact that the insured had only one eye is imputable to the principal.¹

e. ACCIDENTS TO INSURED IN SPECIAL OCCUPATIONS—(1) Description of Occupation.—The policy usually insures a person under a special occupation, described either in the application or in the certificate.²

Change of Occupation.—The insurer cannot avoid the policy on the ground that insured has changed his occupation from that under which the insurance was granted, unless there is an express proviso to that effect.³

Provisions against Other or More Hazardous Occupations.—The policy usually provides, however, that the insurance shall not cover injuries received in any occupation other than that under which the policy is issued,⁴ or that it shall not cover injuries received in certain specified occupations,⁵ or that if injury is received in an occupation classed as more hazardous than the one under which it is issued, the benefit shall be proportionally less.⁶ Such a provision is a competent limitation of the policy.⁷ In construing the description of the occupation, the tract of insurance, was held to be one for the jury. And the jury found that such loss of the hand was entire.

1. Humphreys v. National Benefit Assoc., 139 Pa. St. 264.

In Bawden v. London, etc., Assur. Co. (1892), 2 Q. B. 534, by the terms of the policy the company agreed to pay to the insured five hundred pounds on permanent total disablement, and half of that sum on permanent partial disablement; the policy stating that by permanent total disablement was meant, among other things, "the complete and irrecoverable loss of sight of both eyes," and by permanent partial disablement was meant, among other things, "the complete and irrecoverable loss of sight in one eye." At the time the plaintiff signed the proposal for the insurance he had lost the sight of one eye, a fact of which the defendant's agent was aware, although he did not communicate it to the defendant. The assured, during the life of the policy, sustained an accident which resulted in the complete loss of sight in his remaining eye, so that he became permanently blind. It was held that it must be taken, first, that the assured had sustained a complete loss of sight to both eyes within the meaning of the policy; secondly, the knowledge of the agent was, under the circumstances, the knowledge of the principal, and that the latter was liable on the policy for the full amount, namely, five hundred pounds.

2. Statements of Occupation Generally Warranties.—The statements of the insured with regard to his occupation are generally, by the terms of the policy, made warranties, so that a misrepresentation in this regard avoids the instrument. See Perrins v. Marine, etc., Ins. Soc., 2 El. & El. 317, 105 E. C. L. 316; Moore v. Citizens' Mut. L. Ins. Co. (Supreme Ct.), 26 N. Y. Supp. 1014.

Occupation Stated Truly but Imperfectly.—But if the statement of occupation, though imperfect, is true so far as it goes, the policy is not avoided. Thus, where one stated himself to be an "esquire," when in fact he was such, a policy which contained the proviso "that if any statement contained in the proposal be untrue, or if this policy has been obtained through any misrepresentation, concealment, or untrue averment whatsoever, then this policy shall be void," was held not to be rendered void by the failure of the insured to state that he also carried on the business of an ironmonger. Perrins v. Marine, etc., Ins. Soc., 2 El. & El. 317, 105 E. C. L. 316.

And it seems that where the statements of the insured as to his occupation and the duties which it requires of him sufficiently apprise the insurer of their character, it is enough; and if anything more definite is required, it is the duty of the insurer to ascertain the facts by proper inquiries. Brink v. Guaranty Mut. Acc. Assoc. (Supreme Ct.), 7 N. Y. Supp. 847.

3. In Provident L. Ins. Co. v. Fennell, 49 Ill. 180, where the insured was a switchman while the contract was made and was a brakeman when killed, it was held that in the absence of special provision the insurer could not avoid the policy on this account. See also Provident L. Ins., etc., Co. v. Martin, 32 Md. 310.

7. So an answer alleging that insured has changed his occupation from a brakeman on a passenger train to that of a brakeman on a construction train, and that the risk has been changed within the provisions of the policy, technical use of a word having an ordinary and accepted meaning, if not known to the insurer, is not binding on him.¹

(2) Occupation Defined—Refers to Profession, not Acts.—The term "occupation" has reference to the vocation, profession, or calling in which the insured is engaged for his profit, and does not preclude him from the performance of acts and duties which are simply incidents connected with the daily life of men in any occupation.²

Change of Occupation Question for Jury.—The question whether the insured has changed his occupation within the provision of the policy is properly left to the jury under instructions.³

(3) Risks Classified by the Company—Injuries Received in More Hazardous Occupation.—Where the insurer classifies risks according to the occupation of the insured, is a good defense, and a demurrer thereto will be overruled. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Martin, 133 Ind. 376. In this case the court, by Howard, J., said: "It is competent for the parties to provide in the policy of insurance that a forbidden hazard shall make the policy void or that the amount of the insurance in case of an increased hazard shall be diminished in proportion; and in case the policy itself does not name the forbidden or increased hazards, it will be for the jury to determine whether such a change in the risk has taken place and in what degree the risk has been increased."

1. Spare Conductor.—In Aldrich v. Mercantile Mut. Acc. Assoc., 149 Mass. 457, where insured was described as a "spare conductor," and evidence was offered that on the road on which insured was employed, a "spare conductor" performed the duties of all the trainmen except the engineer, and that the insured was injured while employed as a brakeman, it was held that the word "spare" having an ordinary meaning of "supernumerary," and not denoting that the insured performed any duties except those of a conductor, and the technical use of the word not having been communicated to the insurance company, such a technical use of the word could not be shown, and that the company was liable only for the amount which a brakeman could have recovered.

2. National Acc. Soc. v. Taylor, 42 Ill. App. 97.

Single Acts not Change of Occupation—Merchant Injured while Hunting.—Where the insured was described as a merchant and was accidentally killed while hunting, as a recreation, it was held that the act of hunting did not constitute the occupation of hunting. Union Mut. Acc. Assoc. v. Frohard, 134 Ill. 228, 23 Am. St. Rep. 664, affirming 33 Ill. App. 178.

Agricultural Superintendent Acting as Policeman.—The insured does not change his occupation from that of an agricultural superintendent by acting temporarily as a superintendent of police at a state fair. Travelers' Preferred Acc. Assoc. v. Kelsey, 46 Ill. App. 371.

Supervising Farmer Building Bridge.—Where the insured was described as a supervising farmer, it was held that this description did not mean that he did no manual labor whatever, and that he had not changed his occupation to that of a bridge-builder by building a bridge on his own land, and that by driving posts with a sledge he had not changed his occupation to that of a pile-driver. National Acc. Soc. Co. v. Taylor, 42 Ill. App. 97.

Earthenware Manufacturer Pitching Hay.—Where the insured was described as an earthenware manufacturer and received an injury while pitching hay on a visit to a farmer, it was held that his occupation was not changed by the act. North American L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. St. 43, 8 Am. Rep. 212.

Teacher Constructing Building.—Where the insured was described as a teacher and an injury was received while superintending the construction of a building on his own land, it was held that he had not changed his occupation to that of a builder. Stone v. U. S. Casualty Co., 34 N. J. L. 371.

Farmer Rescuing a Shipwrecked Crew.—The act of going to the rescue of a shipwrecked crew does not change the occupation of insured from that of a farmer to a wrecker. Tucker v. Mutual Ben. L. Co., 50 Hun (N. Y.) 50.

3. An insurance company classified its risks with reference to employment; persons insured under class A, which included "merchants," being entitled to a much larger indemnity than those insured under class E, which embraced "grocers delivering goods." The insured stated in his application that he was a "merchant proper." He received the injury which resulted in his death while standing in his wagon receiving freight at a railway depot. The company contended that the recovery should be restricted to the indemnity under class E. It was held that the court properly left to the jury whether the plaintiff was a grocer delivering goods, with the instruction that a grocer delivering goods as expressed in the policy was one who was engaged as a dealer in groceries and habitually delivered in person goods sold to his customers. An occasional delivery by himself, the rule being that delivery was made by others, would not bring him within class E. Hall v. American Masonic Acc. Assoc., 86 Wis. 518.

Change of Occupation means engaging in another employment as a usual business. Stone v. U. S. Casualty Co., 34 N. J. L. 371.

and the policy contains a proviso against responsibility for injury received while performing an act pertaining to an occupation classed as more hazardous than that under which the policy is issued, the distinction between acts and occupation is not obliterated,¹ and it must appear that the insured was injured while doing an act peculiarly embraced in the less favored class to bring him within the exception.²

Exposure Not Incident to Occupation.—When the policy contains a proviso that it shall be void as to all accidents in any employment or exposure not incident to the risk taken, the insured cannot recover if injured in the performance of an act totally foreign to the occupation under which he was insured.³

Occupation must be Classed.—If the proviso is that no recovery shall be had for an injury in an occupation classed as more hazardous, the occupation must be one classified by the company to except it under this clause.⁴

Classification of Agent Binding on Insurer.—The classification of a risk as being in a preferred class made by the insurer's agent, with full knowledge of the facts, is binding upon the insurer.⁵

General Classification No Waiver of Express Exception.—By classifying an occupation as one which will be taken as an increased hazard, the insurer does not waive an express exception of a risk incident to such an increased hazard in a policy insuring a less dangerous occupation.⁶

1. In Stone v. U. S. Casualty Co., 34 N. J. L. 371, a policy contained a proviso by which injuries were excluded from compensation if "received in any employment or by any exposure either more hazardous in itself or classed by the company as more hazardous" than that under which the policy was issued to the insured. The court, by Beasley, C. J., in construing this provision, said: "These terms literally rendered require that the insured to come within their effect must, at the time of the injury, be in an employment more dangerous than his own. The language has respect to employments, and not to individual acts. It is true that a certain degree of ambiguity is introduced by the expression 'other exposure,' but looking at the body of the policy we find these terms used in the sense of the risks arising from a business or occupation."

2. Engineer Chopping Wood.—The insured was classed as a stationary engineer, and was injured while chopping wood, the latter occupation being classed as a less favorable risk than that of a stationary engineer. The certificate provided that if the insured was injured in the performance of an occupation more hazardous than that under which the certificate was issued, he could in no event recover more than the indemnity of the class in which such more hazardous occupation was classified. It was held, under this clause, that it should have been submitted to the jury whether the insured was fatally injured while performing an act peculiarly embraced in the occupation of a wood-chopper, and not in that of a stationary engineer. Engenberger v. Guarantee Mut. Acc. Assoc., 41 Fed. Rep. 172.

Proprietor of Ice Business Delivering Ice.—The insured was described as an "iceman (proprietor)." The proprietor of an ice business could be insured at twenty dollars a week; a deliverer of ice could be insured at only fifteen dollars a week. The insured received the injuries while engaged in the actual delivery of ice to a customer. It was held that the expression "iceman (proprietor)" covered not merely a proprietor who conducted a general ice business from his offices, but also the iceman or a man who might be a deliverer of ice, and who was at the same time the owner or proprietor of such business. Neafe v. Manufacturers' Acc. Indemnity Co., 55 Hun (N. Y.) 111.

3. Retired Gentleman Operating Buzz-saw.—Where the description of employment was that the insured was a "retired gentleman," and the certificate contained a proviso that it was to be wholly void as to all accidents occurring in any occupation, profession, or employment, or exposure not named, or incident to the occupation under which he received membership, and it appeared that the insured was injured while operating a buzz-saw for amusement, it was held that a motion for a nonsuit should have been allowed, as such an exposure was not incident to the occupation of a retired gentleman. Knapp v. Preferred Mut. Acc. Assoc., 53 Hun (N. Y.) 84.

4. Where the plaintiff was insured as "a jobber and contractor," and was injured while working as a farm laborer, it was held under a clause reducing the indemnity if the insured was injured in any occupation classed as more hazardous than the one specified, that the occupation of a farm laborer not being classed at all, the company could not, after the accident, class "farm laborer" as entitled to less indemnity than "contractors." Bushaw v. Women's Mut. Ins., etc., Assoc. (Supreme Ct.), 8 N. Y. Supp. 428. See also Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Snowden, 12 U. S. App. 704; Union Mut. Acc. Assoc. v. Frohard, 134 Ill. 228, 23 Am. f. INJURIES TO PASSENGERS BY PUBLIC OR PRIVATE CONVEYANCE.—Accident policies are often issued against accidents while traveling in public or private conveyances for the transportation of passengers. Such a policy covers injuries received while in the actual prosecution of a journey, whether the insured was at the time in a conveyance for transportation of passengers or not.

Injury Received while Changing Conveyance.—It has accordingly been held that where the insured was injured by a defect in the way while walking from a steamer to a railway train in the course of his journey, he was within the protection of a clause covering risks "while traveling by public or private conveyance for the transportation of passengers."¹ If the insured was injured on a railway in the course of his journey, the injury is covered by the policy, although it occurred in attempting to board a moving train² or omnibus.³ An insurance against railway accident while traveling on any line of railway covers an accident caused by slipping on the steps while changing cars.⁴

Walking Not Included in Private Conveyance.—Where the insured had left a steamer and was finishing his journey to his home on foot, and was waylaid by highwaymen, the court said that the reasonable meaning of private conveyance could not include walking.⁵

Person on Train for Other Purpose than Travel.—The insured is not a passenger in a public conveyance provided by a common carrier if he is in the train for a purpose other than travel,⁶ nor can the insured be considered a passenger insured was injured in any occupation classed by the company as more dangerous, the indemnity should be at the rate fixed for the increased hazard, but by special proviso the company was exempt from liability in case the insured was injured while trying to get upon a moving train, and it appeared that the insured was injured while so doing, it was contended that he could recover the amount which would be payable to one whose duty it was to get on or off moving trains. But it was held that the clause providing for a reduction of recovery in the case of more hazardous occupations did not render the company liable to pay the insured the amount which would have been paid to a man whose business it was to get on or off moving trains, that the insured had not changed his occupation, and that such a construction as that contended for would render of no effect the clause exempting the company from liability for injuries received while entering a moving train. Miller v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 39 Minn. 548.

1. Northup v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 43 N. Y. 516, reversing 2 Lans. (N. Y.) 166. The decision in this case is criticised in 7 Am. Law Rev. 605.

2. Where the policy insured against "injuries received while actually traveling in a public conveyance provided by common carriers for the transportation of passengers," and the train stopped at a station and the insured left the train, which started up while he was off, and in attempting to get on again he was injured, it was held that if the insured were traveling beyond the station, he could leave the train at the station and return to it again. He was not bound within the policy to remain thereon all the time, and he might recover for an injury received in attempting to get on or off. Tooley v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 3 Biss. (U. S.) 399.

3. Where the plaintiff was trying to jump on an omnibus while in motion, it was held that he could recover under an accident policy against injuries while traveling by private or public conveyance for the transportation of passengers. Champlin v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 6 Lans. (N. Y.) 71.

4. Theobald v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 10 Exch. 45, 26 Eng. L. & Eq. 436.

5. Ripley v. Railway Pass. Ins. Co. (U. S. C. C.), 2 Bigelow Ins. Cas. 738, affirmed in 16 Wall. (U. S.) 336.

6. A policy insured the plaintiff "as passenger in a public conveyance provided by common carrier within the limits of the United States." The insured going to Chicago stopped at L., intending to take a later train to Chicago. He had left the train, had gone to speak to the engineer, and was returning to the platform of the station, when he was injured in trying to cross the platform of the car after the train had started. It was held that the insured had ceased to be a passenger when the accident happened and could not recover. Hendricks v. Employers' Liability Assur. Corp., 62 Fed. Rep. 893.

Railroad Engineer.—An engineer killed on a railroad locomotive had previously purchased a ticket issued by the railway passenger assurance company, which, by its terms, insured against death "caused by accidents while traveling by public or private conveyance provided for the transportation of passengers." Suit being brought by his legal representatives upon the policy, the proof showed that the defendant was selling two classes of tickets, one known as "travelers' risk," the other as the "general accident," the latter being sold for the highest price; that deceased purchased the latter; that at the time of the purchase the defendant's agent knew him to be an engineer

while stopping over at a point upon his route.¹

g. INJURIES RECEIVED IN THE DISCHARGE OF DUTY—Railroad Employees.—The question has arisen whether an employee of a railroad company going home from his day's work is within the terms of a policy insuring him against injuries received in the discharge of duty. Where an insured under such a policy was injured while leaving the yard of the company after quitting work for the day, it was held that he was within the protection of its terms.² But it has been held that one going home from work on a train of the company was not within the benefit of an exception in a policy allowing railroad employees, while in the performance of duty, to stand upon the platform of moving cars.³

2. Accidents and Injuries Usually Excepted—a. GENERAL RULE OF CONSTRUCTION—Construed Most Strongly against Insurer.—The usual exceptions in an insurance policy are in the nature of conditions as to the subsequent conduct of the insured, and are construed most strongly against the insurer. The conditions having been framed by the insurer are to be construed strongly against those for whose benefit they are reserved.⁴ This principle is especially applicable in construing clauses creating a forfeiture or relating to matters subsequent to the attaching of the liability, such as notice, demand, etc.⁵

b. VOLUNTARY EXPOSURE TO UNNECESSARY DANGER—(1) In General—Usual Form of Modern Policy.—The modern insurance policy contains a proviso intended to cover cases where the insured assumes the risk of accident. This is usually in the form of a clause providing that "no claim shall be valid where death or injury may have happened in consequence of voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger or perilous adventure. The certificate holder is required to show us due diligence for personal safety and protection."⁶ and had no instructions not to sell to railroad employees. It was held that the deceased was insured against all accidents without regard to the capacity in which he was acting, that the ticket was intended to cover the accident by which he met his death, and that the defendant was liable. Brown v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 45 Mo. 221.

1. Where insurance was against accidental injury, subject to the condition that the insured was protected only against the hazard of travel as passenger in a public conveyance provided by a common carrier in the United States, and the insured was a drover who had gone to San Antonio to ship cattle and was injured by falling from a hayloft in a barn, and the agent of the company had represented that the policy covered the entire trip, it was held that the assured was not a passenger at the time of the accident, and that the representation of the agent could not control the expressed contract, which was exact; that the limitation of the insurance to accidents while traveling, etc., was not inconsistent with the general contract and did not raise any ambiguity. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Teter (Ind., 1894), 36 N. E. Rep. 283. As to the representations of agents, see infra, this title, Agents.

2. A member of an association designed for the relief of those injured by accident while in the discharge of duty was going home a few minutes after quitting work and was killed in crossing the railroad tracks before he had left the company's yards. It was held that a recovery could be had under the policy; that the indispensable act of going from his work before he had gotten from the tracks of the cars and out of the premises of the company was in discharge of his duties within the intention of the organization. Kinney v. Baltimore, etc., Employees' Rel. Assoc., 35 W. Va. 385.

In Cornish v. Accident Ins. Co., 23 Q. B. Div. 453, Lord Justice Lindley said: "In a case on the line, in a case of real doubt, the policy ought to be construed most strongly against the insurers; they frame the policy and insert the exceptions. But this principle ought only to be applied for the purpose of removing a doubt, not for the purpose of creating a doubt, or magnifying an ambiguity, when the circumstances of the case raise no real difficulty."

6. The form of the clause varies but slight-

Effect of Negligence where Such Provision Not Inserted.—Where the policy does not contain this exception the later cases are uniform in holding that negligence of the insured will not defeat an action on the policy.¹ This construction is based upon the fact that the contract is one of indemnity, and that one object which the insured has in view in effecting insurance is protection against casualties occurring from this cause,² and also upon the analogy of decisions in other branches of insurance where companies have been held liable for losses occurring through the negligence of the policy-holder.³ The earlier cases holding that negligence of the insured would defeat an action on the policy would probably not be followed to-day.⁴

(2) What is a Voluntary Exposure—Implies Conscious Intentional Exposure.—The words "voluntary exposure" as used in an accident policy imply conscious intentional exposure—something which one is willing to take the risk of.⁵ It must appear that the act, in order to come within the exception, was one which reasonable and ordinary prudence would pronounce dangerous,⁶ and that the ly in any of the policies, though in England the words "obvious risk" are frequently used instead of "unnecessary danger." See Cornish v. Accident Ins. Co., 23 Q. B. Div. 433; Lovell v. Accident Ins. Co., 3 Ins. L. J. 877.

Employers' Liability Assur. Corp.*, 50 Mo. App. 459; Burkhard v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 102 Pa. St. 262, 48 Am. Rep. 205.

In Manufacturers' Acc. Indemnity Co. v. Dorgan, 58 Fed. Rep. 945, an instruction to the jury in the following terms was approved: The voluntary exposure within the meaning of the policy "is not such exposure as men usually are going to take, such as is incident to the ordinary habits and customs of life; such an exposure as that does not come within the range of a defense. An exposure, in order to have been a contributing cause and so defeat the plaintiff's right to recovery in this case, must be something beyond the ordinary, or a wanton, a piece of gross, carelessness, as we would term such in our designation of a person's conduct in the usual walks of life."

"Exposure to Obvious Risk of Injury."—In interpreting a clause of an accident insurance policy which prohibited "exposure of the insured to obvious risk of injury," Lord Justice Lindley, in Cornish v. Accident Ins. Co., 23 Q. B. Div. 453, said: "It is to be observed that the words are very general. There is no such word as 'wilful' or 'reckless,' or 'careless,' and to ascertain the true meaning of the exception, the whole document must be studied and the object of the parties to it must be steadily borne in mind. The object of the contract is to insure against accidental death and injuries, and the contract must not be construed so as to defeat that object, nor so as to render it practically illusory. * * * Without attempting to paraphrase the language so as to meet all cases, it is, we think, plain that two classes of accidents are excluded from the risks insured against, viz.: (1) accidents which arise from an exposure by the insured to risk of injury, which risk is obvious to him at the time he exposes himself to it; (2) accidents which arise from an exposure by the insured to risk of injury, accident was a consequence thereof.¹ It is consequently not every act of negligence which will defeat a recovery under such a provision,² and in general the question whether the conduct of the insured is such as to preclude a recovery is for the jury under all the circumstances of the case.³ But where the circumstances have clearly shown a voluntary exposure to danger, the courts have directed a verdict or granted a nonsuit.⁴

which risk would be obvious to him at the time if he were paying reasonable attention to what he was doing."

In Sawtelle v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 15 Blatchf. (U. S.) 216, it was, however, declared by Wallace, J., that negligence and voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger were equivalent terms; but the decision went no farther than to hold that if it was apparent that the insured was guilty of great negligence, so that there could be no justification for his act in the mind of any prudent man, he was not entitled to recovery.

Circumstances which Show Voluntary Exposure—Letting One's Self from Window by Bedticking.—Where the insured fell and was killed while attempting to let himself, by means of a piece of bedticking, from a window fifteen feet above a brick sidewalk, in order to elude police officers who were at the door, it was held that this was clearly a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger. Shaffer v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (Ill., 1889), 22 N. E. Rep. 589.

Traveling on Railroad Track at Night.—Where the insured was run down and killed while traveling home on a dark night on a railroad trestle where there were other ways of travel, it was held that he was voluntarily exposing himself to unnecessary danger. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Jones, 80 Ga. 541, 12 Am. St. Rep. 270; Lovell v. Accident Ins. Co., 3 Ins. L. J. 877.

So where the insured was traveling home at night upon a railway trestle, upon the side of which there was no railing and where the ties were ten or fifteen inches apart, and was killed by falling from the trestle. Follis v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc. (Iowa, 1895), 62 N. W. Rep. 807.

So where the insured was trying to drive a horse and buggy on the private grounds of a railroad on a dark night, at a place where there was a network of tracks. Neill v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 31 U. C. C. P. 394, 7 Ont. App. 570, 12 Duval (Montreal) 55.

So where the insured was killed while running along the track to meet and board a train at night and was struck by an engine approaching from behind. Tuttle v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 134 Mass. 175, 45 Am. Rep. 316.

Falling Asleep on Railroad Track.—Where the insured fell asleep in a railroad yard with his arm across the rail, it was held that the negligence of the insured precluded a recovery. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Langston (Ark., 1895), 30 S. W. Rep. 427.

Going on Track in Front of Approaching Engine.—The fact that the insured sat down upon a railroad track when an engine moving toward him was only twenty-five feet away, was held to be so clearly a case of voluntary exposure as to necessitate a dismissal of the complaint. Williams v. U. S. Mut. Acc. Assoc., 133 N. Y. 366, reversing 14 N. Y. Supp. 728.

Driving in Race so as to Bring on Collision.—The United States Supreme Court has intimated that when one driver in a horse-race observed that another driver was ahead of him, his persistence in so running his horse as to bring about a collision was a wilful exposure to danger within the meaning of the policy. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Seaver, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 531.

Alighting from a Car while in Motion.—It has been held that jumping from a train after it has started is a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger. Smith v. Preferred Mut. Acc. Assoc. (Mich., 1895), 62 N. W. Rep. 990. But see Badenfeld v. Massachusetts Mut. Acc. Assoc., 154 Mass. 77.

Crossing in Front of Approaching Train.—It is an exposure to an obvious risk, within the meaning of an insurance policy, for one possessing ordinary faculties of sight and hearing to attempt to cross the railroad track in front of an approaching train. Cornish v. Accident Ins. Co., 23 Q. B. Div. 453.

Voluntary Act and Voluntary Exposure Distinguished.—A clear distinction exists between a voluntary act and a voluntary exposure to danger. A hidden danger may exist, yet the exposure thereto without any knowledge of the danger does not constitute a voluntary exposure. The act may be voluntary, yet the exposure involuntary.¹

Voluntary Exposure to Necessary Danger.—Under a policy which prohibits a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger there may be an exposure to danger which is necessary, as where there is a chance to rescue a person in peril, and this is not within the terms of the exception.²

ing to see whether they are attached to an engine or not, precludes a recovery for injuries received while making the attempt. Bean v. Employers' Liability Assur. Co., 50 Mo. App. 459.

Circumstances which do Not Show Voluntary Exposure—Crossing Railroad Tracks.—It is not such voluntary exposure as to defeat a recovery under this clause, to cross railroad tracks in order to pass over a street through which the track runs. Wright v. Sun Mut. L. Ins. Co., 29 U. C. C. P. 221.

So crossing a railroad track at a point where many others crossed daily, although forbidden by the company, and though an umbrella carried by the insured obstructed his view of a detached car which was moving toward him and by which he was struck and killed. Keene v. New England Mut. Acc. Assoc., 161 Mass. 149; Duncan v. Preferred Mut. Acc. Assoc. (Super. Ct.), 13 N. Y. Supp. 620.

Running beside Moving Train.—The death of one who while running to meet an incoming train and receive the mail bag stumbled and fell against the engine, was held not to be within the exception. Equitable Acc. Ins. Co. v. Osborn, 90 Ala. 201.

Walking on Sidewalk on Railroad Bridge.—One does not voluntarily expose himself to unnecessary danger where he walks on a railroad bridge where there is a plank walk five feet wide extending along the entire length of the bridge, guarded by railing, which walk was constantly used by footmen crossing the street. Follis v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc. (Iowa, 1895), 62 N. W. Rep. 807.

Bathing in Deep Water.—It is not within this exception for the insured to go bathing in deep water. Knickerbocker Casualty Ins. Co. v. Jordan, 7 Cinc. L. Bull. (Ohio) 71.

Speaking to Woman on Street.—Where the insured spoke to a woman on the street and was knocked down and killed by her escort, it was held that there was no voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger. Mair v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 37 L. T. N. S. 356.

Insured Killed while Fighting.—Where the insured was killed in a quarrel and while carrying a concealed weapon, it was contended that, his acts being unnecessary, the case came within the exception; but it was held that there was no voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger. Jones v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc. (Iowa, 1894), 61 N. W. Rep. 485.

Riding on Platform of Car.—It has been held not to be a voluntary exposure for a passenger to leave the interior of a car in order to ride on the platform because he was overcome from heat or suffering from nausea. Marx v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 39 Fed. Rep. 321. The court in this case said: "That the deceased was in a dangerous position on the platform as distinguished from the body of the car, in which, as a passenger, he was entitled to ride, is clear enough; but whether in going on the platform there was a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger cannot be ascertained except with knowledge of all the circumstances which influenced his conduct. If he was overcome by the heat of the car, or affected with nausea, which impelled him to seek the open air, it cannot be said that there was a voluntary exposure or that the danger was unnecessarily incurred." See Pratt v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (N. Y., 1871), 7 Am. L. Rev. 595; Scheiderer v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 58 Wis. 13, 46 Am. Rep. 618.

So riding on the platform of a street car. Sutherland v. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co., 87 Iowa 505.

On the other hand, it has been held that the policy was avoided where the insured was killed by falling from the platform while attempting to pass from one car to another of a train moving at full speed. Sawtelle v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 15 Blatchf. (U. S.) 216.

Cleaning Gun Not Known to be Loaded.—It has accordingly been held that where the insured was killed while cleaning a gun which he did not know was loaded, there was not a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger. Miller v. American Mut. Acc. Ins. Co., 92 Tenn. 167.

Stepping from Train at Night on Railroad Bridge.—The insured stepped off a railroad train when it came to a stop on a drawbridge at night, fell through a concealed hole in the bridge, and was killed; it appeared that other passengers were alighting at the time, that the bridge with the exception of the hole through which the insured fell was safe, and that the insured stepped from the train in the presence of a brakeman with a lantern, who gave no warning as to danger. It was held that although the insured by a voluntary act exposed himself to a hidden danger, there was no voluntary exposure to danger within the exception of the policy. Burkhard v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 102 Pa. St. 262, 48 Am. Rep. 205.

2. Keene v. New England Mut. Acc. Assoc., 161 Mass. 149.

c. WANT OF DUE DILIGENCE.—A stipulation for due diligence on the part of the insured for his personal safety requires only such care as prudent persons are accustomed habitually to use, and does not negative a recovery for every accident to which want of care on the part of the insured may have contributed.¹

Does Not Include Contemplated Risks—Risks Impliedly Assumed.—The clause prohibiting a recovery in case of voluntarily assumed risks has no application to dangers which, in view of the surrounding circumstances and the situation of the parties, would have been naturally contemplated by them, as where the occupation of the assured was of an extra hazardous character, in which accidents were to be expected.²

Going to the Rescue of a Shipwrecked Crew is not an exposure to unnecessary danger. Tucker v. Mutual Ben. Life Co., 50 Hun (N. Y.) 50. See Williams v. U. S. Mut. Acc. Assoc. (Supreme Ct.), 38 N. Y. St. Rep. 378, 133 N. Y. 366.

1. In Keene v. New England Mut. Acc. Assoc., 161 Mass. 149, the court, by Allen, J., in reference to a provision that the certificate holder is required to use all due diligence for personal safety and protection, said: "This phrase is very general, and certainly it does not mean that the assured must guarantee himself against accidents, nor do we think it means that he shall not recover for any accident to which some want of care on his part may have contributed. He is not required to use all possible diligence, but only all due diligence. Due diligence or care is sometimes said to be reasonable diligence or care, and reasonable care is sometimes said to be the ordinary care of prudent persons. It is not a precise term, but a relative one. In an accident policy it would not be reasonable to hold that this clause requires of the assured a higher degree of diligence than prudent persons are accustomed habitually to use. Under such a construction few persons would care to have an accident policy. The due diligence required is not inconsistent with inadvertence, nor with running such risks as prudent and cautious persons habitually run."

Going on Scaffold on House in Course of Erection.—Where the policy required the insured to use all due diligence for his personal safety, the court declined to hold as a matter of law that the stipulation had been violated because the insured, who was having a barn built, climbed up to the second story to inspect the work, though he was heavily clad in two overcoats and was said to be an awkward man, and there stepped upon a joist which, owing to a concealed defect, broke, and he fell to the ground and was killed. Stone v. U. S. Casualty Co., 34 N. J. L. 371.

Boarding a Moving Train.—Where one who was insured under a policy requiring "due diligence for self-protection," attempted to get on board of a train which was moving slowly, either on the forward platform of the rear car or between two cars, and was crushed between the wheels, it was left to the jury to say whether the insured had used that degree of caution and diligence which a prudent man would use under the circumstances. Tooley v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 3 Biss.

(U. S.) 399. See Travelers' Preferred Acc. Assoc. v. Stone, 50 Ill. App. 222.

But where the insured under a policy requiring due diligence for personal safety was killed by an engine at whose signal he had first stepped off the track and then deliberately stepped on when the locomotive had almost reached him, it was held that the defendant was entitled to a nonsuit. Hoffman v. Travelers' L. Ins. Co. (N. Y., 1871), 7 Am. L. Rev. 594.

2. Wilson v. Northwestern Mut. Acc. Assoc., 53 Minn. 470.

Illustrations—Brick Mason on Swinging Scaffold.—Where the insured was a brick mason, it was held that recovery would not be defeated by the fact that he was injured while working on an insecure swinging ladder. Wilson v. Northwestern Mut. Acc. Assoc., 53 Minn. 470.

Switchman Handling Broken Cars.—The insured was killed while handling broken cars in the discharge of his regular duty as a yard switchman or a yard brakeman, and it was held that his death arose not from voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger, but from an accident for which the contracting parties intended the association should be liable. National Ben. Assoc. v. Jackson, 114 Ill. 533. See Standard L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Jones, 94 Ala. 434.

Engineer Passing from Tender to Car.—Where a locomotive engineer, while backing his engine down grade at a speed of about eight miles an hour, attempted to pass from the tender to the car attached in front, for the purpose of checking speed, and in such attempt slipped between the car and the tender and was crushed to death, it was held that there was no breach of the clause prohibiting exposure to unnecessary risks. Providence L. Ins., etc., Co. v. Martin, 32 Md. 310.

Cattle-dealer Boarding Train.—Where a cattle-dealer, insured under an accident policy which permitted him to attend his cattle in transit on the cars, was injured while attempting to board a moving train, the court held that he was entitled under the policy to attend to cattle on the cars in the custom of prudent cattle-men, and that evidence of such custom was admissible. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Snowden, 58 Fed. Rep. 342. In delivering the opinion of the court in this case Caldwell, J., said: "Plaintiff had a right, if it was not his duty, to incur all the risk and danger incident to caring for and looking after his cattle in the cars while en-

Express Exceptions of Incidental Risk.—Though this principle is applied in cases where the issue of negligence is involved, it will be construed more strictly where there is a proviso excepting risks; but the exception of a risk incident to the employment of the insured and which is known to the insured will not be allowed to defeat the policy.¹ If, however, the exception can stand and not defeat the policy, it will be upheld,² and there can be no recovery where the insured has been guilty of the want of due care in the performance of customary duties.³

d. WALKING OR BEING ON RAILROAD.—An exception in a policy in case of injury or death received while walking or being on the road-bed of a steam railroad is intended to guard against accidents caused by moving trains, and not against all accidents which happen to occur on the track.⁴ It includes route to their destination, in the time and manner customary among reasonably prudent and careful shippers, and such risks and dangers, no matter how great, do not constitute any violation of the provisions of the policy requiring the plaintiff to use due diligence for his personal safety and protection; nor is the incurring of such risks and dangers a voluntary exposure to unnecessary danger within the meaning of that clause in the policy."

1. Conductor Injured while Leaving Moving Train.—Where an accident policy was issued to one who was described in the application as "a passenger conductor," and the application was expressly made a part of the contract, it was held that the insurer could not resist a recovery upon the ground that the insured was injured while leaving a moving train, and that the policy expressly excepted the hazard of "attempting to enter or leave moving conveyances using steam as a motive power." Dailey v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acc. Assoc. (Mich., 1894), 57 N. W. Rep. 184. In this case the court said: "We are also satisfied from the application and the information which that gave to the defendant company that accidents of this kind are of the risks intended to be insured against. The sole business of the deceased was in running passenger trains, and this was plainly stated in the application. It is common knowledge that conductors of passenger trains on all railroads must, from the very nature of their business, not only enter but leave their trains before they come to a full stop; it is common knowledge that conductors of passenger trains have full charge of their trains; they give the signal to start, and after the train starts they get on board; at stations when the train pulls up and before it stops the conductor alights upon the platform. This may be a dangerous practice, but it is among the risks which the passenger conductor assumes when he enters upon such employment, and so general is this knowledge that the defendant company when it took and approved the application must have had knowledge of it." Upon a rehearing this case was reversed upon a different point not affecting the doctrine just stated. See Dailey v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acc. Assoc. (Mich., 1894), 60 N. W. Rep. 691.

Railroad Superintendent.—A proviso excepting injuries while getting on or off moving trains does not apply in the case of a railway superintendent whose duties require him to get on and off moving trains, of which fact the insurer had knowledge. Accident Ins. Co. v. McFee, 7 Montreal Q. B. 255.

2. Where the insured was described as a cattle dealer or broker, not a tender, it was held that an exception against injuries received while entering or trying to enter a moving steam vehicle, or while riding in a conveyance not provided for the transportation of passengers, was a competent provision of the policy; and that where the evidence showed that the injuries were sustained in this way it was error to refuse to instruct that the plaintiff could not recover; the question being whether the injuries were within the contract of the parties, and not whether plaintiff was conducting himself in a prudent manner. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Snowden (Neb., 1895), 63 N. W. Rep. 392. But see Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Snowden, 58 Fed. Rep. 345.

3. Due Care in Performing Customary Duties.—Where the plea alleged that the insured was chargeable with want of due care and diligence for his personal safety, and the replication thereto alleged that "said insured was a railroad switchman, was insured as such, and met the accident which caused his death while in the discharge of his customary duties as such switchman," it was held that the replication was demurrable and insufficient because, although the policy covered injuries resulting from the dangers incident to the service, it did not cover injuries resulting from negligence or want of due care in the performance of customary duties. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Jones, 94 Ala. 434.

4. Where the insured was injured by stepping off a railroad train at night when it had come to a stop at a drawbridge, and falling through a concealed hole therein, it was held that the injury was not within the exception. Burkhard v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 102 Pa. St. 262, 48 Am. Rep. 205. In explaining the exception in this case the court, by Mercur, C. J., said: "The language of the exception clearly implies two thoughts: one, that the insured must not be on the road-bed or bridge for any length of time; the other, that the prohibition is not to guard against injury only cases where the accident happens through the insured voluntarily and intentionally being or walking upon the road-bed, and not where he is there by force of accident or involuntarily.¹ The mere fact that the insured was injured while crossing the railroad track does not under this clause prevent a recovery,² but the exception applies where one is needlessly walking along the tracks or road-bed instead of upon a parallel walk provided for passengers.³

Meaning of Road-bed.—The word "road-bed" in this connection is used with regard to the way in which railroads are usually constructed, but it does not include parts of either the foundation or superstructure whereon a prudent person might be without danger from passing trains.⁴

c. RIDING ON PLATFORM OF OR GETTING ON OR OFF A RAILROAD CAR.—Where the policy contains a proviso excluding liability for injuries or death happening while the insured is standing or riding or being on the platform of, or entering or leaving, a moving steam vehicle, the condition is valid and protects the insurer in case of accident so happening.⁵

resulting from a defective road-bed or defective railway bridge, but against the danger of injury from trains passing thereon."

1. Where the insured while running beside the track stumbled and fell thereon and was injured, it was held that the exception did not apply. The court said: "A fair and reasonable construction of the phrase in question is voluntarily and intentionally being or walking on the railway road-bed, not being there by force of accident and involuntarily for a mere comparative moment of time." Equitable Acc. Ins. Co. v. Osborn, 90 Ala. 201.

2. Duncan v. Preferred Mut. Acc. Assoc. (Super. Ct.), 36 N. Y. St. Rep. 928; Dougherty v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co., 154 Pa. St. 385; Wright v. Sun Mut. L. Ins. Co., 29 U. C. C. P. 231. See supra, this title, Voluntary Exposure to Unnecessary Danger.

3. Where the insured is killed while walking on the road-bed between the tracks of a railroad, when parallel to it is a sidewalk which he could have used, the exception applies, and the fact that many other people use the road-bed in the same manner is immaterial. Piper v. Mercantile Mut. Acc. Assoc., 161 Mass. 589.

4. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Langston (Ark., 1895), 30 S. W. Rep. 427; Meadows v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. (Mo., 1895), 31 S. W. Rep. 578. See Follis v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc. (Iowa, 1895), 62 N. W. Rep. 807.

Ends of Extraordinarily Long Ties.—In Standard L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Langston (Ark., 1895), 30 S. W. Rep. 427, the court, by Battle, J., in construing the meaning of the word "road-bed" within the exception in an accident policy, said: "The word 'road-bed,' when used in reference to railways, has a well-understood meaning. It is the bed or foundation on which the superstructure of the railway rests, and the superstructure is the sleepers or ties, rails, and fastenings. This, of course, includes the side tracks which form a part of the railway. Santa Clara County v. Southern Pac. R. Co., 118 U. S. 413; San Francisco v. Central Pac. R. Co., 63 Cal. 469, 49 Am. Rep. 98; San Francisco, etc., R. Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 60 Cal. 34; Cass County v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 25 Neb.

353. In this sense it was doubtless used in the policy sued on in this case, but in using it in this sense it is presumed that the parties had reference to the manner in which railroads are usually constructed, and did not include in its meaning the ends of ties of unusual and extraordinary length and extending to a place where there can be no possible collision with trains, and where persons standing or sitting would be beyond the reach of injury by passing trains. * * * Whether the appellee was on the road-bed in the sense so used was a question of fact for the jury to decide, if there was any room for doubt about it."

Wide Space between Tracks.—A space between railroad tracks of the width of ten feet and formed of well-beaten, level, and smoothly trodden cinders, is not a part of the road-bed within a policy of accident insurance which provides that it does not extend to accidents on a railroad bridge, trestle, or road-bed. Meadows v. Pacific L. Ins. Co. (Mo., 1895), 31 S. W. Rep. 578.

5. Hull v. Equitable Acc. Assoc., 41 Minn. 231; Miller v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 39 Minn. 548. See Sawtelle v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 15 Blatchf. (U. S.) 216.

Being on Platform.—Where the insured was traveling upon a railroad car, went out upon the platform while the train was in motion, intending to get off when it should stop, for the purpose of crossing over by a switch to another track, and was thrown off and killed, it was held that the case was within the exception as to injuries resulting from being upon the platform of moving cars, and that the insurer was not liable. Hull v. Equitable Acc. Assoc., 41 Minn. 231.

Getting on Moving Train.—Where the insured, under a policy excepting injuries while trying to enter a moving steam vehicle, was killed while attempting to get on a railroad train which was in motion, it was held that the exception applied and that the company was not liable. Miller v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 39 Minn. 548.

Evidence.—Where the insured was killed by a train on which he had been a passenger, his body having been found a few feet from a station at which the train stopped, it

Exception as to Railroad Employees.—The policy frequently provides that this proviso shall not extend to railroad employees.¹ In determining who is a railroad employee, regard must be had rather to the character of the employment than to the person of the employer.²

f. NONCOMPLIANCE WITH RULES AND REGULATIONS OF CARRIER OR CORPORATION.—A proviso in accident policies sometimes excepts injuries received when the insured was violating the rules and regulations of a common carrier or corporation. It has been held that it must be shown that the rule was one which was known to the policy-holder and in force at the time of its alleged violation.³ But where the insured is the employee of the corporation, it is his duty to inform himself of its rules, and it is immaterial whether in point of fact he knew of the rule violated or not.⁴ Where the injury was received while the insured was violating a known rule of a carrier, the insurer was held by such a clause to be relieved of liability.⁵

g. SUICIDE OR SELF-INFLICTED INJURIES—Usual Proviso in Policies.—A proviso is usually inserted in policies to the effect that the insurance shall not be extended to death caused by "suicide or self-inflicted injuries."

Refers to Voluntary Conscious Act.—The question presented under such a clause in an accident policy is in all respects the same as when the question arises under a policy of life insurance. Accordingly, in courts where the established doctrine in life insurance is that suicide while insane is not within the exception against suicide in a life policy, it has been held that self-destruction by a person non compos mentis is not within a similar exception in an accident policy.⁶ In jurisdictions where a suicide while insane is considered as avoiding a was held that as the burden of showing that the accident was within the exception was upon the defendants, it could not be said that his death was due to getting on or off a moving train, and that the question was one for the jury. Anthony v. Mercantile Mut. Acc. Assoc., 162 Mass. 354.

Jumping on or off a Moving Car, unless Result of Design.—Where the policy excepted injuries caused by jumping on or off moving cars, unless the claimant should establish that the injuries were caused by external, violent, and accidental means, not the result of design, and the evidence showed that the insured while attempting to board a moving car lost his balance and fell from the train, and that his left hand was run over and mashed, it was held that the exception in the policy did not prevent a recovery; that the words meant that jumping on the train was excused if the means of the injury was not the result of design, and in this case neither the means nor the injury was the result of design. Travelers' Preferred Acc. Assoc. v. Stone, 50 Ill. App. 222.

1. The same rule applies in the absence of a special exception as to railroad employees. Dailey v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acc. Assoc. (Mich., 1894), 57 N. W. Rep. 184; Accident Ins. Co. v. McFee, 7 Montreal Q. B. 255. See also supra, this title, Voluntary Exposure to Unnecessary Danger.

2. Cotten v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 41 Fed. Rep. 506. In this case the insured was a baggage checker, employed by a transfer company, and not by the railroad; his business required him to meet and board incoming trains, and check baggage to other railroad lines, and to residences in the city. It was held that he was a railroad employee within the meaning of the exception.

3. Marx v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 39 Fed. Rep. 321. In this case it was held that where it appeared that the rule of a common carrier, a violation of which was alleged, was not at all observed; that it was violated by all passengers on the road who were so inclined, and often at the invitation of the trainmen—it could not be said that it was in fact a rule of the company in force. The court in its opinion expressed a doubt whether, when under the policy certain limitations were imposed upon policy-holders as to entering or trying to enter or leave a moving conveyance using steam as a motive power, or walking or being on a railroad bridge or road-bed, another limitation could be added under the general designation of a rule of the corporation. "Will any one say," remarked Hallett, J., "that on sea and land, at home and abroad, a policy-holder must constantly consider whether he is within all the rules of all the corporations, public and private, which he may in any way encounter?"

4. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Jones, 94 Ala. 434. But in this case it was held that this exception to the insurer's liability was a matter of affirmative defense, and where it was not pleaded by the insurer it was not error for the court to exclude evidence offered to establish the existence of the rule which it was proposed to show had been violated by the insured in such sort that the violation contributed to his death.

6. Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandal, 120 U. S. 527; Blackstone v. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co., 74 Mich. 592. See the title LIFE INSURANCE. In Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandal, 120 U. S. 527, Gray, J., said: "The decisions upon the life policy containing a proviso against suicide,¹ a similar interpretation would probably hold in accident policies.

Self-inflicted Injuries.—The same construction governs a clause against "self-inflicted injuries" as against suicide, for the former can no more be predicated of an insane person than the latter.²

h. TAKING POISON.—The policy frequently exempts injury or death "from taking poison." The authorities are not in accord whether this exception extends to all cases of poison, whether accidental or intentional.³

effect of a policy of life insurance which provides that it shall be void if the insured 'shall die by suicide,' or 'shall die by his own hand,' go far towards determining this question." And it was accordingly held upon an examination of those authorities that an accident policy containing the proviso that "this insurance shall not extend to death * * * by suicide," covered a death by hanging one's self while insane.

A similar result was reached by a similar course of reasoning in Blackstone v. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co., 74 Mich. 592. In this case, before examining the authorities upon the disputed point, Long, J., summed up the result of the authorities as to the distinction between voluntary suicide and accidental death as follows: "Upon the question of a voluntary suicide intentionally committed by a sane man in the possession of his faculties, knowing how to adapt means to ends, and conscious of the immorality of the act, there is no difference of opinion, and all the authorities agree that self-destruction is within the exemption; and all authorities likewise agree that an accidental death, as by taking poison by mistake, or shooting one's self with a pistol supposing it not to be loaded, or falling from a building, or death happening in any way by the unintended act of the party dying, is not within the exemption." See also, as to accidental death, Pierce v. Travelers' L. Ins. Co., 34 Wis. 396; Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Laurence, 8 Ill. App. 488.

Missouri Statute.—It is provided by § 5855 of the Missouri Rev. Stats., that suicide in cases of life insurance shall be no defense, unless the insured contemplated suicide when he took out the policy, and any stipulation to the contrary in the policy is void. See Kellar v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 24 Ins. L. J. 396.

Suicide—Sane or Insane.—As to the effect of a provision in the policy that the contract is to be void in the case of suicide, sane or insane, by the insured, see the title LIFE INSURANCE. See also Hutchcraft v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 87 Ky. 303, 12 Am. St. Rep. 484.

1. Borradaile v. Hunter, 5 M. & G. 639, 44 E. C. L. 335; Dean v. American Mut. L. Ins. Co., 4 Allen (Mass.) 96; Cooper v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co., 102 Mass. 227, 3 Am. Rep. 451. See the title LIFE INSURANCE.

But it seems, even in these jurisdictions, that if the death is inflicted in the madness of delirium and is not the result of the will and intention, although perverted, the exception does not apply. Clift v. Schwabe, 3 C. B. 437, 54 E. C. L. 437, per Alderson, B.; Cooper v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co., 102 Mass. 227, 3 Am. Rep. 451.

Nor does insane suicide avoid a policy which contains no exception as to suicide or self-inflicted injuries, although perhaps a voluntary suicide might have such an effect, upon the grounds of public policy. Horn v. Anglo-Australian, etc., L. Ins. Co., 7 Jur. N. S. 673.

2. Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandal, 120 U. S. 532. See Hutchcraft v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 87 Ky. 304, 12 Am. St. Rep. 484; and infra, this title, Intentional Injuries.

3. Some authorities hold that this exemption extends to all cases of poisoning, whether accidental or not. Pollock v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 102 Pa. St. 230, 48 Am. Rep. 204; Hill v. Hartford Acc. Ins. Co., 22 Hun (N. Y.) 187; Cole v. Accidental Ins. Co., 61 L. T. N. S. 227.

Illustrations of Accidental Poisoning.—In Cole v. Accidental Ins. Co., 61 L. T. N. S. 227, the insured took poison by mistake for medicine which he was in the habit of taking.

In Hill v. Hartford Acc. Ins. Co., 22 Hun (N. Y.) 187, the insured, a physician, mixed some poison with water in a goblet, and afterward mistaking the mixture for water drank it, and subsequently died. It was held that the beneficiary could not recover, because the death did not proceed from an external, violent, and accidental injury, and because the policy contained an exception as to death by poisoning. This case was overruled, as to the first of the two grounds upon which the court proceeded, in Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 112 N. Y. 472, 8 Am. St. Rep. 758, but its force as an authority upon the second ground seems not to have been disturbed.

In Pollock v. U. S. Mut. Acc. Assoc., 102 Pa. St. 230, 48 Am. Rep. 204, the insured by mistake drank "oil of birch" for "milk of birch," and it was held that there could be no recovery under a policy containing the exception as to death from poison. In this case Mercur, C.J., said: "To remove all doubt as to the liability of the association to the plaintiff in this case, the certificate further declares the benefits under it shall not extend to any death or disability which may have been caused 'by the taking of poison.' It is not necessary that the poison be taken with an intent to produce death, in order to defeat a claim flowing from the right of membership. If the poison be innocently taken and without any knowledge of the injurious effect which it was likely to produce, and did produce, so far as the person taking it is concerned, the effect may be said to be accidental."

The Contrary Doctrine has, however, been laid down. Thus, in Healey v. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 133 Ill. 556, 23 Am. St. Rep. 637, the

What is Poison.—It has been held that death by asphyxiation from the inhalation of gas is not a death from taking poison.¹ Whether an injury from the sting of a venomous insect is an injury from poison, has been left to the jury under an instruction from the court distinguishing venom from poison.²

i. INHALATION OF GAS.—Where the policy excepts death from the inhalation of gas, it has been held that all deaths from this cause are covered, whether the inhalation was intentional or not, since if this exception were intended to cover only the cases of accidental inhalation it would seem to be superfluous, as deaths by intentional inhalation of gas are excepted in the policy against suicide.³ But, on the other hand, it has been held that this exception refers only to deliberate conscious acts.⁴

j. DEATH CAUSED BY DISEASE.—Accident policies usually contain a clause which differs considerably in the various policies in its wording, the purpose of which clause is to relieve the insured from responsibility in case of the death or disability of the insured from disease. The effect of such an exception depends of necessity upon the terms of the policy, and resolves itself largely into a question of construction.

Where Disease Not Proximate Cause of Death.—The tendency of the courts, under the settled rules of construction applicable to insurance contracts, is to interpret the clause in a manner favorable to the insured, and where the accident can be considered as the proximate cause of death, although disease may have been present as a secondary cause,⁵ or where the death is the reasonable and natural consequence of the injury, although disease may have supervened,⁶ the declaration alleged that the insured died from an overdose of chloral. The policy by which the deceased was insured provided for liability in case of death through external, violent, and accidental means, and there was a proviso excepting responsibility for death by the taking of poison. Upon a general demurrer, it was held that the death as set forth in the declaration was caused by external, violent, and accidental means, and the demurrer was overruled. But in the opinion of the court there is no allusion to or consideration of the effect of the proviso in the policy as to death by poison, further than is implied in the fact that Pollock v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 102 Pa. St. 230, 48 Am. Rep. 204, is disapproved. Healey v. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 133 Ill. 556, 23 Am. St. Rep. 637, was followed in Mutual Acc. Assoc. v. Tuggle, 39 Ill. App. 509, where the point was distinctly made. This case was reversed upon another point in 138 Ill. 428.

In Bayless v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 14 Blatchf. (U. S.) 143, it was held that there could be no recovery where, a specified dose of opium having been prescribed to the insured by his physician to allay nervousness, by inadvertence the patient took more opium than he intended, and death ensued.

In U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc. v. Newman, 84 Va. 52, where the insured died by inhaling carbonic oxide and coal gas, it was left to the jury to say whether carbonic oxide was poisonous, and whether the insured died from the poisonous effects thereof or from the effects of suffocation produced by other elements of coal gas with which the oxide was combined.

"Death from Anything Accidentally Taken or Inhaling Gas."—Where the policy excepts "death or disablement arising from anything accidentally taken, administered, or inhaled, the contact of poisonous substances, inhaling gas, or any surgical operation," it would seem that unintentional as well as deliberate inhalation of gas is excepted. 6. Disease the Reasonable and Natural Consequence of Accident.—The insured under a policy against death from the effects of injury caused by accident fell and dislocated his shoulder. He was at once put to bed, and died in less than a month from the date of the accident, having been all the time confined to his bedroom. In a case stated in a reference pursuant to the Railway Passengers' Companies' Act (27 and 28 Vict., c. 125) the umpire found that the assured died from pneumonia caused by cold, but that he would not have died when he did had not it been for the accident, that as a consequence of the accident he was rendered restless, unable policy is not avoided unless the exception plainly includes such case. Policies excepting "death or disability in consequence of disease,"¹ or "injury happening directly or indirectly in consequence of disease, or caused wholly or in part by disease,"² or "injury caused by or arising from natural dis-to wear his clothing, weak, and unusually susceptible to cold, and that his catching cold and the fatal effects thereof were due to the condition of health to which he had been reduced by the accident. It was held that the death of the assured was due to the effects of injury caused by accident within the meaning of the policy. Isitt v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 22 Q. B. Div. 504.

Embolism or Thrombus—Evidence.—Where it appeared that the insured upon a certain day broke his arm, that upon the same day the fracture was reduced, that upon the following day he was taken ill quite suddenly with severe pain in his chest and lungs, from which he was relieved and was convalescent for a week or ten days, when he was again attacked in a similar manner and died within less than three weeks from the happening of the accident, and the evidence introduced by the plaintiff tended to show that the cause of his death was embolism or thrombus, which was the direct result of his arm being broken, while the evidence of the defendant tended to show that the death was caused by pneumonia, it was held that the evidence was sufficient to justify the trial court in finding that the fracture of the plaintiff's arm was the sole and proximate cause of his death. Peck v. Equitable Acc. Assoc., 52 Hun (N. Y.) 255.

1. Peritonitis Following a Fall.—Where a policy was conditioned not to extend "to any case in which death or disability occurs in consequence of disease, * * * nor to any case except where the injury is the proximate cause of the disability or death," and it appeared that the insured died of peritonitis induced by a fall; that he had previously had the same disease and was, in consequence, more liable to a recurrence thereof, the court charged the jury that upon the question whether peritonitis, if that caused his death, was to be deemed a disease and the proximate cause of death, within the meaning of the policy, depended the question whether or not before the time of the fall and at the time of the fall he had then the disease. If he had, then, although the disease was aggravated and made fatal by the fall, he could not recover; but if, owing to existing lesions caused by the disease, he not having the disease at the time, peritonitis was started, the defendant was answerable, although if there had been a normal state of things the fall would not have occasioned such a result. It was held that this ruling gave an interpretation to the language of the policy which was in accordance with the apparent intention of the parties, and which made the contract a beneficial provision for the beneficiaries named in it. Freeman v. Mercantile Mut. Acc. Assoc., 156 Mass. 351.

Tetanus.—Where the policy excepted "death resulting wholly or in part from disease," and in consequence of a pistol wound the insured took lockjaw or tetanus and died, it was held that the insurer was liable if the wound was the proximate cause of the death. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Melick, 65 Fed. Rep. 178.

2. Blood-poisoning Consequent on Wound.—Where a policy provided that its benefits should not extend to "bodily injury happening directly or indirectly in consequence of any disease, * * * death or disability caused wholly or in part by bodily infirmities or disease, or to any case except where the injury was the proximate and sole cause of the disability or death," and it appeared that the deceased received an injury to a finger upon his right hand, that blood-poisoning ensued and caused his death, that previously he had received an injury on his left hand which inflamed and suppurated, and that it was possible that poisonous matter from the old wound might, at or near the time of the accident to the finger, have been communicated to it and caused such blood-poisoning, it was held that it was a question for the jury to determine whether the injury to the finger was within the terms of the policy and the sole and proximate cause of death. Martin v. Equitable Acc. Assoc., 61 Hun (N. Y.) 467.

Erysipelas Caused by Fall.—Where deceased was insured under a policy containing the same provision, and in consequence of an accidental wound took erysipelas and died, the erysipelas resulting solely from an external injury, it was held that the external injury was the proximate or sole cause of the death within the meaning of the policy. Accident Ins. Co. v. Young, 20 Duval (Montreal) 280. In delivering judgment in this case Patterson, J., said: "As soon as we abandon the notion that other diseases, such as the diseases of the lungs or kidneys, of which traces were found, produced or aided in producing the erysipelas, the reference to 'bodily infirmities or disease existing prior or subsequent to the date of this contract' becomes inapplicable to the case. * * * The proviso in the policy distinguishes between death from an injury as a direct consequence, and death from bodily infirmities and disease not caused by the injury. The latter cause of death gives no claim under the policy; the former, which is designated the proximate cause, gives a claim." See the same case, Young v. Accident Ins. Co., 6 Montreal Super. Ct. 4.

Duodenitis Caused by a Jump.—Under a similar policy it has been held that duodenitis produced by a jump and resulting in the death of the insured entitles the beneficiary to recover. Barry v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 23 Fed. Rep. 712, 131 U. S. 100.

Ruptured Blood-vessel Followed by Abscess—Proximate Cause.—Where it appeared that one who was insured under an accident policy case,"¹ have received interpretations in accord with the above principles; yet where the death is directly due to disease and not to accident, the exception protects the insurer.²

burst a blood-vessel while exercising with Indian clubs, it was held, under a clause in the policy which provided that insurance should not extend to death caused wholly or in part by disease, nor to any case except where the injury was the proximate and sole cause of death, that if the deceased sustained injury by the rupture of a blood-vessel in his lungs, and that necessarily produced inflammation, and that necessarily produced a disordered condition of the injured organ, which was in consequence followed by the formation of abscesses and the accumulation of injurious substances or matter in the lungs, and so there resulted a diseased state of the lungs, whereby they could no longer perform their functions, and in consequence the insured died; that is, if all these results followed the injury as its necessary consequence, and would not have taken place if it had not been for the injury, then the injury could be said to be the proximate cause of death. But if an independent disease supervened upon the injury, one not necessarily produced by the injury, or if the alleged injury merely brought into activity a then existing though slumbering disease, and the death of the deceased was caused wholly or in part by such disease, then it could not be said that the injury was the sole and proximate cause of the death. McCarthy v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 8 Biss. (U. S.) 362.

1. Accident Consequent on Epileptic Fit.—Where W. was insured under a policy excepting "injury caused by or arising from natural disease or weakness or exhaustion consequent upon disease," and it appeared that while crossing a stream he was seized with an epileptic fit, and fell into the stream and was drowned while suffering from the fit, it was held that the accident was within the policy, and not within the exception. Wingspear v. Accident Ins. Co., 6 Q. B. Div. 42. In this case Coleridge, J., said: "I am of opinion that those words in the proviso mean what they say, and that they point to an injury caused by natural disease, as if for instance in the present case epilepsy had really been the cause of death."

To the same effect is Manufacturers' Acc. Indemnity Co. v. Dorgan, 58 Fed. Rep. 945. See North American L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Burroughs, 69 Pa. St. 43, 8 Am. Rep. 212.

2. Malignant Pustule is a disease, and where one insured under an accident policy excepting disease dies from such malignant pustule contracted by contact with putrid animal matter, the insurer is not liable. Bacon v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 123 N. Y. 304, 20 Am. St. Rep. 748. In delivering the opinion of the court Peckham, J., said: "The definition given by the physicians for the plaintiff, as to the difficulty being a pathological condition of the body, is  much too refined for common acceptance. It seems to me clear that the meaning of the words used in the policy covers just such a case, and that the parties never intended that a cause of death which to all outward appearances, and to the world in general, was a disease, should be converted into a pathological condition of the body caused by an accident."

Fatty Degeneration of the Heart and Brain.—Where the assured while pursuing his business as a traveling salesman sustained a heavy fall, striking and injuring his forehead, and the evidence disclosed no cause for the fall, but the assured while standing threw up his hands and fell to the floor, and an autopsy revealed an advanced stage of fatty degeneration of the brain and heart, it was held that the cause of death was not the accident insured against, and that there could be no recovery under a policy whereby insurance was expressly withheld from any "bodily injury happening directly or indirectly in consequence of disease," etc. Sharpe v. Commercial Travelers' Mut. Acc. Assoc. (Ind., 1894), 37 N. E. Rep. 353.

Death from Epilepsy in Bath.—Where the evidence showed that the insured was found dead in a plunge-bath, in almost a standing position; that there was an abrasion between his eyes, and a bruise on one side of his head; and his physician testified that he was subject to epileptic fits, and that the entrance into the bath in the then condition of the insured would be likely to result in an epileptic fit, and that the blow that caused the abrasion and bruise was not sufficient to have caused death—it was held, under the exception in the policy that insurance should not extend to injury happening directly or indirectly in consequence of disease, or which might have been caused wholly or in part by bodily infirmities or disease existing prior or subsequent to the date of the contract, that in view of all the circumstances of the case there was evidence that the deceased came to his death through other causes than external, violent, and accidental means, and that there could be no recovery. Tennant v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 31 Fed. Rep. 322.

Death from Disease "Accelerated by Accident."—Where the policy excepted death or injury arising from disease, "although accelerated by accident," and it appeared that the insured had suffered from kidney disease, but had not been troubled therewith for a considerable time, and after an accident the disease returned and the insured died within three months, it was held that the insurer was not liable, as the death was within the exception as to disease accelerated by accident. Anderson v. Scottish Acc. Ins. Co., 27 Scot. L. R. 20; McKechnie's Trustees v. Scottish Acc. Ins. Co., 17 Sess. Cas. (Scotland) 6.

Temporary Fainting Spell Not Disease.—In Manufacturers' Acc. Indemnity Co. v. Dorgan, 58 Fed. Rep. 945, the United States Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, in Exceptions to Special Diseases.—Where responsibility as to certain specified diseases is excluded by the policy, the insurer has been held still responsible where the disease is the direct, immediate, and natural consequence of the accident,¹ or where the accident is the true cause of death or injury and the disease but the occasion.²

k. SURGICAL OPERATION OR MEDICAL TREATMENT.—Policies commonly contain an exception that insurance shall not extend to any death or disability which may have been caused wholly or in part by surgical operation or medical treatment for disease. This exception has been held not to exclude cases where the surgical operation was necessary as the natural and fairly to be expected consequence of the accidental wound or injury.³ But where the insured, while suffering from disease, dies through a mistake in medical treatment, as from taking an overdose, this has been held to be within the exception, and not covered by the policy.⁴

l. INTOXICATION.—Where the policy excepts death or injury happening while the insured was intoxicated, or in consequence of his having been under the influence of intoxicating liquors, the exception applies to prevent a recovery whether the condition of the insured was the cause of the injury or not.⁵

considering whether, if the insured fell into a stream and was drowned during a fit of vertigo or faintness, an exception as to "disease or bodily infirmities" applied, said: "In a broad generic sense any temporary trouble by reason of which a man loses consciousness is a disease. It is a condition of the body not normal, and produced by the imperfect working of some function; but as the imperfect working is not permanent, and the body returns at once, or in a short period of time, to its normal condition, it does not rise to the dignity of a disease. A fainting spell produced by indigestion or by lack of proper food for a number of hours, or from any other cause which would not indicate any disease in the body but would show a mere temporary disturbance or enfeeblement, would not come within the meaning of the words 'disease and bodily infirmity' as used in this policy."

Insanity is not included in the words "bodily infirmities or disease." Accident Ins. Co. v. Crandal, 120 U. S. 532.

1. Hernia.—Where the insured died from hernia, the direct consequence of an accident, the insurer was held liable, although this was one of the diseases excepted by name in the policy. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Murray, 16 Colo. 296.

So where by one of the conditions of a policy of insurance against accidental death or injury it was provided that the policy insured against cuts, stabs, concussions, etc., etc., "when accidentally occurring from material and external cause where such accidental injury is the direct and sole cause of death to the insured, or disability to follow his avocations," and then followed this exception: "but it does not insure against death or disability arising from rheumatism, gout, hernia, erysipelas, or any other disease or cause arising within the system of the insured before, or at the time, or following such accidental injury, whether causing death or disability directly or jointly with such accidental injury,"—it was held that death from hernia caused solely and directly by external violence, followed by a surgical operation performed for the purpose of relieving the patient, is not within the above exception. Fitton v. Accidental Death Ins. Co., 17 C. B. N. S. 122, 112 E. C. L. 122.

Erysipelas.—But where the excepting clause, the same in other respects as that just quoted, contained instead of the words "any other disease or cause arising," the words "any other disease or secondary cause or causes arising," it was held that the insurer was not liable in case of the death of the insured by erysipelas following immediately and directly from an accidental wound. Smith v. Accident Ins. Co., L. R., 5 Exch. 302.

2. Accident Occasioned by Fits.—Where the policy provided against accidental injuries, the direct or sole cause of death, but excepted "death arising from fits * * * or any disease whatsoever arising before or at the time or following such accidental injury, whether consequent upon such accidental injury or not, and whether causing such death directly or jointly with such accidental injury," and it appeared that the insured while at a railway station was seized with a fit and fell forward off the platform across the railway, when an engine passed over his body and killed him, it was held that the death of the insured was caused by an accident within the meaning of the policy, and that the insurers were liable, the only question being whether death was due to the accident or to the fit. Lawrence v. Accidental Ins. Co., 7 Q. B. Div. 216.

3. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Murray, 16 Colo. 296.

4. Bayless v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 14 Blatchf. (U. S.) 145. In this case the insured while ill had opium prescribed by his attending physician. He accidentally took an overdose, in consequence of which he died.

5. Shader v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 66 N. Y. 441, 23 Am. Rep. 65, 5 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 643; Standard L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Jones, 94 Ala. 434.

It seems that the clause covers injuries

The phrase "under the influence of intoxicating liquors" means such influence as disturbs the quiet, equitable action of a man's faculties,¹ and has been said to be equivalent in this connection to the word "intoxicated."²

Evidence of Intoxication.—Evidence that the insured was intoxicated when last seen alive, his body having been found after the expiration of some weeks, is not evidence of intoxication at the time of the injury.³ Nor is testimony of a physician who attended the insured at a hospital, that he smelled liquor in the insured's breath, admissible, when it is uncertain how long a time elapsed between the injury and the time when he reached the hospital.⁴ The question of intoxication seems to be for the jury.⁵

m. LIFTING OR OVER-EXERTION.—When the exception is that no claim shall be made where injury is caused by lifting or over-exertion, the lifting or over-exertion which is intended by this exception is such as is voluntary and deliberate, and not that exertion put forth in an emergency, as where the insured was lifting a heavy post which slipped unexpectedly and subjected him to a very severe strain.⁶

n. GYMNASTIC OR ATHLETIC EXERCISE.—A proviso against liability for injuries caused by taking part in any gymnastics does not exempt the company from liability where insured was drowned while bathing.⁷

o. VIOLATION OF LAW.—Accident insurance policies usually contain a provision whereby the insurance is not to extend to injuries caused by, or while, or in consequence of, violating the law.⁸

Causal Connection between Violation and Injury.—The authorities agree that in received by the insured in consequence of his having previously been under the influence of liquor. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Jones, 94 Ala. 434.

Death in Consequence of Drunkenness.—Death or injury happening while the insured is under the influence of liquors means death or injury causing death, and covers a case where the insured is sober when he dies. Mair v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 37 L. T. N. S. 356.

1. Mair v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 37 L. T. N. S. 356. To be under the influence of intoxicating liquors within the meaning of an accident policy, the insured must have drunk enough to disturb the action of the physical and mental faculties so that they are no longer in their natural or normal condition. Shader v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 5 Thomp. & C. (N. Y.) 643.

2. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Jones, 94 Ala. 434.

Intoxication is a synonym of "inebriety," "drunkenness"—implying or evidenced by undue and abnormal excitation of the passions and feelings, or the impairment of the capacity to think and act correctly and efficiently. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Jones, 94 Ala. 434.

Where there was evidence that the deceased left home sober with two friends, and they drank from a quart bottle of whiskey, of which some was left when they returned; that the deceased then drank two glasses of wine, and soon after was injured by slipping into a hole, and it appeared that those in whose company he was considered him sober, it was held that the evidence did not show that the deceased was injured while under the influence of intoxicating liquors. Prader v. National Masonic Acc. Assoc. (Iowa, 1895), 63 N. W. Rep. 601.

The strain caused by lifting a heavy burden may be an injury from "external and material cause." See Martin v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 1 F. & F. 505; Pennington v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co., 85 Iowa 468.

7. Knickerbocker Casualty Ins. Co. v. Jordan, 7 Cinc. L. Bull. (Ohio) 71.

8. Must be Violation of Criminal Law.—It is generally laid down that the unlawful act committed must be criminal, and not a mere violation of a civil right, or the infraction of a law not criminal. Insurance Co. v. Bennett, 90 Tenn. 256. See Cluff v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co., 13 Allen (Mass.) 308; Bradley v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co., 45 N. Y. 422; Adams v. Cowles, 95 Mo. 506.

But the contrary has been held so far as it relates to the violation of a positive rule of civil law, which proximately leads to the injury when it is such an act as increases the risk and naturally leads to the injury. Bloom v. Franklin L. Ins. Co., 97 Ind. 478.

Illustration—Fornication.—The fact that at the time the insured was killed by a pistol-shot through the heart he was living with a woman in a state of fornication, there being no proof that the fornication was of such notoriety as to constitute a violation of the criminal laws, does not bring the case within the exception. Insurance Co. v. Bennett, 90 Tenn. 256.

order to bring the case within this exception there must be a causal connection between violation of law and injury received.¹ Where the policy excepts injuries "caused by" violation of law, it seems that the violation of law must be the proximate cause of the accident.² But where the policy excludes liability for injuries received while engaged in or in consequence of an unlawful act, although the causal connection must exist even when the accident happens while the insured is actually committing an unlawful act, yet it is sufficient that the violation of law is a conditional or remote cause of the injury.³

Circumstances Forming One Continuous Transaction — Horse-racing. — Where the insured was killed while driving in a horse-race, in consequence of a collision, in a state where horse-racing was a misdemeanor, the jury found that when the sulky of the deceased came into collision with the sulky of G. the deceased jumped to the ground and was clear from the sulky, harness, and reins, upright and uninjured, and spoke to his horse to stop, and then started forward to get hold of the lines to stop him, and in that attempt was killed. It was held that the death of the insured was due to a violation of law, and there could be no recovery; that the leap from the sulky, and securing the lines, and the subsequent fall and injury to the insured were so close and immediate in relation to his racing, and all so manifestly a part of one continuous transaction, that it could not be said that there was any new influence subsequent to the violation of law to which the disaster should be attributed. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Seaver, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 531. In delivering the opinion of the court in this case Miller, J., said: "The company in protecting themselves against accident or death caused by violation of law acted upon a wise and prudent estimate of the dangers to the person generally connected with such violation. * * * It was against this general species of danger attending nearly all infractions of the law that the company sought to protect itself by the clause of the policy in question, and of this class was the reckless driving of Gilmore."

"While Engaged in or in Consequence of Unlawful Act" — Meaning of the Phrase. — In Insurance Co. v. Bennett, 90 Tenn. 256, the court, by Snodgrass, J., said: "The provision of the policy excluding liability for injury received by the insured while committing an unlawful act refers to such injury as may happen as the necessary or natural consequences of the act—as its probable and to be anticipated consequences, and the reference to injuries received 'in consequence of any unlawful act' is to those injuries which rise out of or flow naturally from the act committed as its effect or resulting consequence."

In Duran v. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co., 63 Vt. 437, the court, by Thompson, J., said, in reference to this provision in an accident insurance policy: "The provision quoted from the policy excluded liability from any injury of which a violation of law was the cause or the condition producing it. It also expressly provides exemption from liability where violation of law is either the proximate or remote cause or condition producing the injury."

Violation of Sabbath Law. — In accordance with these principles it has been held that the insured could not recover for injury received by slipping upon a frozen, ploughed field, across which he was returning home from a combined hunting and visiting expedition, for that he was in violation of law, both as to hunting and traveling on the Sabbath. Duran v. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co., 63 Vt. 437.

Where, however, the insured, who had been hunting on Sunday, was killed by an accident which happened at a house to which he had gone some hours after he had stopped hunting, and some miles from the place where he had been engaged in this occupation, it was held that the connection between the violation of law and the accident was too remote to prevent a recovery. Prader v. National Masonic Acc. Assoc. (Iowa, 1895), 63 N. W. Rep. 601.

Intoxication in Public Highway. — The fact that at the time of the accident, through which the plaintiff was injured, he was in a public highway, in a public place, in a state of intoxication, contrary to the criminal statute, does not show any causative connection between the act which constituted the violation of law and the injury, and consequently an answer alleging such fact is bad. National Benefit Assoc. v. Bowman, 110 Ind. 355.

Deserter Shot in Attempt to Arrest Him. — Where the insured, a deserter from the United States army, was shot and killed by a deputy sheriff, at a house where the officer went to arrest him, and the evidence was conflicting as to whether the officer knew the insured and demanded his surrender and shot him in self-defense, or whether the shooting was reckless and the officer did not

While Violating the Law.—Where the policy merely excepts injuries received while violating the law, the exception has been held not to apply unless the insured was at the instant of receiving the injury in the act of violating the law.¹

Proof beyond Reasonable Doubt Not Required.—Proof of the criminal act beyond a reasonable doubt is not required in order to warrant a verdict and decision in support of the exception. A preponderance of evidence, as in other civil cases, is sufficient.²

p. ASSAULT PROVOKED BY QUARRELLING.—Where the policy excludes liability for death from assault provoked by quarrelling, it has been held that the death of the insured does not fall within the exception unless it occurred as the result of a quarrel provoked by himself, and of such a serious nature that he might reasonably have expected that anger would be aroused and violence inflicted. It is not every trivial dispute that is a quarrel within the meaning of this clause.³

q. INJURIES RECEIVED WHILE FIGHTING.—Where the policy excepts injuries received while fighting, it has been held that this exception covers only fighting caused wholly or in part by the insured as the wrongdoer, and not an unprovoked or unwilling conflict in which the insured takes part in self-defense.⁴ But cases are found giving the exception an interpretation more favorable to the insurer.⁵

know the deceased, it was held that it could not be declared as a matter of law that the insured was engaged in an unlawful act, or was shot in consequence thereof, and that this was a question for the jury. Utter v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 545, 8 Am. St. Rep. 913.

Insured Shot when Leaving Bawdy-house.—Where it appeared that the insured was shot after leaving a house of ill-fame, where he had been for an immoral purpose, and while carrying concealed weapons in violation of law, the insurer is liable unless the shooting was in a legal sense caused by the visit to the bawdy-house or by the carrying of concealed weapons. Jones v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc. (Iowa, 1894), 61 N. W. Rep. 485.

1. Where the insured, in pursuance of a prearranged plot to rob the state treasury, entered that institution, drew a revolver upon the treasurer and demanded and received certain moneys from him, and was shot by a watchman while making his escape from the building, it was held that his death did not take place while violating the law; upon the ground that his act in obtaining money had been accomplished, and that he was merely escaping from the building when he was shot. Griffin v. Western Mut. Ben. Assoc., 20 Neb. 620, 57 Am. Rep. 848. This decision may be doubted as hardly in accord with the weight of authority, especially when it is considered that at the time the insured was killed he was in the act of carrying away property which he had obtained by robbery.

4. Gresham v. Equitable Acc. Ins. Co., 87 Ga. 497. In this case it was held that where the insured and his antagonist willingly engaged in a personal encounter and the insured was killed, the insurer was not liable. Bleckley, C. J., delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It is not every fight in or from which a mortal injury might be received by the insured, which could be regarded as the cause of the injury or of death resulting therefrom. A faultless and unwilling conflict by the insured, one which he neither provoked nor invited, one which he did not accept when formally or informally tendered, one in which he was forced to engage for self-defense alone and from which he withdrew, or endeavored in good faith to withdraw, when his defense was accomplished, ought not to and would not be treated as a causative fight on his part within the meaning and intent of the policy, but would be regarded as right and proper resistance to aggressive or offensive violence. To protect his life from destruction or his person from injury might be as much a matter of duty to the insurance company as of interest to himself."

Where the insured, who was unarmed, was shot while engaging in an altercation, it was held that his death was accidental, and not within the exception against death from duelling or fighting. Robinson v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 68 Fed. Rep. 825.

5. The fact that the insured engaged in a fight, though he himself was not the assault-

7. INTENTIONAL INJURIES.—It has been seen that, in the absence of special provisions in the policy, injuries inflicted on the insured intentionally by other parties have been generally held to be accidental, and to render the insurer liable.¹ Most policies, however, contain an exception in case of intentional injuries inflicted by the insured or by any other person.

Intentional Injury Inflicted by Another.—An intentional injury inflicted by another person is an injury which such other person intentionally inflicts, whether the insured intends to have it inflicted or draws it upon himself;² but the intention must be directed against the insured, and not against another or against a class of individuals.³ And it has been held that where death ensues from the injury, it is necessary that the person inflicting the injury should have had the intent to kill.⁴

Death Inflicted by Insane Person.—It seems that the fact that the insured was killed by an insane person does not avoid the policy, since death so inflicted cannot be said to be intentional.⁵ But in order to render an injury intentional, by reason of the insanity of the person who inflicts it, there must be such a diseased and deranged condition of the mind as to render the person incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong in relation to the particular act with which he is charged.⁶ The burden is upon one seeking to recover upon the policy to establish insanity, as taking the case out of the exception as to intentional injury.⁷

Intentional Injuries Inflicted by Insured.—Where the policy excepts death from

ing party, brings his injury clearly within the meaning of the terms of the policy as excluding injuries so received from its operation and insurance as being caused by fighting. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc. v. Millard, 43 Ill. App. 148.

In Hutchcraft v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 87 Ky. 300, 12 Am. St. Rep. 484, the court, by Bennett, J., said: "We think, however, that said clause was intended to apply to such injuries by other persons as are intentionally directed against the insured, and not to such injuries as the insured may receive at the hands of third persons who are attempting to do mischief generally, or who are attempting to injure any particular individual, other than the insured, or class of individuals, or any kind of property; for in such cases it cannot be said that the injuring was intentionally aimed directly and individually at the insured."

In Utter v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 545, 8 Am. St. Rep. 913, Morse, J., speaking for the court, said: "It seems to me that the design intended by the terms of the policy must be the design that intended the actual result accomplished, and not the design of the act itself, which act resulted in the killing of one contrary to the design of the act."

Evidence of Intention—Threat.—The fact that the person by whom the insured is alleged to have been killed armed himself a short time before the killing, and stated that he was going home, and that if he found the insured he was going to kill him, is admissible as tending to show both that he killed the insured and that he did it intentionally. *Standard L., etc., Ins. Rep. 651, and considered that the question of insanity in this connection was to be determined by the same rule as in criminal law, and that an irresistible insane impulse was not sufficient.

Record of Criminal Conviction.—Where the plaintiff offers evidence tending to show that the person who is alleged to have inflicted the intentional injuries was not mentally responsible, the defendant cannot, for the purpose of refuting the evidence, introduce the record of the criminal conviction of such person for the assault upon the insured. Marceau v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 101 Cal. 338.

intentional injuries inflicted by the insured, the condition is broken if the insured intentionally injures himself by the infliction of bodily wounds from which he dies.¹

3. Stipulations as to Notice and Preliminary Proof, Time of Instituting Suit, Arbitration.—a. NOTICE AND PROOF OF INJURY.—(1) In General.—Condition Precedent.—Most of the policies provide that notice of the injury, on account of which indemnity is claimed, together with full particulars of the same, shall be given to the company within a specified time, and compliance with this provision is generally regarded as a condition precedent to the enforcement of the policy.²

When Compliance Impossible.—At the same time, where the circumstances of the accident were such as to render it impossible to comply with the condition, giving the notice within a reasonable time after it became possible to do so has been held sufficient.³ And where by the terms of the policy the beneficiary was required to give notice of the death within ten days after the accident causing it, and death did not occur within that time, the condition was held to be unreasonable and invalid.⁴

Notice in Case of Disability.—No Disablement at the Time, but Death ensues.—And where the policy stipulated for notice only in the event of disability, it was held that notice was not called for where the accident did not disable the insured at the time from working, although it afterwards resulted in death.⁵

Immediate Notice.—In some of the policies it is stipulated that immediate notice of the injury shall be given. The word "immediate" in such cases is not to be construed literally, but the notice must be given within a reasonable time, according to the circumstances of the particular case.⁶

In Heywood v. Maine Mut. Acc. Assoc., 85 Me. 289, it was held that a policy providing that failure to give notice of the injury for the period of ten days after it is received will bar all claim under the policy, is valid; and when such stipulation is neither complied with nor waived there can be no recovery on the policy.

But in Stoneham v. Ocean, etc., General Acc. Ins. Co., 19 Q. B. Div. 237, the provision as to notice was construed to be not a condition precedent to recovery.

3. Tripp v. Provident Fund Soc., 3 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 445, affirmed in 140 N. Y. 23. In this case the provision in regard to notice was as follows: "Notice of any accidental injury for which claim is to be made under this certificate shall be given in writing, addressed to the president of the society at New York, stating the full name, occupation, and address of the injured member with full particulars of the accident and injury, and failure to give such written notice within ten days from the date of either injury or death shall invalidate any and all claims under this certificate." The insured's place of business was in Park Place, New York City, and he was killed August 22, 1891, in what is known as the Park Place disaster. His body was taken from the ruins on the morning of August 25th following. Notice of the injury and death in the form required as above was served the second day of September following. It was held that as a notification on August 22d was an impossible thing under the circumstances, the legal effect of the condition was that notice served within ten days after August 25th was within the time required, and the service made on September 2d, entitled the plaintiff to recovery. 6. "Immediate" Notice Means Reasonable Notice.—Railway Pass. Assur. Co. v. Burwell, 44 Ind. 460. In this case, notice given six days after the alleged injury, which happened in the city where the policy was issued and where the company had a resident agent, was held to be too late, no excuse being shown for the delay.

In McFarland v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 124 Mo. 204, it was held that, under a policy requiring immediate notice of the death of the insured and providing that it should be given by letter, notice given within ten days after the death was held sufficient. In this case the court said: "The condition requires that immediate written notice shall be given. The word 'immediate' cannot be construed literally without in many cases causing a forfeiture. It is frequently impossible, under the cir-

And What is a Reasonable Time under all the facts and circumstances of the case is a question for the jury, unless the delay has been so great that the court may rule it as a question of law.¹

Examination of Body.—A provision in the policy that the medical adviser of the company shall be allowed to examine the person or body of the insured, in respect to any alleged injury or cause of death, when and as often as he may require on behalf of the company, and in the event of any post-mortem examination by or on the part of the insured's representatives or beneficiaries, the company shall be afforded opportunity to attend and participate, merely gives the right to scrutinize and inspect the body before burial, and does not authorize an exhumation or dissection of the body against the wishes of the surviving relatives.²

Dissecting Body.—Nor will the circumstance that the policy does not extend to accidental injuries or death resulting from or caused directly or indirectly, wholly or in part, by disease, give the company the right to dissect the body in the hope of finding some trace of disease which might, under the provision stated, exempt it from liability.³

Notice to Agent—Misstatement of Date—Estoppel.—Where the agent of the company, upon receiving from the insured verbal notice of the accident and the claim

cumstances of the accident or death, to give immediate notice. This condition subsequent must be liberally construed in favor of the beneficiary. So it has been uniformly held that this and similar words should be construed to mean within a reasonable time."

In People's Mut. Acc. Assoc. v. Smith, 126 Pa. St. 317, a person, insured under a policy requiring immediate notice, whose eye was injured on September 4th, though the injury was not considered dangerous until some days afterward, was held, under the facts and circumstances of the case, to have complied with the provision as to notice by notifying the company on October 1st.

In Kentzler v. American Mut. Acc. Assoc., 88 Wis. 589, the policy stipulated that, in the event of injury or death, notice of the claim should be given to the company immediately after the accident, and positive proof of death should be furnished within six months thereafter. The insured, a tugboat engineer, disappeared on November 9, 1892, and his body was found in the water near the boat on April 19th of the following year, and notice of death was given the 26th of the following month, and the proofs on the 12th of July following. This was held to be a reasonable compliance with the requirement.

Notice "as Soon as Possible."—The expression "as soon as possible," in connection with giving notice, is not to be taken literally, but means with due diligence, or without unnecessary procrastination or delay, under all the circumstances of the case. Provident L. Ins., etc., Co. v. Baum, 29 Ind. 236; Provident L. Ins., etc., Co. v. Martin, 32 Md. 310.

In American Acc. Ins. Co. v. Norment, 91 Tenn. 1, the policy provided that failure to give immediate written notice to the company at its home office should invalidate the policy. The beneficiary called at the office of the local agent to notify him of the injury on account of which the claim was made, and left word with his clerk, whereupon the agent notified the home office in writing. The home office thereupon had the case inquired into by its agent, and its physician attended the post-mortem examination of the insured. The notice to the local agent was given in May, and although the accident occurred in March it did not until April appear to be serious. It was held to be proper to submit to the jury the question whether written notice had been given within a reasonable time.

Compare Accident Ins. Co. of North America v. Young, 20 Duval (Montreal) 281, overruling 6 Montreal Super. Ct. 3.

In McFarland v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc. (Mo., 1894), 27 S. W. Rep. 436, it was held that where the only dispute as to the facts showing whether reasonable notice of the insured's death has been given to the company as required by the terms of the policy, is whether a letter containing the notice was sent, it is a question for the jury whether the notice was sent and for the court whether it was reasonable; and the fact that the letter was mailed, duly stamped, and addressed, is evidence that the person to whom it was sent received it.

2. Wehle v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 11 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 36.

In American Employers' Liability Ins. Co. v. Barr, 68 Fed. Rep. 873, there was a similar provision in the policy. No request was made for an examination until some weeks after the insured was buried, when a request was made, not to the beneficiary, but to the widow of the insured, which was refused. It was held that this constituted no defense to an action by the beneficiary. See also Ballantine v. Employers' Ins. Co. (Scot. Ct. of Sess., 1894), 31 Scot. L. R. 230.

for indemnity, undertakes to make out the necessary notice and proofs, and therein misstates the date of the accident, the company may not take advantage of such misstatement if the proofs are signed by the insured without any improper motive, and by the advice of the agent.¹

Indemnity Payable at Designated Place—Effect upon Place of Notice.—A provision that any claim for indemnity is payable at the company's office in a certain city, or (at the company's option) at the general agency through which the policy was issued, is not a requirement that notice and proofs of loss shall be made at the city named.²

(2) Waiver—Failure to Give Notice.—Waiver by the company of the condition in regard to the time of serving notice and proofs of the injury may be made by acts and conduct indicating an intention to waive such condition, occurring subsequent to the breach thereof, although there is no new consideration, and although there be no technical estoppel.³

Refusal of Agent to Recognize Claim.—The refusal by a general agent to recognize the insured's claim to indemnity constitutes a waiver of compliance with the conditions as to preliminary notice and proof.⁴

Irregularities in Notice—Retaining Notice and Proofs without Objection.—The receipt and retention by the company of informal notice and proofs, without objection, or demand for further or more definite notice and proofs, constitutes a waiver of objections as to their regularity.⁵

Acting upon Verbal Notice—Waiver of Written Notice.—Where the company, after verbal notice of the injury, sends its medical director to examine the condition of the injury, it must be considered to have waived the requirements of written notice.⁶

b. TIME OF INSTITUTING SUIT.—The policies generally provide that no suit in law or equity shall be maintained thereon unless the same is instituted within a specified time after the happening of the alleged injury—usually one year; and also that suit may not be instituted until the expiration of a certain period, usually ninety days, after the claimant has furnished proof of the injury as pointed out in the policy. It is undoubtedly competent for the parties to thus limit the time for bringing suit.⁷

3. Reynolds v. Equitable Acc. Assoc. (Supreme Ct.), 17 N. Y. St. Rep. 337; Trippe v. Provident Fund Soc., 140 N. Y. 23. In this latter case it was held that the company waived the condition requiring notice within ten days after the injury, by retaining, without objection, a notice of the accidental death of the insured, given more than ten days after that event, and a subsequent notice from the administrator of the insured; by furnishing necessary blanks for proofs of loss; by retaining, without objection, the proofs made in compliance with the terms of the policy; and by afterward calling for and receiving additional information.

Refusing to Pay Policy on Other Grounds.—Where, on receiving proofs of the injury, the company examined the same, and refused to pay the policy on other grounds than the omission to give the required notice, the condition in regard to notice was deemed waived. Unthank v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 4 Biss. (U. S.) 357. See also Sheanon v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co., 83 Wis. 507.

4. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Harvey, 82 Va. 949. In this case it was further held that a clause in the policy denying the right of the insured to claim "a waiver by reason of any acts of any agent, unless such waiver is specially authorized in writing over the signature of the president or secretary of the company," does not include those conditions that are to be performed after a loss occurs, such as giving notice and proofs.

A reply by the general active officer of a mutual benefit association, to the request of a member for blanks in order to make notice and proofs of his injury and disability, that it would be useless for the member to do so, as his claim would be rejected, constitutes a waiver on the part of the association of the member's obligation to present notice and proofs. Hutchinson v. Supreme Tent, etc., 68 Hun (N. Y.) 355.

When the Time Begins to Run.—This limitation in the policy against death resulting from accident is held to begin to run from the death of the insured, and not from the time when the right of action accrues.¹ This ruling is in accordance with the decisions in some of the states upon similar limitations in other kinds of insurance.² In other jurisdictions, while the question has not arisen in regard to accident insurance, yet it is held in other classes of insurance that under a policy limiting the time for bringing an action upon it and requiring the performance of conditions precedent, which must occupy a portion of that time, the limitation does not commence to run until the right of action accrues.³

When the Time Begins to Run against Beneficiary in Case of Death of Insured.—And it is held that in case the insured dies from the injury, the beneficiary has the full time from that event in which to bring suit, without regard to the time of the original injury, as until then such party has suffered no injury within the meaning of the policy, and therefore has no right of action.⁴

soc., 94 Mich. 266, where the policy provided that no suit should be brought or arbitration required to recover any sum unless commenced within one year after the injury, and more than five months elapsed after the insured was fully advised that the company refused to pay or arbitrate the claim before the expiration of the year, it was held that a suit thereafter brought was barred by the limitation, unless it had been waived by the company. The court cites McIntyre v. Michigan State Ins. Co., 52 Mich. 189; Gould v. Dwelling-house Ins. Co., 90 Mich. 302; Voorheis v. People's Mut. Ben. Soc., 91 Mich. 469; *Steele v. German Ins. Mutual Insurance—When Cause of Action Complete.—In Mutual Acc., etc., Assoc. v. Kayser, 14 W. N. C. (Pa.) 86, the policy in a mutual insurance company covenanted to pay the assured in case of injury by accident a stipulated sum for every week he might be disabled from following his usual occupation, not exceeding ten weeks. A by-law of the association provided that if any suit was brought "after the expiration of six months next after the loss shall have occurred, the lapse of time shall be deemed conclusive against the validity of the claim." The assured sustained an accident which for more than ten weeks disabled him from working. This suit was instituted more than six months after the date of the accident, and less than six months after the expiration of ten weeks after the accident. An instruction that the limitation of six months named in the by-law did not begin to run until the cause of action was complete, which was not until the expiration of ten weeks after the happening of the accident, and that the action therefore was brought within six months after the loss occurred within the meaning of the by-law, was sustained. In this case it was further held that in a mutual insurance company the policy constitutes an agreement between the parties, and a by-law in force at the time of the policy limiting the right of action to six months after the loss occurs is not a bar to a member's suit upon his policy brought for that period, unless such by-law is made a part of the policy.

4. Death of Insured—Time in which Beneficiary must Bring Suit.—Cooper v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 132 N. Y. 334. In this case provisions were made in the policy for two different persons who, upon the happening of the events named, would have a right of action against the company. One provision was in favor of the insured, who was entitled to recover during his lifetime the amount provided for his disability resulting from the accidental injury sustained; the other was in favor of his wife, which was for the injuries which she would suffer by reason of his death resulting from such accident. The court said: "The injury received by Cooper did not injure the plaintiff or give her a right of action until death ensued. So far as she is concerned the infliction of the wound is but the beginning, and the death is the completion, of the injury. Her suit must be 'commenced within one year from the time of the alleged accidental injury'; in other words, within one year from the time of the injury to her, which was the death of her husband as the result of the accident. As to Cooper, he suffered from the date of the wound. His right of indemnity dates from that event, and it is possible that his right to maintain an action would not continue after the expiration of a year from that date. But as to the plaintiff, it appears to us that the construction already indicated was intended and should be given to the certificate. As thus construed the various clauses of the contract are rendered harmonious, and the different beneficiaries thereunder are given the same period of limitation

Failure to Cite Defendant until Expiration of Time Specified.—In one instance the action was held to be seasonably brought where the petition was filed and a non-resident notice served on the defendant within the time limited by the policy for bringing the action, although citation was not served upon the defendant's agent until after the expiration of such time.¹

c. ARBITRATION.—Where the policy stipulates for the payment of a certain sum in the event of injury, and contains a proviso that "no suit or proceeding at law or in equity shall be brought to recover any sum herein, unless the same has been first referred to arbitration" in the manner pointed out, such arbitration is not a condition precedent to a right of action upon the policy.² But it seems that if the promise is to pay not a definitely stated amount, but the amount which may be awarded by the arbitrators, then the provision for arbitration will be a condition precedent to the right to bring an action for an injury within the policy.³

VI. PROXIMATE CAUSE.—It has been held uniformly and independently of special provisions inserted in the policy, that an accident, in order to entitle the insured to recovery for injuries resulting therefrom, must be the proximate cause of such injuries.⁴ The question of proximate cause has usually arisen within which to bring actions to establish their claims."

In the lower court (Cooper v. U. S. Mutual Acc. Assoc., 57 Hun (N. Y.) 407) it was held that the words "the time of the alleged injury" meant when the proofs were accepted and the claim in a condition to be sued, and that the beneficiary had twelve months to bring suit after the right of action was complete. It will be observed that the view of the lower court is directly opposed to that taken by the court in the case in note 1 immediately preceding.

1. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Askew (Tex. Civ. App., 1895), 32 S. W. Rep. 31.

2. When Submission to Arbitration Not Condition Precedent.—Badenfeld v. Massachusetts Mut. Acc. Assoc., 154 Mass. 77. Here the court said: "The promise is not to pay the award, but to pay the sum named, and the proviso does not make the award a condition precedent to the promise to pay, but a mode of enforcing that promise. It is well settled that such an agreement is no bar to an action on the promise." Citing Reed v. Washington F., etc., Ins. Co., 138 Mass. 572.

In Kinney v. Baltimore, etc., Employees' Rel. Assoc., 35 W. Va. 385, it was held that a provision in an insurance contract that all differences arising under it should be submitted to arbitrators thereafter to be chosen would not prevent a party from maintaining a suit in the first instance in a court to enforce his rights under the policy. See also Smith v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acc. Assoc., 51 Fed. Rep. 520; Whitney v. National Masonic Acc. Assoc., 52 Minn. 378; Prader v. National Masonic Acc. Assoc. (Iowa, 1895), 63 N. W. Rep. 60r.

Mutual Benefit Societies.—As to the power of mutual benefit societies to limit the right of members to sue, see Bauer v. Samson Lodge Knights of Pythias, 102 Ind. 262; McMahon v. Supreme Council, 54 Mo. App. 468; and the title BENEFICIAL OR BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATIONS, where the subject will be fully discussed.

3. When Submission to Arbitration a Condition Precedent.—Braunstein v. Accidental Death Ins. Co., 1 B. & S. 782, 101 E. C. L. 782. In this case there was a condition indorsed on the policy, that in the event of differences of opinion as to the amount of compensation payable in any case the question should be referred to arbitration in the manner pointed out in the condition, and the award made on such arbitration was to be taken as a final settlement of the question and might be made a rule of court. It was held that a reference to arbitration in the manner prescribed was rendered a condition precedent to bringing an action for an injury within the policy. The court cites and relies upon Scott v. Avery, 5 H. L. Cas. 811.

See, generally, the title ARBITRATION AND AWARD.

4. Suicide of Person Insane from Accident.—Where after an accident the insured became insane, and while in that state took his own life, it has been held that the accident and the death were too remotely connected to allow of a recovery under a policy of accident insurance. Harris v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 8 Alb. L. J. 86.

So under a policy of life insurance it has been held that death taking place under the same circumstances was due not to accident, but to suicide. Streeter v. Western Union Mut. L., etc., Soc., 65 Mich. 199, 8 Am. St. Rep. 882.

Death Following Accidental Runaway.—In McGlinchey v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 80 Me. 251, 6 Am. St. Rep. 190, the circumstances of the death of the insured were these: The insured was driving in a carriage along the principal thoroughfare of the place of his residence, when his horse became frightened at an unsightly object on the street and suddenly began to run, first jumping to the side of the way and nearly colliding with other teams, and ran a considerable distance before he was brought under control. There was no collision, nor was the carriage upset or any one thrown therefrom, but immediately in cases where the accident was complicated with disease, or under clauses exempting the insurer from liability in certain specified cases, and the authorities have already been considered under their appropriate heads.¹

VII. AGENTS—1. Misstatements in Application.—Where the agent of an insurance company authorized to procure applications, either by his direction or his direct act, makes out an application incorrectly, notwithstanding all the facts are correctly stated to him by the applicant, the error is chargeable to the insurer, and not to the insured.² And a stipulation that the agent shall be considered in filling out the application as the agent of the insured will not relieve the company or change the rule.³

2. Power of Agent to Waive Conditions and Forfeitures.—Within the apparent scope of his authority, the acts and assurances of the agent of an insurance company are the acts and assurances of the company;⁴ consequently, where the agent makes misrepresentations to the applicant for insurance, as to the scope of the policy, or the risks covered by it, it has been held that the com-afterwards the insured experienced great sickness and pain, and going directly to his house, died in about an hour from the moment of the accident. He was in good health on that morning before the accident, and there was no suggestion that he was not a person of generally sound and strong constitution. The court, by Peters, C.J., said: "We think, on these facts, that the common judgment of men would instinctively declare, irrespective of the refinements that are often indulged in over primary and secondary causes, that here was a plain accident causing death, and that the company should pay the sum promised in the policy."

1. See supra, this title, Death Caused by Disease; Accidental Injuries in General.

2. Agent's Misstatements in Application.—The principle of the text has been applied where the insured stated truthfully the amount of compensation which he received from his employer, and the agent misstated this amount in filling out the application. Howe v. Provident Fund Soc., 7 Ind. App. 586; where the agent misstated the age of the applicant, Brink v. Guaranty Mut. Acc. Assoc. (Supreme Ct.), 28 N. Y. St. Rep. 921; where the agent, with knowledge of the facts, misstated the occupation of the applicant, Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Snowden, 12 U. S. App. 704; 58 Fed. Rep. 342; New York Acc. Ins. Co. v. Clayton, 19 U. S. App. 304; Bushaw v. Women's Mut. Ins., etc., Co. (Supreme Ct.), 8 N. Y. Supp. 423. See Perrins v. Marine, etc., Travelers' Ins. Co., 2 El. & El. 324, 105 E. C. L. 324; and where the agent, with the knowledge of the secretary of the insurance company, inserted in the application a false statement that the applicant had no other insurance. Dailey v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acc. Assoc. (Mich., 1894), 57 N. W. Rep. 184.

Knowledge by Agent of False Statement of Applicant.—Where the local agent of an insurance company has actual knowledge of the falsity of a statement made by the insured in his application, and forwards the application upon which the policy is issued, the knowledge of the agent is the knowledge of the company, and the false statements will not avoid the contract. Follette v. Mutual Acc.

Assoc., 110 N. Car. 377, citing Eggleston v. Council Bluffs Ins. Co., 65 Iowa 308; Andes Ins. Co. v. Fish, 71 Ill. 620; Fishbeck v. Phenix Ins. Co., 54 Cal. 422; Hornthal v. Western Ins. Co., 88 N. Car. 73; Dupree v. Virginia Home Ins. Co., 92 N. Car. 417, 93 N. Car. 240; American Cent. Ins. Co. v. McCrea, 8 Lea (Tenn.) 513, 4 Am. Rep. 647; Mullin v. Vermont Mut. F. Ins. Co., 58 Vt. 113; Shafer v. Phoenix Ins. Co., 53 Wis. 361. See also Keystone Mut. Ben. Assoc. v. Jones, 72 Md. 363.

On the other hand it has been held that where an untrue statement was inserted in the application for membership in a benefit accident association, by the agent of the association, at the request of the applicant, it would be sufficient ground to defeat an action upon the certificate. Wilde v. Preferred Mut. Acc. Assoc. (Supreme Ct.), 14 N. Y. St. Rep. 365, citing Rowley v. Empire Ins. Co., 36 N. Y. 550; Mowry v. Rosendale, 74 N. Y. 360; Flynn v. Equitable L. Assur. Soc., 9 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 324.

Agents of Mutual Benefit Association.—The courts in general repudiate any distinction as to the effect of misstatements of agents in case of the agents of mutual benefit societies. Howe v. Provident Fund Society, 7 Ind. App. 586. See Kausal v. Minnesota Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Assoc., 31 Minn. 17, 47 Am. Rep. 776; Russell v. Detroit Mut. F. Ins. Co., 80 Mich. 407.

View that Policy cannot be Modified by Extrinsic Evidence.—The view that in an action at law upon an insurance policy, the rights of the parties must be determined by the contract of insurance, which cannot be altered or modified by extrinsic evidence of a different agreement to be established from the actual knowledge of the insurer or its agents, has been maintained. See Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Martin, 40 N. J. L. 568, where the authorities are extensively collected and examined. See also the title INSURANCE.

pany will be estopped to deny such representations;¹ but the authorities are not in accord as to the circumstances which demand an application of this principle.²

3. Knowledge of Agent Imputed to Insurer.—The knowledge of the agent is the knowledge of the insurer, hence the latter cannot avoid a policy upon the ground that the risk was taken in ignorance of material facts not referred thereto, if these facts were known to its agent.³

1. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Snowden, 12 U. S. App. 704; New York Acc. Ins. Co. v. Clayton, 19 U. S. App. 304; Henderson v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 65 Fed. Rep. 438; Brown v. Railway Pass. Assur. Co., 45 Mo. 221.

A representation of a general agent of an insurance company, that the risk included intentional injuries inflicted on the insured, waives a contrary proviso in the policy. Henderson v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 65 Fed. Rep. 438.

2. For a full discussion of the powers of insurance agents to waive conditions and forfeitures, see the title INSURANCE. The different views of the courts are illustrated by the following cases.

Proviso in Policy Limiting the Agent's Authority.—Where the policy stated that it would not cover accidents received while under the influence of intoxicating liquor, and also stated that no agent had power to alter or waive any of its terms or conditions, and the agent reported to the insured that the policy would cover an accident received while intoxicated, it was held that the expressed restriction in the policy was proper, and would be supported. Cook v. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 12. In this case the court followed Cleaver v. Traders' Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 527, 8 Am. St. Rep. 908, where it is declared that "when the policy of insurance contains an express limitation upon the power of the agent, such agent has no legal right to contract, as agent of the company, with the insured, so as to change the conditions of the policy, or to dispense with the performance of any essential requisite contained therein, either by parol or writing; and the holder of the policy is estopped by accepting the policy from setting up or relying upon powers in the agent in opposition to limitations and restrictions in the policy."

But where, although such a stipulation as to the power of agents is inserted in the policy, yet, owing to the particular circumstances of the case, certain terms of the policy may be properly susceptible of another than their apparent meaning, the stipulation will not prevent the agent from waiving or altering such terms as between the insured and the company.

As to the power of agents to waive stipulations inserted in policies with regard to notice and proof of injury, see supra, this title, Stipulations as to Notice and Preliminary Proof of Injury, Time of Instituting Suit, Arbitration. As to the power of agents to waive conditions as to payment, see supra, this title, Payment of Premiums.

Power of Agent Held Not to Extend to Abrogate Plain Provision of Policy.—Where the policy insured the holder while traveling on a public conveyance, and the agent told the applicant that the policy covered all risks during his trip, whether upon a conveyance or not, it was held that there could be no recovery where the insured was injured while stopping over at a town upon his route; that where the policy was perfectly plain and unambiguous in its terms, and where there was no evidence of fraud or concealment, the representations of the agent would not affect the contract. Fidelity, etc., Co. v. Teter, 136 Ind. 672.

Method of Waiver Provided in Policy.—Where the policy provided that nothing less than a distinct specific agreement, indorsed upon or attached to it, should be considered as a waiver of any printed or written condition or restriction contained in it, it was held that a local agent of the insurer could not waive any of the provisions of the policy, except in the manner thus provided for. Enos v. Sun-Ins. Co., 67 Cal. 621.

Waiver of Provisions of Charter.—An incorporated insurance company is the creature of its charter, and where the charter gives it power to contract and prescribes the form and mode of making such contract, the company must observe the form or mode prescribed, or the contract will be void; and in such case it is not within the power of the officer or agent of the company to waive a strict compliance with the requirements of its charter. Leonard v. American Ins. Co., 97 Ind. 299.

Company Estopped from Denying Authority of Agent.—Where a circular issued by an insurance company represents without qualification that the company issues policies providing for certain payments in the event of special injuries, the company by the circular represents that the agent has authority to issue a policy as described in the circular, and cannot, in case of such injuries, deny his authority to do so. Frank v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. (Neb., 1895), 62 N. W. Rep. 454.

Where the insurer has placed the agent in a position to deliver a completed policy to the insured, who did not know that the company required all contracts to be referred to the home office, the insurer cannot avoid the policy on the ground that the contract was not submitted to the home office for ratification. American Employers' Liability Ins. Co. v. Barr, 68 Fed. Rep. 873.

3. See supra, this section, as to the insurance company being bound by the misstatements of its agent, even when there is an attempt in the policy to make the agent the representative of the insured. See also the title INSURANCE.

Total Loss of Sight—Knowledge of Agent that Insured had Lost an Eye.—Where the agent

VIII. EVIDENCE—1. Proof of Death by Violent, External, and Accidental Means.

—Under a policy insuring the holder against death or injury by external, violent, and accidental means, and providing that the insurance shall not extend to any case of death or injury unless the claimant shall establish that the death or injury was occasioned by "external violence and accidental means," it is incumbent upon the plaintiff under the policy to show that the death or injury of the insured was the result not only of external violence, but of accidental means.¹

Direct and Positive Proof.—A proviso in a policy that the claimant shall establish "by direct and positive proof" that death or personal injury was caused by external violence and accidental means, does not, where the insured has been found dead, require the facts and circumstances of his death to be proved by eye-witnesses, nor does such a provision exclude circumstantial and presumptive evidence.²

with knowledge insures a one-eyed man against total loss of the sight of both eyes, the company is liable if the insured loses the sight of his remaining eye. Humphreys v. National Ben. Assoc., 139 Pa. St. 264; Bawden v. London, etc., Assur. Co., 61 L. J. R. 792, (1892) 2 Q. B. 534.

Several Equally Reasonable Theories of Death.—Where the circumstances are consistent with several equally reasonable theories, some pointing to accidental death, and some pointing to death from design or natural causes, a case is not made out for the jury until there is some proof offered tending to establish one of such theories. Merrett v. Preferred Masonic Mut. Acc. Assoc., 98 Mich. 338.

Where there is Sufficient Evidence to warrant a finding that death was due to accidental and not to some other cause, as, for instance, disease, a verdict in favor of the beneficiary will not, of course, be disturbed. So where there was evidence that the insured died from the effects of a fall, although there was testimony tending to show that typhoid fever might have occasioned the death. Standard L., etc., Ins. Co. v. Thomas (Ky., 1891), 17 S. W. Rep. 275.

So where the death might have resulted from the effects of a fall, although it was contended that the cause of death was softening of the brain. Hall v. American Masonic Acc. Assoc., 86 Wis. 518.

So where death was found by the jury to have resulted from sudden strain, although there were no external marks of the injury. Owen v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (Ind.), 12 Ins. L. J. 75.

2. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. McConkey, 127 U. S. 661; Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 85 Ga. 800; Peck v. Equitable Acc. Assoc., 52 Hun (N. Y.) 255; Reynolds v. Equitable Acc. Assoc. (Supreme Ct.), 1 N. Y. Supp. 738.

In Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Sheppard, 85 Ga. 800 the court, by Bleckley, C. J., in construing this provision of an accident policy, said: "In one sense, all oral evidence is direct. * * * If we take the policy as meaning by the use of the terms 'direct and positive' this much and no more, it can be easily reconciled with the rules of law on the subject of evidence. But the more general, and with us the established, use of the terms 'direct evidence' gives to them a different and more restricted meaning." The learned judge then gave the accepted definitions of direct and circumstantial evidence, citing 1 Stark. Ev. 15, and the Code of Georgia, § 3748, and proceeded: "It is manifest that if it was the purpose of the insurance company to exact by contract direct evidence of death and accident, in the sense contemplated by Starkie and our code as above quoted, then the rule laid down by the policy is in conflict with that established by law—a conflict which must be reconciled by adherence to the law and repudiation of this article in the policy."

Unknown Cause Incapable of Direct and Positive Proof.—In Wright v. Sun Mut. L. Ins. Co., 29 U. C. C. P. 221, the court, in construing a provision in a policy of insurance preventing a recovery "where the cause or manner of the accident is unknown or incapable of direct and positive proof," said: "The true meaning of this clause appears from the context: * * * 'the insurance shall not be held to extend to mysterious disappearances, nor to any case of death or disability, the nature, cause, or manner of which is unknown or incapable of direct and positive proof.' We think it would be a perversion of the true meaning of this clause to hold that where the immediate cause of death is indisputable and evidenced by outward violence, caused by a train running over the body, and an accident prima facie within the direct meaning of the insurance, it can be any objection that no human eye witnessed the precise manner in which the deceased fell into or got into the cattle-guard. A large proportion of accidental deaths occur under such circumstances that evidence is wanting as to the precise manner in which the deceased met his fate. Where the visible injuries plainly account for death, it can hardly be necessary to explain step by step how it happened." See also Accident Ins. Co. v. Bennett, 90 Tenn. 256.

Direct and Positive Proof of Design.—A clause in an accident policy requiring direct and positive proof that death or injury was not the result of design, either on the part of

Declarations of the Insured as to Accident and Physical Condition.—Upon the question whether the death of the insured was accidental, his declarations at the time of the accident explaining the nature of the facts and forming part of the res gestæ are admissible,¹ but such declarations made some time after the injury and not part of the res gestæ cannot be admitted.² Where a vested interest passes to the beneficiary under the policy, statements of the insured as to his physical condition made after the issue of the policy are not admissible, since he is not a party in interest, and he cannot destroy or affect the vested interest of the beneficiary by his unsworn statements.³

Evidence of Physician.—The insurer cannot introduce the testimony of the physician of the insured as to his condition, whether the physician's information has been gained by observation or from statements of the insured, such information being generally a privileged communication under our statutes.⁴

2. Presumptions—Against Suicide.—Where the insured is found dead under such circumstances that death may have been due to suicide or to accident, the presumption is against suicide and in favor of accident.⁵ But it has been held that the circumstances of the case may overcome the presumption.⁶

the insured or any other person, cannot be allowed to govern the courts, which will not permit the course of justice upon trials before them to be stipulated or contracted in such manner as to defeat the ends to be subserved by such trials. Parties may contract in relation to a condition precedent before bringing suit, or in relation to anything going to the remedy, but not to the right of recovery itself. Utter v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 545, 8 Am. St. Rep. 913.

Proof Satisfactory to Directors of Insurance Company.—Where one of the conditions in the deed of settlement of an insurance company, which by the terms of the policy was incorporated in it, provided that, before payment of the sum insured by any policy, proof satisfactory to the directors of the company should be furnished by the claimant, of the death or accident, together with such further evidence or information, if any, as the directors should think necessary to establish the claim, it was held that this provision must be understood to mean such evidence or information as the directors might reasonably, not such as they might unreasonably and capriciously, require. Braunstein v. Accidental Death Ins. Co., 1 B. & S. 782, 101 E. C. L. 782.

But it has been held that a different rule applies where the insured is a member of a mutual benefit society, for in that case the beneficiary has no vested interest in the policy or certificate. Steinhausen v. Preferred Mut. Acc. Assoc., 59 Hun (N. Y.) 336.

4. Prader v. National Masonic Acc. Assoc. (Iowa, 1895), 63 N. W. Rep. 601.

But it has been held that statements made by the deceased to his physician, upon which the physician forms an opinion and write as prescription, are competent to prove what was the actual cause of illness and death, though the symptoms are such as might have been produced either by disease or accident, and such statements may be brought out by the defendant on cross-examination of the physician, a witness for the plaintiff. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Dabbert, 2 Cinc. Super. Ct. Rep. (Ohio) 98.

Drowning.—Where the insured is found dead in the water, the presumption is in favor of death by drowning. Supreme Council v. Boyle, 10 Ind. App. 301.

6. Where the insured went to bed as usual at night, and the next morning his body was found in a cistern three or four feet from a path and six or eight feet from the house, the opening to which was only fifteen by twenty inches, the court held that the presumption against suicide was overcome by

Against Intentional Injury.—The presumption is against the insured having come to his death by injuries intentionally inflicted upon him.¹

3. Establishing a Proviso Limiting the Insurer's Liability.—Where the plaintiff has shown that death resulted from violent, external, and accidental means, the defendant must allege and prove the facts necessary to bring the case within the exception limiting the general liability of the company. This is true, whether the exception is incorporated in the general insurance clause by reference, or whether it is simply a condition printed on the back of the policy.²

IX. AMOUNT OF RECOVERY.—Loss of Time and Profit.—Where the agreement is to pay a stated sum in the event of death, and a proportionate part thereof in the case of personal injury, the assured is entitled to recover for only the personal expense and pain occasioned to him by the injury, and not for the loss of time or profit caused thereby.³

Money Value of Time.—But where the insurance is a sum certain, provided the insured shall "recover no more than the money value of his time," the indemnity covers all loss by the injury, including the value of his time outside of his regular employment.⁴

Weekly Indemnity.—Under a policy stipulating for a certain sum in the case of injuries occasioning death within ninety days from the accident, and for a weekly sum for a certain period "for any single accident by which the assured shall sustain any personal injury which shall not be fatal," the weekly indemnity is due for injury by an accident which does not occasion death within the time specified, although it is finally fatal.⁵

Where the defendant has made out a prima facie defense under such a proviso, the burden of disproving it is upon the plaintiff. Travellers' Ins. Co. v. Houston, 3 Tex. App. Civ. Cas., § 429; Anthony v. Mercantile Mut. Acc. Assoc., 162 Mass. 354.

Exercise of Due Care.—Where the policy contains a proviso to the effect that the insured must exercise due care for his own protection, it is incumbent on the insurer to prove the lack of due care, and the burden is not shifted by the fact that the body of the insured is found mangled upon a railroad track after the train has passed, on a dark night, where there was no evidence as to how the accident occurred. Meadows v. Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. (Mo., 1895), 31 S. W. Rep. 578. See Anthony v. Mercantile Mut. Acc. Assoc., 162 Mass. 354.

Records of Coroners' Inquests.—Where the policy provides that proof of death should contain, in case of a coroner's inquest upon the body of the deceased, a copy of the verdict and all the evidence on which the verdict was based, the plaintiff may offer as evidence the verdict so furnished as proof of the performance of the conditions of the policy. Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Laurence, 8 Ill. App. 492.

Record of Criminal Court Inadmissible.—Where the plaintiff has met a defense on the part of the insurance company, that the insured came to his death by injuries intentionally inflicted upon him, by evidence of the fact that the person alleged to have inflicted such injuries was insane, the defendant cannot introduce the record of the criminal conviction of such person in order to establish his sanity. Marceau v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 101 Cal. 338.

The fact that the assailant of the insured has been acquitted on a charge of manslaughter does not show that the insured was in fault, and that he attacked his opponent, so as to bring the case within an exception against injuries caused by fighting. *Robinson v. Weekly Indemnity—Instant Death.—But a policy which provides merely that the insured shall be indemnified in a certain sum per week against loss of time during the period of disability to work, not exceeding a certain number of weeks, does not entitle the administrator of the insured to recover any indemnity in the case of an accident causing instant death.¹

Income Erroneously Stated.—A stipulation, in an application for mutual accident indemnity, that the benefits to which the applicant shall become entitled shall be regulated and paid in the same ratio that his weekly income bears to the amount of weekly indemnity insured, is binding on the insured, although the agent, by false statements as to his income, put him in a higher class, paying larger premiums.²

Final Proofs Submitted before Expiration of Period of Disability.—Under a policy requiring proof of the claim to be filed within seven months after the injury, and allowing a recovery for a period of disability not exceeding twenty-six consecutive weeks, where final proof of the claim is made before the expiration of the latter period, the insured may not recover for any time not covered by the proof.³

ACCOMMODATING.—By using the words "accommodating terms" in a contract the parties must have intended that the purchase money, or some part of it, should be permitted to remain in the vendee's hands, as if a loan for his convenience.⁴

1. Dawson v. Accident Ins. Co. of North America, 38 Mo. App. 355. Here the court said: "The policy is on its face not a death policy, but a mere indemnity policy; and where the insured is immediately killed, there is nothing upon which it can operate."

2. Howe v. Provident Fund Soc., 7 Ind. App. 586.

3. Bickford v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (Vt.), 1895, 32 Atl. Rep. 230.

4. The plaintiff agreed to sell, and the defendant to purchase, a brig, and the terms were to be accommodating. The court said: "There being no evidence that the words 'terms accommodating' have, by usage, acquired any distinct technical meaning, they must be regarded as having been used by the parties in the sense which is ordinarily ascribed to them in business transactions. 'In mercantile language,' says Webster's Dictionary, 'accommodation is used for a loan of money, which is often of great convenience.' The parties, therefore, must have intended that the purchase money, or some part of it, should be permitted to remain in the defendant's hands, as if a loan for his convenience. The accommodation was not only intended to be reasonable, but for the benefit of the defendant." Rice v. McLarren, 42 Me. 163.

I. DEFINITIONS—1. Accommodation Paper.—Accommodation paper is a bill of exchange or promissory note to which the acceptor, drawer, maker, or indorser, as the case may be, has put his name without consideration, for the purpose of accommodating by a loan of his credit some other person who is to provide for the bill or note when it falls due.¹

W. Rep. 121; Byles on Bills *131, *412; Daniel on Neg. Ins., § 189; 2 Randolph Commercial Paper, § 472.

Other Definitions.—In Carpenter v. Republic Nat. Bank, 106 Pa. St. 170, Clark, J., defined accommodation paper as follows: "Accommodation paper is such as is made, accepted, or indorsed by one party for the benefit of another without consideration; it represents a loan of credit."

In Altoona Second Nat. Bank v. Dunn, 151 Pa. St. 228, it seems to be considered that no paper can be called accommodation paper in the strictest sense, unless it is a loan of credit without restriction as to the manner of its use. In delivering the opinion of the court, Heydrick, J., said: "The next question is as to the character of the note. If it were an accommodation note, that is to say, commercial paper given without value to enable the party to whom it was given to use it for his own benefit without restriction as to the manner in which it should be used, there is no question that it could have been pledged as collateral security."

Sealed Notes.—Where suit was brought against the accommodation indorser of a sealed instrument and the only defense was want of consideration, it was held that, conceding that a sealed note was not by strict commercial law a negotiable instrument, yet the court was right in directing a verdict for the plaintiff. Farrar v. New York Bank, 90 Ga. 331. In this case Bleckley, C.J., said: "The pleas in the record set up no defense except the want of consideration, and yet, while declaring the instrument to be an accommodation paper, they do not deny that the accommodation was extended by the plaintiff and realized by the person intended to be accommodated. If it be true that nothing but strictly commercial paper, negotiable

Term Used in Narrower Sense.—The phrase "accommodation paper" is also used in a narrower sense, including only bills accepted or notes made for accommodation.¹

2. Accommodation Party.—The term "accommodation party" is always used in the sense corresponding to the wider meaning of accommodation paper. An accommodation party is a person who has signed as drawer, acceptor, maker, or indorser, without receiving value and for the purpose of lending his name to some other person as a means of credit.²

II. NATURE AND ESSENTIALS OF ACCOMMODATION PAPER—1. Generally.—An accommodation bill or note must be in the nature of a loan of credit without consideration by the accommodation party to the party accommodated, who may or may not be a party to the instrument.

2. Consideration—a. GENERAL PRINCIPLES—Absence of Consideration not Sufficient.—There must be an absence of consideration between the party accommodated and the accommodation party, but absence of consideration in itself is not enough to make a bill or note accommodation paper.³

Must be a Loan of Credit.—The instrument must be loaned or signed by one party for the purpose of procuring credit for the other, generally or for a specific purpose, in order that it may be strictly accommodation paper.⁴

by the law merchant, can be accommodation paper, or used as such, the defense ought to prevail; but we can discover no obstacle in the nature of things to the use of any class of paper whatever as a means of accommodation. When one man pledges his credit for the benefit of another without receiving any part of the consideration himself, whatever be the form of instrument by which he makes the pledge, the paper has all the necessary elements, so far, at least, as consideration is concerned, which any accommodation paper requires."

1. In Miller v. Larned, 103 Ill. 562, Scott, J., said: "A recognized definition of accommodation paper is, either a negotiable or non-negotiable bill or note made by one who puts his name thereto without consideration, with the intention of lending his credit to the party accommodated." The true analogy is between a note made and a bill accepted for accommodation. (See the title BILLS AND NOTES.) And this definition would seem to be misleading as applied to bills, in that it implies apparently that a bill must be drawn by an accommodation party in order to be accommodation paper.

In Benjamin's Chalmers' Dig. of Bills and Notes, art. 90, an accommodation bill is defined to be "a bill whereof the acceptor (that is, the principal debtor on the instrument) is substantially a mere surety for some other person who may or may not be a party thereto."

In Scott v. Lifford, 1 Campb. 246, by an arrangement between the plaintiffs and one Agar, who was indebted to them, Agar was given further time to pay his debt upon the deposit with the plaintiffs as security of a bill drawn by the defendant in favor of the plaintiffs and accepted by Agar. Lord Ellenborough held that the bill was not to be considered as an accommodation bill, there having been a consideration as between the payee and the acceptor. See also Shirley v. Fel-lows, 9 Port. (Ala.) 304.

3. Bill Drawn Subject to State of Accounts.—Where A drew a bill upon B, to whom he had been sending goods for sale, and B accepted the bill, neither party knowing the state of accounts between them, and it turned out that A at the time was indebted to B, the court held that this was not to be considered an accommodation bill, and consequently there was no implied contract of indemnity for costs. Bagnall v. Andrews, 7 Bing. 217, 20 E. C. L. 107. See also Farmers', etc., Bank v. Rathbone, 26 Vt. 19, 58 Am. Dec. 200.

Bill of Commission Merchant in Favor of One Shipping in Drawer's Name.—Where the plaintiff shipped wheat to the defendant's commission merchants, in the defendant's name by his consent, and the defendant notified the commission merchants of the shipment without reference to the plaintiff, and after the sale of the wheat shipped the commission merchants rendered an account of sales to the defendant, placing the proceeds to the defendant's credit, a bill drawn by the defendant upon the commission merchants in favor of the plaintiff for the amount was held to be not accommodation paper. Singer v. Dickneite, 51 Mo. App. 245.

Credit to Party Accommodated as Consideration.—After the instrument containing the accommodation signatures has been negotiated, the credit given to the accommodated party upon the instrument is sufficient consideration to bind the accommodation party.³

Consideration for Accommodation Indorser after Delivery.—But where one becomes an accommodation indorser after delivery, there must, in general, be a new consideration known to the indorser in order to bind him.⁴

That accommodation paper is a loan of credit prima facie, without restriction as to the manner in which it shall be used, see infra, this title, Diversions: Use of Accommodation Paper Generally.

No Credit Obtained upon the Instrument.—Where one joins with the debtor in the execution of a promissory note payable to the creditor, to be delivered to the payee as collateral security for the original debt, and there is no extension of time to the debtor, nor other consideration moving to him, the accommodation maker is not liable, since the note is without consideration; but a valid contemporary promise by the debtor to indemnify the accommodation maker is a sufficient consideration to support the note as to him. Rutledge v. Townsend, 38 Ala. 706.

Liability on Old Note Supports Renewal Accommodation Note.—An accommodation party's liability upon one note is a sufficient consideration to support, as to him, a new note to which he becomes a party in order to take up the first note. Accommodation Maker Signing after Execution and Delivery.—As a general rule, one who adds his signature to a promissory note after its execution and delivery is not bound unless there is a new consideration. Yet where a loan is made upon the consideration that the borrower will execute the note and procure the signature of another party to it as joint maker, with the understanding that the note shall not be considered as delivered until signed by such other party, and his signature is procured several days afterwards, the party so adding his signature is bound by the note without the necessity of a new consideration notwithstanding he had no prior knowledge or agreement respecting the loan previously made. Winders v. Sperry, 96 Cal. 194.

Benefit to Accommodated Party Sufficient.—Here, as where the accommodation party signs before delivery, an advantage accruing to the party accommodated is a consid-

b. CROSS BILLS OR NOTES—Not Accommodation Paper.—Cross bills or notes, that is, bills or notes exchanged for mutual convenience, are not accommodation paper, since each is a consideration for the other.¹

Payment Gives Right of Action.—When one of the parties to such an exchange of notes has paid his own note, he may maintain an action against the other party upon the note of the latter, although he holds it still unused.²

Intention Controlling.—A mutual exchange of notes will amount to a sufficient consideration for the note so given, but to do so it must appear that it was the intention of the parties to make a mutual exchange of paper, and whether such was their design will depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. Williams v. Banks, 11 Md. 198.

Note Exchanged Proving Worthless.—The fact that one of the notes exchanged proves worthless will not alter the rule. Rice v. Grange, 131 N. Y. 149.

Bills Paid for in Bills of the Purchaser.—Where one buys bills of exchange upon a foreign country, giving in exchange therefor bills drawn by himself upon a firm of which he is a member, the purchaser is a holder for value. In re London, etc., Bank, L. R. 9 Ch. 686. See Adams v. Soule, 33 Vt. 538.

Usury.—Where A and B exchange notes for the purpose of raising money, and A obtains the note of B to be discounted at a premium exceeding the lawful rate of interest, such transaction is not usurious, and cannot be set up in bar of a recovery in an action by the purchaser of the note against B, the maker. Rice v. Mather, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 62.

2. Cohu v. Husson, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 200, 113 N. Y. 662.

Payment without Liability.—Where one party to such an exchange of notes pays his own note, when by reason of the fraudulent misappropriation thereof by the other party to the exchange, to which fraudulent misapplication the holder was a party, he had a good defense thereto, it seems that the payment having been made without a legal liability does not give him the right to recover against the other party. Mix v. Muzzy, 28 Conn. 186.

No Recovery until Payment.—One party to such an exchange of notes or checks has no right of action against the other party on the note or check of the latter until he has paid his own note or check. Burdsall v. Chrisfield, 1 Disney (Ohio) 51.

Agreement with Regard to Payment.—When it is agreed between the two parties to the exchange that the drafts given by the first party shall not be paid until those given by the second party are paid, one who takes the drafts of the first party with full knowledge of the agreement cannot recover. Dunning v. Pratt, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 331.

3. No Implied Contract of Indemnity.—There is no implied contract of indemnity in such a case, as there is in the case of accommodation paper. So where one of the parties to an exchange of notes has paid his own note and made payments upon the note of the other party, he cannot recover of the latter the amount so paid. Wooster v. Jenkins, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 187. In this case Bronson, C.J., said: "It is urged that as between the original parties cross notes or acceptances should be regarded as accommodation, in contradistinction to business securities. But the rule is settled the other way. Each party may prove the debt against the other under a commission of bankruptcy. And although one party sells the note or bill at a greater discount than seven per centum, the purchaser will acquire a good title. It is true that so long as the securities are in the hands of the original parties they will balance each other; but it will be by way of set-off, and not on the ground that they are invalid. If a party lend his note or acceptance, and take a counter security of the same kind, by way of indemnity merely, the lent note or bill will not have inception as a valid security until it passes into the hands of a bona fide holder. But I do not consider this a transaction of that kind. Neither firm took the notes of the other by way of indemnity merely. But the notes on both sides were made to be negotiated and used as valid securities."

3. Party Accommodated—Who is—Incidental Benefit.—The accommodated party is he to whom the credit of the accommodation party is loaned, but the fact that one derives some incidental benefit from the paper will not make it accommodation paper as to him.¹

Need not be Party to Instrument.—An instrument signed, accepted, or indorsed by one for the accommodation of another is accommodation paper although the party for whose accommodation it was signed is not himself a party to the instrument.²

Indorsement for Accommodation of Two.—An accommodation indorsement or signature may be for the accommodation of more than one of the parties to the instrument, as, for example, for the accommodation of both drawer and payee.³

At Whose Request.—But the fact that one signs a note for the accommodation of his comaker at the request of a third person will not establish the relation of accommodation and accommodated parties between the accommodation maker and such third person,⁴ nor is paper which one makes for the benefit of Party Paying His Own Note not Entitled to Subrogation.—Where A and B exchange their notes for their mutual accommodation, and A at the maturity of his note pays it to a party who has discounted it upon the indorsement of B, A in making such payment does not act as a surety of B, and is not entitled to be subrogated to securities held by the party who discounted the instrument for B to indemnify him for the liability thereby assumed. Stickney v. Mohler, 19 Md. 490.

1. Mere Incidental Benefit.—C makes his promissory note at the request of and for the benefit of F to take up an old note made by F and indorsed by M; F does not become a party to the new note, but M indorsed it for the accommodation of F. The relation of accommodation and accommodated parties does not exist as between M and C, and M may maintain an action upon the instrument against C. Mosser v. Criswell, 150 Pa. St. 409. In this case, in delivering the opinion of the court, Mitchell, J., said: "The debt for which this note was given was unquestionably Feight's, and it was incumbent on him to pay the note, though he was not party to it. When it fell due and Feight was unable to pay it, plaintiff being an indorser would have been liable to be called on by the bank for payment; and therefore to have the money raised on a new note made by defendant was in a certain popular sense an accommodation, that is, a convenience, to the plaintiff—just as it is a convenience to a creditor who wants his money but cannot get it from his debtor in cash, to get payment by a note on which he can raise the money temporarily, though at the risk of an indorsement which he may ultimately have to pay. But this is very far from what the law means by accommodation paper."

Where A and B are cosureties on a bill for the drawer, and A takes up the bill and receives thereafter a note signed by the drawer and indorsed by B for one half the amount of the bill, the note is not made for A's accommodation, but the drawer and B being liable, one to indemnify A and the other as a cosurety with him to contribution, the bill is for value, and A may recover thereon against B. Hatcher v. McMorine, 3 Dev. (N. Car.) 228.

2. Benj. Chalm. Dig. Bills and Notes, art. 92; Miller v. Larned, 103 Ill. 562. See Cornwall v. Gould, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 444; Powers v. French, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 582; Messmore v. Meyer, 56 N. J. L. 31; Gunnis v. Weigley, 114 Pa. St. 191; Mosser v. Criswell, 150 Pa. St. 409.

3. Farrar v. Gregg, 1 Rich. (S. Car.) 378.

Accommodation Note for A and B Delivered by A to B as Negotiable Paper.—A was indebted to B upon a note; B agreed to take C's note in payment thereof; A procured C to make his note payable to B; C believing that the note was for the accommodation of A and B. C delivered the note to A, who delivered it to B. It was held that B accepted the note for his own accommodation, and could maintain no action thereon. The court reasoned thus: If the note had any validity it must have obtained it either by the delivery from C to A or from A to B; and if it came into legal existence by C's delivering it to A, A must be considered B's agent to accept delivery, and so B was bound by its delivery as accommodation paper for himself; and if A's delivery to B gave it existence, A in delivering it was acting as an agent of C with authority to deliver it to B only as accommodation paper for B's benefit, and as a special agent he could not bind his principal beyond his real authority. Messmore v. Meyer, 56 N. J. L. 31. The reasoning of this case seems hardly satisfactory. If the principles of agency are applicable at all, which seems doubtful, it is not apparent why A, acting as B's agent to receive delivery, is able to bind his principal in excess of his powers, while if acting as C's agent to make delivery, C is not bound if he goes beyond his authority.

4. Person Requesting Signature for Another not Accommodation Party.—Where it appears that E signed for the accommodation of P at the request of J, the law will not in the absence of evidence imply a promise by J to indemnify E, and if J subsequently acquires the note he may enforce it against E. Lockwood v. Twitchell, 146 Mass. 623.

Where it appeared that a stranger indorsed a note at the request of the payee, receiving from him a consideration for so doing, the payee supposing that the indorser was as-another, without the request or knowledge of the latter, accommodation paper.¹

May Become Holder for Value.—The party accommodated may by agreement between the parties, founded upon a good consideration, become entitled to hold the instrument as a valid security.²

4. Inception of the Contract—a. INOPERATIVE UNTIL NEGOTIATED.—No obligation whatever attaches to an undelivered bill or note, and accommodation paper, although complete in form and signed by all the proper parties, creates no liability and is of no validity until it is negotiated and has passed into the hands of a holder for value.³

b. REVOCATION—(1) Generally.—It follows from the fact that accommodation paper is operative only when negotiated, that until negotiation an accommodation party may revoke the instrument,⁴ and no one who takes with suming the liability of a surety for the maker, and the indorser having previously agreed to indorse the note of the maker to be delivered to the payee; and where it is a reasonable inference from the indorser's language at the time he placed his signature upon the instrument that he understood that he was becoming surety for the maker, a verdict for the payee in an action against the indorser upon the instrument is supported by the evidence. Lafin v. Pomeroy, 11 Conn. 440.

Indorser for Accommodation of Accommodation Indorser.—Where it appeared that the plaintiff, for a consideration paid to him by the makers of a note, indorsed the note for their accommodation and undertook to raise the money on it, and that, being unable to discount the note without further indorsement, the plaintiff procured the defendant to indorse the note for him, the plaintiff is as to the defendant the accommodated party, and cannot, after taking up the instrument, recover from the defendant a contributory share of the amount paid. Martin v. Marshall, 60 Vt. 321.

1. Party Accommodated must Request Signature or Promise Indemnity.—Where a married woman, in 1879, voluntarily gave her note for the amount of a claim against her husband, without any request on his part that she should become surety for him and without any consideration either by way of transfer of the claim to her or otherwise, and in an action upon the note there was no allegation or finding that she had any separate estate, it was held that want of consideration was a good defense, although the plaintiff was a bona fide purchaser for value, and although by the terms of the instrument it was held a charge on her separate estate. Linderman v. Farquharson, 101 N. Y. 435.

In order to establish that a third person is liable to indemnify an indorser who has been compelled to pay the instrument, it must appear that the latter signed at the request of such third person or that such third person agreed to indemnify him. Cornwall v. Gould, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 444. See Gates v. Williams, 9 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 176.

Tennessee.—Tennessee Bank v. Johnson, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 232.

Note Indorsed for only Part of its Value.—A makes and signs a promissory note for twenty-five hundred dollars and requests B to indorse it for his accommodation; B refuses to indorse for the whole amount, but does indorse it for seven hundred and fifty dollars as follows: "Mr. O. pay on within seven hundred and fifty dollars." It was then procured to be discounted for the latter sum. It was held that the note was in legal effect a note for seven hundred and fifty dollars, inasmuch as being accommodation paper it was of no validity or value until negotiated, and it first acquired validity by being discounted as a note for seven hundred and fifty dollars. Douglass v. Wilkinson, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 431.

4. Revocable by Accommodation Party until Negotiated.—This principle applies to all accommodation parties, Tennessee Bank v. Johnson, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 233; thus, to accommodation makers, Second Nat. Bank v. Howe, 40 Minn. 390, citing 2 AM. AND ENG. ENCYC. OF LAW (1st ed.) 365; Norvell v. Hudgins, 4 Muni. (Va.) 496; and to accommodation indorsers, Skidling v. Warren, 10 Johns. (N. knowledge of such a revocation acquires any right against the revoking party.¹ Such a revocation is accomplished by giving notice to the parties concerned,² and this notice may be verbal.³

(2) By Death.—The death of the accommodation party before the instrument has been issued is a revocation, and a party who afterwards takes the instrument with knowledge of its accommodation character cannot recover against the estate of the deceased accommodation party,⁴ although he took the paper in ignorance of the accommodation party's death.⁵ But it is other-seau, 8 Leigh (Va.) 193; Berkeley v. Tinsley, 88 Va. 1001.

Revocation of Prior Accommodation Indorsers Releases Subsequent Ones.—The revocation before negotiation of an antecedent accommodation indorser releases from liability a subsequent accommodation indorser, although the revocation of such antecedent indorser was without the knowledge of the subsequent indorser, and one who takes the instrument with notice of the revocation is a mala fide holder as to the subsequent parties. Tennessee Bank v. Johnson, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 234.

Security Given to Accommodation Party.—It does not change the right of the accommodation party to revoke, that he has taken security for the use of his name. May v. Boisseau, 8 Leigh (Va.) 164.

Revocation after Pledge.—Although the paper has been pledged for a certain sum, an accommodation indorser, while of course remaining liable for the amount advanced, may revoke his indorsement and prevent the discount of the instrument. Berkeley v. Tinsley, 88 Va. 1001.

Revocation Withdrawn through False Representations.—Where the accommodation maker of a promissory note gave a sufficient notice of revocation to the vice-president of the bank at which, by agreement, the note was to be discounted, but was induced by the false and fraudulent representations of the vice-president as to the financial standing and solvency of the payee, the accommodated party, to withdraw his revocation, it was held that the bank subsequently receiving the note from the payee was responsible for the loss resulting to the accommodation maker. Second Nat. Bank v. Howe, 40 Minn. 390.

Agreement to Accept for Accommodation Binding.—In Ilsley v. Jones, 12 Gray (Mass.) 260, it is declared, in the opinion delivered per curiam, that a failure to accept a draft for accommodation, where the drawee had promised the drawer to accept, would render the drawee liable for damages to the drawer although the bill was still in the hands of the latter, and the damages would be measured by the inconvenience and loss occasioned to the drawer. The expression was, however, a mere dictum, for the court declared that there was no evidence that the promise to accept in the case before it was for accommodation. It would seem that, according to the principle that an accommodation signature may be revoked before negotiation, there could be no action for damages in such a case. See Mechanics' Bank v. Livingston, 33 Barb. (N. Y.) 458.

1. Skidling v. Warren, 10 Johns. (N. Y.)

270; Dogan v. Dubois, 2 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 85; Norvell v. Hudgins, 4 Munf. (Va.) 496.

Innocent Indorsee.—But when the accommodation maker of a note upon the insolvency of the accommodated party, the payee of the note, directed the latter to return and not to use it, and the payee promised but failed to do so, and negotiated the instrument to an innocent indorsee, the latter was held entitled to recover. Hart v. U. S. Trust Co., 118 Pa. St. 565.

2. In the following cases the revoking accommodation party gave notice to the bank at which the note was to be discounted. Second Nat. Bank v. Howe, 40 Minn. 390; Dogan v. Dubois, 2 Rich. Eq. (S. Car.) 85; Tennessee Bank v. Johnson, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 238.

In May v. Boisseau, 8 Leigh (Va.) 164, notice was given to the bank and likewise to the party holding the instrument, and its possession was demanded from him. See Norvell v. Hudgins, 4 Munf. (Va.) 496.

3. Tennessee Bank v. Johnson, 1 Swan (Tenn.) 233.

4. Hatch v. Searles, 2 Sm. & G. 147; Smith v. Wyckoff, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 77; Michigan Ins. Co. v. Leavenworth, 30 Vt. 11. But see Williams v. Bosson, 11 Ohio 62, where it was held that the death of one of the members of the firm which had accepted a bill for the accommodation of the drawer, although such death occurred while the bill was still unused in the hands of the party accommodated, did not affect the validity of a subsequent transfer of the paper, inasmuch as the bill "received its form and validity before his death, and no act of any member of the firm was necessary to add anything to it."

Bills on Which Advances have been Made.—Bills delivered after the death of the drawer, to a person who had made advances upon their faith to the drawer while the drawer had them in his possession for the purpose of raising money, may be enforced against the drawer's representatives. Perry v. Crammond, 1 Wash. (U. S.) 100.

5. Death of Accommodation Indorser Prevents Recovery when Holders Knew of the Accommodation.—An action was brought upon a bill of exchange indorsed by L., the defendant's intestate. The bill, complete except as to date and time of payment, was indorsed by L. to R. H. & Co. for their accommodation. L. died while the bill was still in the hands of R. H. & Co. unnegotiated; subsequently, R. H. & Co. presented the instrument still containing the blanks as to date and time of payment to the plaintiffs, who filled the blanks and discounted it in ignorance of L.'s death and relying upon the indorsement. It was held that L.'s death was a revocation of wise where one takes an accommodation note in good faith without knowledge of its accommodation character, although informed of the death of the maker.¹

5. Place of the Contract.—Since an accommodation bill or note becomes operative upon negotiation only, and is not until such negotiation a binding contract, it results that the lex loci contractus when applied to such instruments is the law of the place where they are first negotiated, and not the law of the place where the accommodation signatures are actually written.²

Usury.—Thus the question whether accommodation paper is usurious or otherwise is to be tested by the law of the state in which it is actually negotiated.³ But it has been held that where such paper expressly points out a place of performance for the contract the law of the place so pointed out will govern rather than the law of the place of negotiation, in the absence of evidence that it was intended to be used elsewhere.⁴

R. H. & Co.'s authority to negotiate the instrument, that the plaintiffs were chargeable with knowledge of the accommodation character of the paper, and that they could not recover. Michigan Ins. Co. v. Leavenworth, 30 Vt. 11.

1. Clark v. Thayer, 105 Mass. 216.

In this case the court based its decision upon the ground that the plaintiff was a bona fide holder for value without notice of the fact that the note was accommodation paper, and that knowledge of the death of the maker did not affect him with notice of any invalidity in the note. See Snaith v. Mingay, 1 M. & S. 87.

2. Indorsement.—Where bills or notes are indorsed for accommodation in one state and negotiated in another, the law of the latter state controls the contract of indorsement. Mott v. Wright, 4 Biss. (U. S.) 53; Stubbs v. Colt, 30 Fed. Rep. 417; Stanford v. Pruet, 27 Ga. 243; Gay v. Rainey, 89 Ill. 221; Young v. Harris, 14 B. Mon. (Ky.) 447; Lawrence v. Bassett, 5 Allen (Mass.) 140; Cook v. Litchfield, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 330, 9 N. Y. 285; Connor v. Donnell, 55 Tex. 167.

Acceptance.—The same rule prevails as to the contract of acceptance. Tilden v. Blair, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 241; Gallaudet v. Sykes, 1 McArthur (D. C.) 489.

Where an accommodation note is signed in Virginia, and transmitted to the payees in Maryland where blanks are filled up and the note negotiated for value, it is a Maryland and not a Virginia contract. Fant v. Miller, 17 Gratt. (Va.) 47.

3. Tilden v. Blair, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 241; Davis v. Clemson, 6 McLean (U. S.) 622; In re Conrad, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 147, 6 Fed. Cas., p. 333, No. 3126; Providence County Sav. Bank v. Frost, 8 Ben. (U. S.) 203, 14 Blatchf. (U. S.) 233. See also the titles CONFLICT OF LAWS; USURY.

Illustrations.—A resident of Chicago drew a bill on a resident of New York, and the latter accepted for the accommodation of the former, and by the acceptance made the draft payable in New York. It was returned to Chicago, where it was negotiated. It was held that it was an Illinois contract, and was to be tested by the usury laws of that state. The court said that the controlling fact was that it was negotiated in Illinois and was expressly sent to Chicago for that purpose, that naming New York as the place of payment was doubtless for the convenience of the acceptor, and to facilitate negotiation. Tilden v. Blair, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 241.

Where a resident of Ohio drew and indorsed certain bills for the accommodation of a resident of New York, and sent them to the latter place, where they were negotiated, it was held that the law of the latter state must govern, and that being usurious within those laws the instruments were void. Davis v. Clemson, 6 McLean (U. S.) 622.

Where a resident of Philadelphia made certain promissory notes for the accommodation of a person residing in the same place, and the latter procured such notes to be discounted at usurious rates of interest in New York, it was held that the effect of the transaction must be determined by the usury laws of New York. In re Conrad, 8 Phila. (Pa.) 147, 6 Fed. Cas., p. 333, No. 3126.

4. Jewell v. Wright, 30 N. Y. 259; Dickinson v. Edwards, 77 N. Y. 573; Wayne County Sav. Bank v. Low, 81 N. Y. 566.

In Jewell v. Wright, 30 N. Y. 259, W. made a promissory note to the order of D., dated and payable at Lockport, N. Y. D. indorsed it for T. for his accommodation, and delivered it to T. at Lockport. T. took it to Connecticut and negotiated it there. It was held that the law of the place of performance, New York, must control. This case was doubted by the Supreme Court of New York, but was followed in New York Nat. Bank v. Morris, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 680, and was considered and repudiated by the Superior Court of Buffalo, in Bowen v. Bradley, 9 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y., Buffalo Super. Ct.) 395, and by the New York Court of Common Pleas in Wayne County Sav. Bank v. Low, 6 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 77. But in Dickinson v. Edwards, 77 N. Y. 573, the Court of Appeals affirmed it upon great consideration, overruling the two cases last cited. Subsequently in Wayne County Sav. Bank v. Low, 81 N. Y. 566, the principle of Jewell v. Wright, 30 N. Y. 259, and of Dickinson v. Edwards, 77 N. Y. 573, was again affirmed, and reconciled with the cases cited in the last note supra. The Court of Appeals, by Rapallo, J., said: "That case [Dickinson v. Edwards, 77 N. Y. 573], as well as Jewell v. Wright, 30 N. Y. 259, was distinguished from Tilden v. Blair, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 241, expressly upon the ground that

6. Parol Evidence to Prove Character of Instrument.—Parol evidence, by the weight of authority, is admissible in general to show the real relation between the parties to a bill or note, and that the actual liability of the parties among themselves is not that which appears upon the face of the instrument; and this is upon the ground that the fact of suretyship is collateral to the written instrument, and does not contradict or vary it.¹ Thus it may be shown that of persons apparently equally liable as comakers or codrawers of a bill or note one is in fact a principal and the other a surety,² or it may be shown in Tilden v. Blair, although the acceptance was made payable in New York by the acceptors, who were residents of New York, yet after having accepted in New York they returned the acceptance to the drawer in Illinois, for the purpose and with the intention that it should be negotiated by him in that state. And this court says, in its opinion in Dickinson v. Edwards, 77 N. Y. 573, that that was the controlling fact in Tilden v. Blair, and that the ruling consideration was the intention of the acceptors that the draft should be used in Illinois, while in Jewell v. Wright, and in the case then before the court, there was nothing to show an intent on the part of the maker of the note to give authority to deal with it otherwise than as the law of this state would allow. The case of Georgia Bank v. Lewin, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 340, and other cases are distinguished from Jewell v. Wright on the same ground, and it may safely be said that the case of Dickinson v. Edwards rests upon the ground that there was no evidence of knowledge or intention on the part of the maker of the note that it was to be used out of this state, and that in the absence of such proof it must be governed by the law of the place of payment."

That parol evidence is admissible to show suretyship between successive accommodation parties, see infra, this title, Successive Accommodation Parties.

To Show Who is the Accommodation Party.—Parol or extrinsic evidence is admissible upon the question for whose accommodation a certain instrument was made. Bucyrus Steam Shovel, etc., Co. v. Meyer, 70 Hun (N. Y.) 371. See Case v. Spaulding, 24 Conn. 578; Dale v. Gear, 38 Conn. 15, 39 Conn. 89; Lafin v. Pomeroy, 11 Conn. 440; Patten v. Pearson, 55 Me. 39; *Kulenkamp v. Conversation at and before Acceptance.—In an action by the payee against the acceptor of certain drafts, the defendant set up as a defense that his acceptance was for the plaintiff's accommodation, and, it appearing that the plaintiff received the draft from the maker as collateral security for an antecedent debt, it was held that the defendant could prove conversations between himself and the maker of the draft at and before the time of the acceptance and going to show the conditions of the acceptance, although the plaintiff was not present at such conversations. Yale v. Dart (C. Pl.), 19 N. Y. Supp. 389; Wyckoff v. Wilson (City Ct.), 9 N. Y. Supp. 628.

To Prove Irregular Indorser an Accommodation Party.—In New York a person indorsing a bill or note before its delivery is presumed to have intended to become liable as second indorser, and he is not liable upon the instrument to the payee, who is supposed to be the first indorser; but it is competent to rebut this presumption by parol proof that the indorsement was made to give the maker credit with the payee. Coulter v. Richmond, 59 N. Y. 478; Moore v. Cross, 19 N. Y. 227; Bornstein v. Kauffman, 4 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 83; Wyckoff v. Wilson (C. Pl.), 36 N. Y. St. Rep. 35; Phelps v. Vischer, 50 N. Y. 69; Bacon v. Burnham, 37 N. Y. 614; Gates v. Williams, 9 Misc. Rep. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 176. So in Wisconsin: Cady v. Shepard, 12 Wis. 639.

To Prove Agreement Altering Accommodation Character of Instrument.—Where the defendant made a promissory note payable to the plaintiff for the latter's accommodation, the plaintiff may prove that subsequently for a good consideration the parties agreed by parol to sustain the same relation to each other as was imported by the terms of the note, and such subsequent agreement being proved, the plaintiff is entitled to recover of the defendant upon the note. *Norton v. that a person who is apparently liable only secondarily upon the instrument is in fact the principal debtor.¹ But it has been held that where one contracts expressly as "principal" he cannot show that he was merely a surety.²

7. How Far Affected by Statute of Frauds.—The question here to be discussed is how far an accommodation acceptor or indorser is within the benefit of the fourth section of the statute of frauds, providing that a special promise to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another must be in writing, signed, etc. If the undertaking of an accommodation party is within this provision, a verbal promise to accept or to indorse for accommodation will not be binding upon the promisor, and the undertaking, when in writing, must conform to the local statute of frauds, as in expressing the consideration of the promise.

Verbal Promise to Indorse or Accept.—It has been held that a verbal promise to Contra.—But it has been held that parol evidence is not admissible, at least at law, to show that the parties are not all equally liable as makers. Bull v. Allen, 19 Conn. 101 (but see Daggett v. Whiting, 35 Conn. 366); Yates v. Donaldson, 5 Md. 389; Hendrickson v. Hutchinson, 29 N. J. L. 180.

California.—In California it was formerly held that a comaker could not show that in fact he was an accommodation maker, and so a mere surety. And v. Magruder, 10 Cal. 282; Shriver v. Lovejoy, 32 Cal. 574; Damon v. Pardow, 34 Cal. 278.

But under the civil code of California, § 2832, the real relations of the parties may be shown, except as against persons who have acted on the faith of the position of the parties as apparent upon the instrument. Harlan v. Ely, 35 Cal. 340; Chafoin v. Rich, 77 Cal. 476; Cohen v. Goux, 48 Cal. 97; Schultz v. Noble, 77 Cal. 79.

Relation of Comakers and Parties Successively

Liable Distinguished.—Cases are found making a distinction as to the admissibility of parol evidence to prove the relation between comakers and parties who are successively liable.

In Farmers', etc., Bank v. Rathbone, 26 Vt. 19, Isham, J., said: "On this subject it is important to observe a material distinction between joint and several promissory notes or obligations, and bills of exchange or notes on which the parties have assumed only successive liabilities. In the former case as between the makers and the holders, who at the time received the note with notice of the circumstances under which it was given, the strict relation of principal and surety may exist, and evidence of that fact is not considered as contradicting its specific provisions, but as consistent with its terms; and the right of contribution arising out of that relation exists between them. 2 Am. Lead. Cas. 289, 303. But the drawer and acceptor and indorsers of a bill or note have not assumed a joint and several liability; neither are they strictly sureties; but are liable to each other, in the order of their becoming parties: and when the action is on the bill or instrument creating such successive liabilities, by an indorsee for value, without notice that the bill was given for accommodation, such testimony is inadmissible for the purpose of converting their successive liabilities into a joint and several obligation, or placing them in the relation of principal and surety. The testimony clearly contradicts the express provision of the bill, and materially changes its legal effect."

But it has been held that in a suit between indorsers for contribution parol evidence is admissible to show that the defendant signed at the request of the plaintiff and with the intention of becoming surety for him. Martin v. Marshall, 60 Vt. 321.

2. One Contracting as "Principal."—Where one is in relation to another in fact a surety, yet if he contracts expressly as principal upon the face of the instrument he is not entitled to any of the rights of a surety. Sprigg v. Mt. Pleasant Bank, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 257; McMillan v. Parkell, 64 Mo. 286; Heath v. Derry Bank, 44 N. H. 174; Claremont Bank v. Wood, 10 Vt. 582. See Branch Bank v. James, 9 Ala. 949, and compare Harris v. Brooks, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 195.

accept for accommodation is binding in favor of one who takes the paper on the faith thereof, although he took with knowledge of its accommodation character.¹ But, on the other hand, it has been held that such a promise is within the statute, and therefore void.² A verbal promise to indorse for accommodation is in effect a promise to answer for the debt of another, and so is within the statute.³

Written Acceptance or Indorsement for Accommodation.—It has been held that an acceptance given for accommodation for the debt of the drawer is not within the statute of frauds, but is a new and independent promise if a consideration therefor flows to the drawer;⁴ for such a consideration is sufficient to support the promise of the accommodation party;⁵ but this doctrine does not apply before the bill has been negotiated and while it remains in the hands of the party accommodated.⁶ The same doctrine has been applied to accommodation indorsers.⁷

III. ACCOMMODATION PAPER OF PARTICULAR PARTIES—1. Partners—One Partner Has no Power to Issue.—It is no part of the business of a mercantile firm to accept, make, or indorse bills or notes as a firm for third persons. There is, therefore, no implied authority for a partner to execute accommodation paper in the name of the copartnership, and an accommodation bill or note accepted, made, or indorsed by one member of a firm cannot be enforced against the firm by one who took it with knowledge of the accommodation character of the firm's signature, unless all the partners assented thereto.⁸

1. Townsley v. Sumrall, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 170.

Bank Checks.—The rule in Townsley v. Sumrall, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 170, has been held not to apply to a parol promise to accept for accommodation a bank check, and such a promise is within the statute of frauds. Morse v. Massachusetts Nat. Bank, 1 Holmes (U. S.) 209.

Verbal Acceptances—Generally.—Upon the question as to whether a verbal acceptance is in general within the statute of frauds, and whether that statute is applicable to commercial paper, see the titles BILLS AND NOTES; FRAUDS, STATUTE OF.

In Pillans v. Van Mierop, 3 Burr. 1668, there is a dictum by Lord Mansfield which has been cited as showing that that great jurist took the view that a verbal promise to accept for accommodation was within the statute. The point involved in the case was merely a question whether a parol promise to accept is binding, and the words of Lord Mansfield would seem to show that whatever his view with regard to a simple promise to accept for another, yet where such a promise had been acted upon, and the principle of estoppel could be invoked, the promise would be valid.

Partnership Note in Payment of Individual Debt.—This rule applies especially against one who takes a bill or note, accepted, made, or indorsed by one partner in the name of the firm, for the individual debt of the partner who signs the paper; and one who acquires partnership paper from one partner for his individual debt is chargeable with notice that the firm's signature is without value and fraudulent as to the other partner.

Foster*, 9 Kan. 44. See Columbus City Bank v. Beach, 1 Blatchf. (U. S.) 438.

Partner Liable to Firm.—The partner who misuses the firm credit by accepting accommodation paper is liable to the partnership for resulting loss. Smith v. Loring, 2 Ohio 440.

What Amounts to Notice of Character of Paper.—Other circumstances, besides taking partnership paper for the individual debt of the partner, will charge the transferee with knowledge of the character of the firm's signature. If the face of the paper itself shows that the firm executes not as principal, but as a surety or guarantor for some other person, the person who takes it has actual notice. Marsh v. Thompson Nat. Bank, 2 Ill. App. 217.

As to when the appearance of the paper is sufficient to charge a party with presumptive notice of its character, see infra, this title, Holders of Accommodation Paper: When Chargeable with Notice of Accommodation Character of Instrument.

K. procured a certain note, signed by G., payable to his own order, of which note K. was second indorsee, to be discounted at the S. Bank, depositing as collateral with the bank a note of M. & Co. made and signed by one of the members of that firm without the knowledge of his partner. This note K. received as security for the G. note. It was of the same date and amount as the G. note, and there was upon its back a memorandum signed by K. to the effect that the note was held by him as security for the G. note. The S. bank had no knowledge of the dealings between K. and M. & Co. In an action by the bank against M. & Co. upon the firm note it was held that the plaintiff was chargeable with knowledge that the paper was given as security merely, from the face of the two notes and from the memorandum upon the firm note. National Security Bank v. McDonald, 127 Mass. 82.

A debtor gave his creditor notes of a third party, which the creditor discounted on his own indorsement, but had to take up when they fell due. The debtor then gave the creditor other notes of the same person, but with the name of a firm to which the maker belonged written across the back. It was held that the parties must be supposed to have had the previous debt in view, and that the creditor had therefore notice that the firm name was a mere accommodation. Moynahan v. Hanaford, 42 Mich. 329.

In Andrews v. Planters' Bank, 7 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 192, 45 Am. Dec. 300, it was held that the burden of proof was upon the holder. See also Bloom v. Helm, 53 Miss. 21. But in Sylverstein v. Atkinson, 45 Miss. 81, it was held that whenever the name of a commercial partnership is upon negotiable paper the firm is prima facie bound, and it devolves upon the member contesting his liability to show the facts which exonerate him. The facts of the case, however, show that there was nothing about the appearance of the note in suit to show that the partnership, one of the makers of the note, signed as surety for the other maker, and the plaintiff appears to have been a bona fide holder without notice.

Taylor*, 13 East 175, threw some doubt upon the question as to the burden of proof, and it appears to have misled Mr. Chitty (Bills and Notes, 13 Am. ed. 48), and induced some of the courts of this country to declare that the English and United States rules were different. Laverty v. Burr, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 529, per Sutherland, J.; Hibbler v. DeForest, 6 Ala. 92, per Goldthwaite, J.; Henderson v. Carveth, 16 U. C. Q. B. 327. But in Leverson v. Lane, 13 C. B. N. S. 278, 106 E. C. L. 278, the question was fully examined, the dictum of Lord Ellenborough overruled, and the rule stated to the same effect as in the text.

Consent—How Proved—General Rule.—Consent may be established by positive proof, or inferred from prior or subsequent acts of the partner whom it is sought to charge. Beach v. State Bank, 2 Ind. 488; Butler v. Stocking, 8 N. Y. 408.

Evidence of subsequent assent must be strong and satisfactory. Slight and unconvincing circumstances will not be sufficient. Wilson v. Williams, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 146, 28 Am. Dec. 518.

Silence.—Mere silence of a nonconsenting partner, after having acquired the knowledge of the existence of such a note, is not of itself assent. Tyree v. Lyon, 67 Ala. 1; Reubin v. Cohen, 48 Cal. 545; Van Dyke v. Seelye, 49 Minn. 557; Elliott v. Dudley, 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 326.

It is not sufficient to prove assent, that the partner whom it sought to bind was present and heard the arrangement between his copartner and the party accommodated, as an accommodation indorsement by the firm's assent cannot be inferred, but must be proved. Mercein v. Andrus, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 461.

Waiver of Notice.—Waiver of notice, indorsed upon the note by a nonconsenting partner, is not a ratification of the note. Marsh v. Thompson Nat. Bank, 2 Ill. App. 217.

Accepting Security.—Where the nonconsenting partner accepted a mortgage to secure the firm from liability on the note guaranteed in the firm name by his copartner, a ratification may be inferred. Clark v. Hyman, 55 Iowa 14, 39 Am. Rep. 160.

Course of Business.—The holder of a note indorsed by a firm, between which and the maker there have been frequent interchanges of accommodation upon bills and notes for a long time, has a right to presume the assent of all the partners. Darling v. March, 22 Me. 184. See Tennessee Bank v. Saffarrans, 3 Humph. (Tenn.) 597; Scott v. Bandy, 2 Head (Tenn.) 197. But see Early v. Reed, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 12.

Ratification Ineffectual as against Existing

Bona Fide Purchaser.—But, since every member of a mercantile firm has the power to accept, make, draw, or indorse business paper for partnership purposes, a bona fide holder for value without notice has the right to presume that the firm name was signed in the usual course of the partnership business (if it is not apparently out of the scope of such business), and to hold the firm liable upon its signature, although such signature proves in fact to have been affixed by one partner by way of accommodation merely.¹

2. Corporations—No Implied Power to Execute Accommodation Paper.—A corporation has no power to bind itself by becoming an acceptor, maker, or indorser of accommodation paper for the benefit of other persons or corporations,² even though a consideration is received for the loan of its credit upon the paper.³ And since the corporation itself has no such power, of course it cannot authorize its officers to bind it by making or indorsing such paper.⁴

Partnership Creditors.—The ratification by the firm, of the unauthorized act of one partner in signing the contract of suretyship, is ineffectual against existing partnership creditors, being in effect an adoption by the firm of the debts of one partner. Kidder v. Page, 48 N. H. 380.

Holder may Take Renewal Note with Knowledge.—If the holder acquires good title to the firm note as an innocent indorsee, he may take renewal notes of the firm from one partner, and may hold the partnership liable upon such renewal notes, although at the time he took them he had knowledge that the original note was without authority. Hopkins v. Boyd, 11 Md. 107.

Repeated Assumption or Exercise by a Corporation of the power to become an accommodation party does not make such an exercise of power valid. Webster v. Howe Machine Co., 54 Conn. 394.

Indorsement "for Value Received."—An indorsement by a corporation expressed to be "for value received" is not to be deemed an accommodation indorsement. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 9.

Power to Execute Business Paper does not Imply Power to Execute Accommodation Paper.—Even if a corporation has power to become an accommodation party to bills and notes, the fact that its agent is permitted to sign and indorse the corporation name upon business paper does not empower him to sign or

Bona Fide Purchaser.—But as the general power to make and indorse commercial paper is among the implied powers of private corporations, the innocent purchaser for value of commercial paper, signed or indorsed by a corporation, has a right to presume that it is paper made in the usual course of business and binding upon the corporation, and he can, therefore, recover upon a bill or note signed by a corporation to accommodate some other party.¹

Notice of Accommodation Character.—The form of the instrument may, however, show that it is accommodation paper. And it has been held that one who in good faith discounts for value, before acceptance, a bill drawn upon a corporation, does so upon the credit of the drawer or indorser, and though the corporation afterwards accepts it, if the acceptance is for the accommodation of the drawer the corporation is not liable thereon.²

3. Agents.—A general power to indorse or make commercial paper on behalf of his principal does not give an agent power to bind his principal by indorsing or issuing accommodation paper.³

indorse accommodation paper. Etna Nat. Bank v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co., 50 Conn. 167; McLellan v. Detroit File Works, 56 Mich. 579.

Corporation Formed from Partnership—Renewal Notes.—Where a corporation is organized from a partnership, notes given by an officer of the corporation in renewal of partnership notes are presumptively accommodation notes given to take up the notes of third parties, and the holders of the partnership notes who receive the corporation notes in renewal are chargeable with notice, and cannot recover, unless they show express authority in the officer who signs the notes. McLellan v. Detroit File Works, 56 Mich. 579.

Cashier of Bank.—The cashier of a bank is not as such presumed to have the power to bind it as an accommodation indorser upon his individual note, and the payee who fails to prove that the cashier had authority to make the indorsement cannot recover against the bank. West St. Louis Sav. Bank v. Shawnee County Bank, 95 U. S. 557.

A cashier has, in general, no power as such to accept or indorse bills and notes for accommodation. Blair v. Mansfield First Nat. Bank, 2 Flipp. (U. S.) 111; Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank v. Troy City Bank, Dougl. (Mich.) 457.

Holder of Checks Certified for Accommodation.—Where a bank certifies a check without funds, for the accommodation of the drawer, a bona fide holder may enforce its payment. Farmers', etc., Bank v. Butchers', etc., Bank, 16 N. Y. 125.

Holder Receiving Accommodation Paper from Corporation's Agent.—If an agent duly authorized to sign "all notes and business paper" of a corporation gives accommodation notes in the name of the company, the corporation, notwithstanding the want of authority of the agent, is liable to a holder in good faith for value before maturity, and such holder cannot recover damages against the agent for his unauthorized issue. Bird v. Daggett, 97 Mass. 494.

Accommodation Paper Executed in Violation of Express Statute.—It seems that accommodation notes executed by a corporation in violation of an express statute are void even in the hands of an innocent purchaser. See Root v. Godard, 3 McLean (U. S.) 102; Hayden v. Davis, 3 McLean (U. S.) 276.

But although by statute it is unlawful for a corporation to appropriate its funds for any purpose not stated in its articles, its accommodation paper is not void in the hands of a bona fide holder for value, unless such paper is expressly declared void by statute. *Farmers' Nat. 4. Married Women.—A married woman, by the common law, could not make, accept, or indorse commercial paper, nor become a surety for her husband or for another.¹ In the statutes of some of the states, wherein a married woman is given power to contract, it is expressly provided that she shall not become an accommodation party to commercial paper.² In other states a married woman is bound by her accommodation indorsement.³

IV. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF PARTIES TO ACCOMMODATION PAPER—1. General Obligations of Parties.—The strict obligations of parties to commercial paper are modified to a certain extent in the case of accommodation parties.

Accommodated Party.—The accommodated party undertakes, impliedly if not expressly, first, that he will provide for the bill or note at its maturity; and second, that he will indemnify the accommodation party in case the latter is compelled to take up the paper.⁴

Accommodation Party.—The accommodation party, on the other hand, by his signature, first, confers a power or authority upon the party accommodated to bind him, the accommodation party, in favor of third persons by the issue of the paper;⁵ and second, when the paper has been negotiated, he becomes bound to the indorsee or holder in accordance with the rules of commercial law and the position of his name upon the instrument,⁶ from the date of the instrument.⁷

2. Position of Party Accommodated—No Right of Action.—The party for whose benefit accommodation paper has been made acquires no right against the indorse promissory notes for his principal, indorses a promissory note with the assent of his principal for the purpose of taking up paper upon which the principal is already liable as accommodation maker or indorser, the principal will be bound. German Nat. Bank v. Studley, 1 Mo. App. 260.

Bona Fide Holder.—The principal may be bound to a bona fide holder without notice. North River Bank v. Aymar, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 262; Bird v. Daggett, 97 Mass. 494; Edwards v. Thomas, 66 Mo. 468; Bank of Commerce v. Cohen (Supreme Ct.), 26 N. Y. St. Rep. 637.

Married Woman Bound to Accommodation Indorser.—A married woman is liable to an accommodation indorser of her note who has been compelled to take up the instrument at maturity. Scott v. Otis, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 33.

4. Reynolds v. Doyle, 1 M. & G. 753, 39 E. C. L. 638; Sleigh v. Sleigh, 5 Exch. 514; Jefferson County v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 66 Iowa 385; Lockwood v. Twitchell, 146 Mass. 623.

Express Promise to Indemnify.—Where there is an express promise to indemnify the accommodation party, he may still sue upon the promise implied in law, and if there is anything in the written promise to contradict the implication of the latter, the defendant may show it, Gibbs v. Bryant, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 118.

When Contract of Indemnity Takes Effect.—The contract of indemnity takes effect from the date of the accommodation party's contract, and the debt of the accommodated party is contracted at that time. Byers v. Franklin Coal Co., 106 Mass. 131.

5. Smith v. Wyckoff, 3 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 77; Michigan Ins. Co. v. Leavenworth, 30 Vt. 11. See Williams v. Banks, 11 Md. 198. See also supra, this title, Inception of the Contract.

Promise to Accept for Accommodation.—It has been said that a promise to accept for accommodation merely, renders the promisor liable to the promisee who has drawn a bill upon the strength of the promise, even though it remains unnegotiated in his hands. Ilsey v. Jones, 12 Gray (Mass.) 260. But this may be doubted. See supra, this title, Inoperative until Negotiated.

6. See infra, this title, Successive Accommodation Parties; Holders; Presentment and Notice.

Guarantee Capacity of Prior Parties.—An accommodation indorser, like the indorser of ordinary business paper, guarantees the capacity of prior parties to contract. Edmunds v. Rose, 51 N. J. L. 547.

7. Williams v. Banks, 11 Md. 198.

Accommodation Party Within Statute of Fraudulent Conveyances.—A voluntary conveyance made by an accommodation party to a bill or note is fraudulent as to the holders of the instrument. Pashby v. Mandigo, 42 Mich. 172; Primrose v. Browning, 56 Ga. 369.

So also if made while the instrument was still unnegotiated. Williams v. Banks, 11 Md. 198. See the title FRAUDULENT SALES AND CONVEYANCES.

accommodation party,¹ since as between them there is no consideration, a fact which is always a defense to a suit upon negotiable paper between the immediate parties.²

Accommodation Instrument Given to a Partner.—Where a bill or note has been made, accepted, or indorsed for the benefit of one of the members of a firm, the firm, although purchasers for value before maturity, cannot maintain an action thereon against the accommodation party, because the position of the firm can be no better than that of the partner who is the accommodated party.³

3. Rights of Accommodation Party after Payment.—a. AGAINST PARTY ACCOMMODATED.—(1) Indemnity—Generally.—When the accommodation party has been compelled to pay the instrument, the party accommodated becomes, in consequence of the implied contract of indemnity, a debtor of the accommodation party, and the latter has a right of action against the former.⁴ But this

Illustrations.—Where the drawee of a bill accepts at the request of the drawer for the accommodation of the payee, the payee cannot recover in an action against the acceptor. Thompson v. Clublely, 1 M. & W. 212.

Where one of two makers of a note signs the instrument for the accommodation of the payee, the latter cannot recover upon the note, although there was a consideration as to the other maker. Weeks v. Bussell, 8 Wash. 440.

Draft Accepted with the Intention of Accommodating Plaintiff.—Where it appeared that the defendant, sued as the acceptor of a certain draft, had accepted with the intention of accommodating the payee, the plaintiff in the action, and the payee had afterwards received the draft as collateral security for an antecedent debt, it was held that the plaintiff was not a bona fide holder for value; that he took subject to the equities which might be asserted by the defendant, and that he was not entitled to recover. Yale v. Dart (C. Pl.), 19 N. Y. Supp. 389; Messmore v. Meyer, 56 N. J. L. 31.

Accommodation Paper as to Part.—Where the drawee, when a bill for £19. 5s. was presented to him for acceptance, agreed to accept for £10, but upon being urged by the payee accepted for the whole sum, for the accommodation of the payee, and at maturity paid £10 upon the bill, it was held in a suit by the payee against the acceptor that the former was not entitled to recover, since as between them it was an acceptance for £10 only. Darnell v. Williams, 2 Stark. 166, 3 E. C. L. 361.

Burden of Proof.—The burden is upon the maker sued upon a note to establish that he signed for the accommodation of the suing holder. Weill v. Trosclair, 42 La. Ann. 171; Crosbie v. Leary, 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 312; Bower v. Hastings, 36 Pa. St. 285.

Firm Affected with Notice of Partner.—In Quinn v. Fuller, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 224, Dewey, J., said: "As one of the parties, who must have been a plaintiff if the action had been brought for the firm, is shown to have no right to recover, his coplaintiff and partner is affected with notice of the want of consideration and want of equity * * *, and the action wholly fails."

4. Nelson v. Richardson, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 307.

Payment by Accommodation Acceptor before Maturity.—Payment before maturity by a drawee who has accepted for the accommodation of the drawer is a payment in disregard of the terms of the accommodated party's contract of indemnity, for he contracts to indemnify only in case he fails to meet the obligation at maturity, and, as the consideration of the instrument may be shown between the acceptor and the drawer, the accommodation party who has paid the bill before maturity may be defeated in an action against the maker by proof that the consideration has failed. Stark v. Alford, 49 Tex. 277.

Accommodation Party Paying without Notice.—As to the right of an accommodation party relation does not arise until payment has been actually made;¹ and the statute of limitations begins to run from that date.²

(2) Accommodation Makers and Acceptors.—Where the accommodation party is the acceptor of a bill of exchange, or the maker of a promissory note his right to be saved harmless after payment cannot be worked out by an action upon the instrument, since in such a case payment by him extinguishes the security, but he may bring an action against the party accommodated directly upon his implied contract to indemnify.³

to recover upon a bill which he has paid without notice, see infra, this title, Presentment and Notice.

Right to Recover Defeated by Fraud.—Where it appears that the person to whom the accommodation party paid the instrument was not himself entitled to receive payment by reason of the fact that he was not a bona fide holder for value; or where, although the person to whom payment was made was a bona fide holder, the accommodation party making payment is himself a party to fraud in the procurement of the instrument, the accommodation party's right to recover an indemnity of the party accommodated is defeated. Erie Boot, etc., Co. v. Eichenlaub, 127 Pa. St. 164.

Where, however, the accommodation party signed in good faith without knowledge of fraud, he may recover after payment, though he paid with knowledge. Beckwith v. Webber, 78 Mich. 390.

H. 283, 55 Am. Dec. 153; Suydam v. Combs, 15 N. J. L. 133; Planters' Bank v. Douglass, 4 Head (Tenn.) 699.

Accommodation Party not Holder until Payment.—In Van Duzer v. Howe, 21 N. Y. 531, Denio, J., said: "In inquiring at what stage of a transaction respecting a negotiable bill or note it became operative as commercial paper, successive indorsements are not necessarily regarded as separate transfers of the paper, but the inquiry is, in whose hands it first became available in a sense which would enable that party to maintain an action upon it against the prior parties. One who indorses for the accommodation of a prior party does not thereby become the holder of the bill, nor can he maintain an action upon it until he has taken it up by paying the amount to a subsequent purchaser."

Attachment Issued by Accommodation Party.—An attachment issued by accommodation acceptors against the drawer of a bill before they have been obliged to pay it, is invalid, and is not rendered valid by a subsequent payment of the instrument. Read v. Ware, 2 La. Ann. 498; Todd v. Shouse, 14 La. Ann. 428; Henderson v. Thornton, 37 Miss. 448, 75 Am. Dec. 70. See, generally, the title ATTACHMENT.

Evidence of Payment.—The fact that the bill is in the accommodation acceptors' hands is not proof of payment, for the instrument may never have been in circulation, but the fact of possession by the acceptor, coupled with proof that the instrument has been in circulation, raises a presumption of payment, and the same presumption is raised by a receipt upon the back of the bill, proved to be in the handwriting of a person entitled to demand payment upon it. Pfiel v. Vanbatenberg, 2 Campb. 439. See Landrum v. Brookshire, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 252; Allen v. Mathews, 1 Stew. (Ala.) 273.

In Texas it has been held that the action by an accommodation acceptor who has paid the bill is grounded upon the instrument, and that the statute of limitations applicable is that of contracts in writing, and that where the bill is payable upon demand, the time begins to run from the date of the bill. Sublett v. McKinney, 19 Tex. 438.

Accommodation Maker.—Wheeler v. Young, 143 Mass. 143.

The accommodation maker of a note, who has been obliged to pay the instrument, may recover the amount in an action for money paid, against the estate of the accommodated party after the decease of the latter. Bliss v. Plummer (Mich., 1894), 61 N. W. Rep. 263.

Surety Drawers.—The promise to indemnify is implied from one who signs a bill as a mere surety, to the same extent as from the drawer who is in fact the principal, and this although the relations of the parties are known to the accommodation acceptor.¹ But in New York it is held that where the surety drawer signs the instrument "as surety" the accommodation acceptor cannot look to him for reimbursement.²

Where the accommodation maker of a promissory note for the benefit of the payee discounts the instrument, whether the maker could or could not sustain an action against him directly upon his indorsement, the latter is in good conscience bound to pay or to provide for the payment of the debt. Owens v. Miller, 29 Md. 158.

Acceptor supra Protest.—An acceptor supra protest who takes up and pays the bill for the honor of the drawer may recover against the accommodation acceptor of the bill. Ex p. Wackerbarth, 5 Ves. Jr. 574; In re Overend, L. R. 6 Eq. 344 (overruling Ex p. Lambert, 13 Ves. Jr. 179). See Mertens v. Winnington, 1 Esp. 113; Benedict v. De Groot, 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 125.

But Ex p. Lambert, 13 Ves. Jr. 179, has been followed in some courts in this country, and it has been held that where a third party takes up an overdue bill for the honor of the drawer he releases the accommodation acceptor. McDowell v. Cook, 6 Smed. & M. (Miss.) 420, 45 Am. Dec. 289; Gazzam v. Armstrong, 3 Dana (Ky.) 554.

Acceptor's Right of Action Founded on Subrogation.—In Sublett v. McKinney, 19 Tex. 438, it was maintained that the accommodation acceptor's right to sue the drawer after payment is founded not upon an implied contract of indemnity, but upon subrogation to the rights of the holder whom he has paid. In delivering the opinion of the court Wheeler, J., said: "The doctrine that the plaintiff must sue upon the implied contract is, to say the least, quite technical, and is confined in its application to courts which recognize the distinctions of forms of action. Our law does not recognize these distinctions, but the plaintiff must sue upon his case; and the writing certainly constitutes a very material and essential part of that case. The mere fact of payment does not raise a promise by implication. No promise to indemnify is implied, except it be upon request, and that request in this case is in writing: so the writing is the foundation of the promise; and, discarding technical niceties, it may be said to be the ground of the action. It gives rise to the promise which, in compliance with the request, springs out of and is grounded upon it. An accommodation acceptor who has been obliged to pay the bill, though primarily liable to the payee, as between himself and the drawer, is entitled to be regarded in the light of a surety, and has equal claims upon the aid of a court of equity to enforce his rights against the maker, with any other surety who has paid the debt of his principal. It is the doctrine of the civil law, and it was the doctrine of the Court of Chancery in England in the time of Lord Hardwicke, that the surety is entitled, upon payment of the debt of the principal, not only to have the full benefit of all the collateral securities, both of an equitable and legal nature, which the creditor has taken as additional pledge for his debt, but he is entitled to be substituted, as to the very debt itself, to the creditor, and to have it assigned to him." But compare Stark v. Alford, 49 Tex. 277.

Production of Bill.—Where the acceptor is prepared to prove the admission, by the drawer, of the fact essential to make out his right of recovery, it seems that the production of proof of the drawing of the bill would altogether dispense with it, since the bill is not the foundation of the action, and is merely evidence. Irby v. Brigham, 9 Humph. (Tenn.) 750. But compare Sublett v. McKinney, 19 Tex. 438.

Interest.—The acceptor can recover, upon his implied contract of indemnity, only legal and not conventional interest. Martin v. Muncy, 40 La. Ann. 190. See Stanley v. McElrath, 86 Cal. 449.

Bill by Executor, Accepted for Accommodation.—A bill of exchange, drawn by G. S., with the addition of the words "executor of S. S.," is the personal contract of the drawer; and an accommodation acceptor who pays the bill has no claim against the estate. Kirkman v. Benham, 28 Ala. 501.

Action against Accommodation Drawer.—Where an acceptor without funds, who has paid the bill at maturity, brings an action against the drawer to recover the amount expended, it is no defense to the drawer that he drew the bill for the accommodation of the payee, and that it was understood between himself and the acceptors that the payee was to provide for the draft; but the drawer is responsible to the acceptor, as he would have been to the holder whom the acceptor has paid. Soery v. Friend, 12 La. Ann. 579.

2. Griffith v. Reed, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 502, 34 Am. Dec. 267; Suydam v. Westfall, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 211, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 205; Wing v. Terry, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 160; Wright v. Garlinghouse, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 474, 26 N. Y. 539.

New York.—In Griffith v. Reed, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 502, 34 Am. Dec. 267, the defendant signed as "surety," and it was held that the plaintiff, an acceptor for accommodation who had paid the bill, could not look to him for indemnity.

In Wing v. Terry, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 160, it was held that the rule established in Griffith v. Reed, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 502, 34 Am. Dec.

(3) Accommodation Indorsers—Right of Action.—The accommodation indorser who has paid an instrument is entitled to bring an action against the party accommodated, either upon the instrument or for money paid.¹

267, would apply even though there were an express promise on the part of the surety drawer to indemnify, and such express promise was held void under the statute of frauds. It seems doubtful, however, whether this case is not impliedly overruled by Suydam v. Westfall, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 205, and the interpretation given to that case in Wright v. Garlinghouse, 26 N. Y. 539.

In Suydam v. Westfall, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 211, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 205, one W. appeared upon certain bills as a drawer. In truth he signed merely as a surety for the other drawers, but his relation as surety did not appear upon the instrument, although it was known to the acceptor. W.'s name was added at the request of the acceptor, who, it appears, annexed that condition to his agreement to accept. It was held in the Supreme Court, Suydam v. Westfall, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 211, that the doctrine of Griffith v. Reed, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 502, 34 Am. Dec. 267, applied, and that the acceptor could not look to W. The Court for the Correction of Errors, however, reversed the decision of the Supreme Court, and held that under the circumstances W. was responsible to the acceptor. Suydam v. Westfall, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 205.

The reasons stated upon pronouncing the opinion in this case are apparently broad enough to overturn Griffith v. Reed, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 502, 34 Am. Dec. 267, although that case was not formally overruled.

In Wright v. Garlinghouse, 27 Barb. (N. Y.) 474, the Supreme Court, considering Griffith v. Reed, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 502, 34 Am. Dec. 267, to have been overruled by Suydam v. Westfall, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 205, held that where J. had signed a bill as "surety," and the plaintiff without J.'s knowledge had signed as "surety for the above surety," the plaintiff who had reimbursed the accommodation acceptors and had been paid by them, could recover from J. the amount so paid. The Court of Appeals, however, in Wright v. Garlinghouse, 26 N. Y. 539, reversed the decision of the Supreme Court, holding that under the decision in Griffith v. Reed, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 502, 34 Am. Dec. 267, J. was not liable to reimburse the acceptors, and consequently that he was not liable to the plaintiff. Griffith v. Reed, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 502, 34 Am. Dec. 267, was declared to be a binding precedent in similar cases, that is, apparently, where the surety drawer signs expressly as surety; and Suydam v. Westfall, 2 Den. (N. Y.) 205, was distinguished upon the facts of that case, as stated above.

No Action in Assumpsit.—It is held in Pennsylvania that where an accommodation indorser has paid the instrument at maturity he must sue upon the note and not in assumpsit. Kennedy v. Carpenter, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 344.

Part Payment by Accommodation Indorser.—Where the accommodation indorser makes only a part payment upon the instrument, his right of recovery is upon the implied contract of indemnity only, and not upon the instrument. Sleigh v. Sleigh, 5 Exch. 514.

Accommodation Indorser not Compelled to Resort to Collaterals.—An accommodation indorser who has taken security from the accommodated party for his indemnity is not compelled to resort to the security when he has paid the instrument, but may sue upon the implied promise to indemnify, unless it has been agreed that he shall look only to the security. Cornwall v. Gould, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 444.

See infra, this title, Accommodation Party as Surety; Subrogation to Creditor's Securities.

Takes Free from Counter Claim.—Where A. indorses a note for the accommodation of the maker, and is obliged to pay it at maturity to the bank which has discounted it, he succeeds to the rights of the bank although he took the instrument when overdue, and may recover of the maker, although the latter has a set-off which he might have asserted against the payee of the note in an action brought by the payee, and although the state of affairs between the maker and the payee was known to A. when he indorsed. Barker v. Parker, 10 Gray (Mass.) 339; Flint v. Schomberg, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 532.

Payment after Maturity, by Third Party.—G. made a promissory note payable to D.; at the request of the plaintiff, who was not a party to the instrument, O. indorsed the note and procured it to be discounted at a certain bank. Upon the failure of G. to pay the note at maturity, the plaintiff, considering himself honorably bound to O., paid and took it up from the bank. It was held that the plaintiff acquired all the rights of the bank, which was the bona fide holder of the note, and that he could enforce it against the defendants,—the maker and first indorser. Benedict v. DeGroot, 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 125.

Accommodation Indorsement for Partner—Recovery against Firm.—Where it appeared that C. indorsed a note made by T. H., who was a member of the firm of H. C. & Co.; that C.'s indorsement was for the accommodation of T. H.; that said note was then indorsed by F. H., another member of said firm, and lastly by the firm of H. C. & Co.; that the note was then discounted for the benefit of the firm; and that C., after the maturity and dishonor of the note, was compelled to take up the instrument,—it was held, in an action by C.

Amount of Recovery—Indemnity Merely.—As to the amount of recovery in such an action the authorities are not in accord. Some cases hold that the accommodation indorser is entitled to recover only such an amount as will indemnify him for the loss which he has suffered by reason of making payment, inasmuch as his relation to the party accommodated is as between themselves that of a surety.¹

Face Value of Instrument.—But it is held that the accommodation indorser taking up a promissory note from a bona fide holder succeeds to all the rights of the latter against the maker of the note, the party accommodated, and may recover the face of the note although he gave only part value for it.²

(4) Right to Costs and Expenses—Costs.—The right of an accommodation acceptor to be indemnified by the drawer extends not only to the amount of the bill, but also to the costs of an action brought against the acceptor thereon and defended by him.³ But costs cannot be recovered where there was evidently no defense to the bill, unless the defense was authorized by the party accommodated.⁴ And in order to recover costs in any case the acceptor must have actually loaned his credit to the other party; it is not sufficient that he was an acceptor without consideration.⁵ The maker or indorser of an accommodation note has been held entitled to costs upon the same principle.⁶

Expenses Incurred in Consequence of Default.—The accommodation party's right to indemnity entitles him to call upon the party accommodated, for all reasonable expenses legitimately incurred in consequence of the latter's default, or for his own protection.⁷ against the firm, that he was entitled to recover the amount so paid, although at the time of his indorsement he had no knowledge whether the note was to be used for partnership purposes or not; but that, had the firm not received the proceeds of the instrument, C. would not have been entitled to recover. Cochran v. Hume, 19 D. C. 517.

Accommodation Guarantor.—The accommodation guarantor of a note, who has been compelled to pay the same upon default of his principal, is entitled to be indemnified by the principal, and the guarantor is subrogated to all the rights of the holder to whom he makes payment. Babcock v. Blanchard, 86 Ill. 165.

Accommodation Indorser not Responsible for Misapplication by Another Indorser.—Where there are two accommodation indorsers upon a note, and one of them receives from the maker the amount of the instrument but fails to apply it, the other indorser who has been compelled to pay may recover of the maker the amount so paid by him on the judgment obtained upon the note. Meek v. Black, 4 Stew. & P. (Ala.) 374.

7. M. being an accommodation indorser upon the notes of T. who had died insolvent, by giving security to the holders for their payment obtained authority from them to commence actions in their names for the purpose of collecting the notes out of the estate of T., and in prosecuting the actions he incurred necessary and reasonable costs and expenses over and above the costs allowed in the judgments. In an action to marshal and distribute the assets of the estate, it was held that M. was entitled to be allowed such costs and expenses. Thompson v. Taylor, 72 N. Y. 32, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 274.

b. RIGHT OF ACCOMMODATION INDORSER AGAINST PRIOR PARTIES.—An accommodation indorser who has been obliged to meet the obligation at its maturity has the full rights of a bona fide holder for value of commercial paper, against all prior parties to the instrument other than the party accommodated.¹

4. Successive Accommodation Parties.—a. RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES GENERALLY—Liable in Order of Names.—It is the established rule that the parties to ordinary commercial paper negotiated for value in the regular course of business are liable to each other in succession as their names appear upon the instrument, the acceptor of a bill or the maker of a note being the principal debtor, and the indorsers being liable severally in the order in which their names are written.² The same rule applies, in the absence of special agreement, to successive accommodation parties, and a subsequent accommodation indorser who has been compelled to meet the obligation may maintain an action upon the instrument against any prior accommodation party and recover the whole amount paid,³ although he knew that the latter's Accommodation Party Subrogated to Rights of Holder on Payment.—In Beckwith v. Webber, 78 Mich. 390, the plaintiff indorsed a certificate of deposit for the accommodation of one T. in whose favor it was issued. The certificate was given in part payment for a forged check, but the plaintiff when he indorsed acted in good faith and without knowledge of the original fraud. The certificate was protested, and the plaintiff paid it with knowledge of its fraudulent inception, and brought suit against the bank which issued it. It was held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover; that upon his indorsement made in good faith he assumed the liability of an indorser of commercial paper, and that upon payment he was subrogated to all the rights of the bank cashing the paper, against the drawers and prior indorsers of the paper; that the status of the plaintiff when he made the indorsement, and the equities which then controlled and protected his rights, continued until he was fully reimbursed for the payment made, unaffected by after-acquired knowledge concerning the fraud.

Accommodation Party Taking up Note at Less than its Face Value.—An accommodation indorser who at maturity takes up a note from a holder, paying less than its face value therefor, can recover from its prior indorser only the amount which he has actually paid, and if the accommodation indorser after maturity reissues the note his transferee succeeds only to his rights. Bethune v. McCrary, 8 Ga. 114. See supra, this title, Rights of Accommodation Party after Payment; Against Party Accommodated; Accommodation Indorsers.

Comakers, Codrawers.—The liability to each other of comakers or codrawers on bills and notes, some of whom are principals and others sureties as between themselves, applies more appropriately to the matter of suretyship as applied to bills and notes generally. See the titles BILLS AND NOTES; SURETYSHIP.

Irregular Indorsers.—Where several persons write their names upon the back of a note or bill before delivery, for the accommodation of the drawer, they are to be considered as cosureties, and in the absence of special agreement are not liable to one another as prior and subsequent indorsers. *Camp v. signature was given for accommodation merely.¹

Reason for the Rule.—The reason for the rule holding accommodation parties liable in the order of their names is, that each indorser is presumed to have indorsed upon the faith of all prior signatures, and consequently he is entitled to hold the prior parties responsible.²

b. WHEN COSURETIES — CONTRIBUTION.—It follows that successive accommodation parties, acceptor and indorser, maker and indorser, or successive indorsers, are not to be considered as cosureties, and therefore they are not entitled to contribution among themselves unless they specially agree that they are to be bound jointly and not severally,³ but where such an agree-

Indorser Bona Fide Holder after Payment.—An accommodation indorser who pays the note at its maturity to the bank where it was discounted, and gets possession of it, is a bona fide holder for value, and may recover the amount of the note from the accommodation maker thereof. Rhinehart v. Schall, 69 Md. 352.

Indorser may Assign.—The accommodation indorser taking up such a paper may assign it as collateral security for a pre-existing debt. McCarty v. Roots, 21 How. (U. S.) 432.

Indorser Receiving Part of Proceeds.—The fact that the last accommodation indorser receives part of the proceeds of the note when discounted, in payment of a debt due to him by the maker, will not change the relation of liability between the indorsers. Youngs v. Ball, 9 Watts (Pa.) 139; Gillespie v. Campbell, 39 Fed. Rep. 724.

Cannot Maintain Assumpsit.—An accommodation indorser cannot sue an accommodation maker upon an implied contract to indemnify, since as between them there is no such contract implied. Cornwall v. Gould, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 444.

Accommodation Acceptor and Drawer.—An accommodation acceptor may, after taking up the bill, hold the accommodation drawer responsible, for the acceptor succeeds to the rights of the holder to whom he has made payment. Loery v. Friend, 12 La. Ann. 579.

Agreement between Accommodation Indorsers that One will Protect Notes.—Where one of two accommodation indorsers upon a note indorses under an agreement by the other indorser to pay or protect the notes out of funds due and to become due to the makers of the instrument, the latter indorser, after payment, cannot bring an action against the former indorser. Hawley v. McCredy, 54 Cal. 388.

Where there are two indorsers upon a note for the accommodation of the drawer, and the drawer provides the second indorser with means to pay the note, but this is without the knowledge of the first indorser, the drawer and second indorser may subsequently agree to appropriate the means to another purpose. But if the second indorser has promised the first that the means provided shall be used to satisfy the note, and thereby lured him into inaction, the promise creates an equity which will support an action by the first indorser. Price v. Trusdell, 28 N. J. Eq. 200.

Burden of Proof.—The burden of proving such an agreement is upon the prior indorser who seeks the benefit of it. Hogue v. Davis, 8 Gratt. (Va.) 4.

Subsequent Agreement Requires Consideration.—An understanding that the successive indorsers are cosureties, entered into subsequently to the time of making the indorsements, especially after the liability of the parties has become fixed by judgment, is in the nature of a new contract, and in the absence of a new consideration will not support an action for contribution by a prior against a subsequent indorser. Druhe v. Christy, 10 Mo. App. 566; Pfluger v. Wilshusen (C. Pl.), 17 N. Y. Supp. 516. See Dygert v. Gros, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 506.

Securities Given between Cosureties.—Where the indorsers of the notes of a corporation enter into an agreement to share the liability thereon as cosureties, and each executes to a trustee a mortgage as security for the provisions of his agreement, the holders of outstanding notes of the corporation are not entitled, upon the corporation becoming insolvent, to enforce the mortgages for their own benefit, inasmuch as the trust was created not for the benefit of the creditors, but solely for that of the parties to the agreement; and as it imposes no primary liability upon the latter, no liability whatever arises upon the mortgages until the company fails to pay the note at maturity and one of the parties to the agreement pays a portion of such note and another party thereto fails to pay his equal share or fails to repay the party so paying his aliquot part of any payment made. Seward v. Huntington, 94 N. Y. 104; Hampton v. Phipps, 108 U. S. 260.

In New Jersey a contrary doctrine prevails, and a parol agreement for a joint liability cannot be shown. Johnson v. Ramsey, 43 N. J. L. 279, 39 Am. Rep. 580, overruling Johnson v. Martinus, 9 N. J. L. 144, 17 Am. Dec. 464.

3. Circumstances Showing Joint Liability.—The fact that two indorsers paid in moieties a note which they had indorsed for the maker's accommodation, and that three years elapsed before the subsequent indorser brought suit to recover the money paid by him, furnishes sufficient evidence that the indorsement by both was joint, and each having paid what in that case each would be compellable to pay, no recovery can be had by the subsequent against the prior indorser. Talcott v. Cogswell, 3 Day (Conn.) 512. See Denton v. Lytle, 4 Bush (Ky.) 597.

P. made a promissory note payable to C.; F. indorsed for P.'s accommodation; C. then indorsed above F. for P.'s accommodation; at maturity C. paid the note and brought action against F. thereon. It was held that the defendant was liable as accommodation promisor and not as indorser, that the object of the parties was to become sureties for P., and that P. and C. were to be considered as cosureties, and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover of the defendant one half of the sum he had paid, deducting whatever sum he had received or could realize on certain mortgages held by him on property of P. as security for P.'s liability to him. Currier v. Fellows, 27 N. H. 366. But compare Clapp v. Rice, 13 Gray (Mass.) 403, 74 Am. Dec. 639.

The maker of a promissory note applied separately to three of his friends to indorse it for his accommodation; each promised to indorse if the others would do so; nothing was said about the order of indorsement, nor was there any understanding about sharing the liability further than was implied in their understanding that the note was to have the triple indorsement to complete the transaction, and in the condition made by each that he would sign only if the others did so; the note was sent around to them to be signed severally as they happened to be found, without any design as to precedence of signatures. It was held that upon these facts the jury was justified in finding that the indorsement was joint, and that upon payment the three were liable to contribute as cosureties. Hagerthy v. Phillips, 83 Me. 336. See Macdonald v. Whitfield, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 733.

Circumstances Insufficient to Show Joint Liability.—Where the defendant had indorsed several notes for the accommodation of the same party, the fact that the names of the parties in the several notes were not always the same was held to raise no presumption that the obligation was joint and not several. Palmer v. Field, 76 Hun (N. Y.) 229.

The fact that A indorsed a bill for the accommodation of the drawer at the request of B, another accommodation indorser, does not make A and B joint indorsers. Shaw v. Knox, 98 Mass. 214.

Taking a joint judgment by several accommodation indorsers of a promissory note, from the makers, for the indemnity of the indorsers, will not have the effect of creating an implied agreement for a joint liability. Dygart v. Gros, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 506.

English Rule.—In England it has been decided that while the liability among themselves of successive indorsers is prima facie that implied in the order of their names, yet where several persons become accommodation indorsers upon a note, in pursuance of an agreement between themselves that they will mutually become sureties for the maker of the note, the presumption is that they are equally liable and are entitled to contribution among themselves. Macdonald v. Whitfield, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 733. In this case Lord Watson, in delivering the opinion of the Privy Council, referred to the cases of M'Donald v. Magruder, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 470, and Ianson v. Paxton, 23 U. C. C. P. 439, and disapproved the rule laid down in them and generally received in the United States, that accommodation indorsers will be liable in the order of their names unless it has been specially stipulated that they are to be liable as cosureties. See also Reynolds v. Wheeler, 10 C. B. N. S. 561, 100 E. C. L. 561.

1. North Carolina.—Daniel v. McRae, 2 Hawks (N. Car.) 590, 11 Am. Dec. 787; Smith v. Smith, 1 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 173; Gomez v. Lazarus, 1 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 205; Hatcher v. McMorine, 3 Dev. (N. Car.) 228; Richards v. Simms, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 48; Dawson v. Pettway, 4 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 396.

It has been laid down that indorsers upon accommodation paper for the benefit of a third person, where there is no specific agreement between them, are to be considered as cosureties. So that where A and B became, at different times, indorsers on a note made for C, on which the latter, by discounting it at a bank, received the money, it was held that B, against whom the bank recovered, was entitled to call upon a prior indorser for only one half. Daniel v. McRae, 2 Hawks (N. Car.) 590, 11 Am. Dec. 787. See also Hatcher v. McMorine, 3 Dev. (N. Car.) 228.

In Smith v. Smith, 1 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 173, it was held that the rule of cosuretyship established in Daniel v. McRae did not, in the absence of special agreement, extend to a surety maker and accommodation indorser.

In Gomez v. Lazarus, 1 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 205, it was held that where there was no agreement between an accommodation acceptor and an accommodation indorser to change the order of their liability appearing on the face of the transaction, the acceptor stands prior in liability to the indorser, and cannot call upon the latter for contribution.

In Richards v. Simms, 1 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 48, Daniel v. McRae, 2 Hawks (N. Car.) 590, 11 Am. Dec. 787, was followed; but the court declared that although, upon the principle of stare decisis, the judges all regarded that decision as binding, yet were the question res integra the court was unanimously of the opinion that the principle laid down in that case should not be sanctioned.

In Dawson v. Pettway, 4 Dev. & B. (N. Car.) 396, it was held that the accommodation indorser of a single bill could not be considered a cosurety with one who signs the instrument as co-obligor with the principal. In this case Gaston, J., reviewed all the preceding cases, and stated the limitations of the rule established in Daniel v. McRae, 2 Hawks (N. Car.) 590, 11 Am. Dec. 787, as follows: That case "lays down a rule from which, whether originally right or wrong, we cannot depart without violence to the understanding and practice of the community, which have conformed to it; but it is a rule confined to prior and subsequent indorsers upon accommodation paper. It does not establish, nor was it intended nor has it been understood to establish, the like rule as between the maker and indorser, or the acceptor and indorser, or others liable in different characters, upon such paper. And to introduce it among these would be to violate principles, to produce confusion, and to contradict the general usages of the commercial world."

2. Ohio.—Douglas v. Waddle, 1 Ohio 413, 13 Am. Dec. 630; Williams v. Bosson, 11 Ohio 67; Kelley v. Few, 18 Ohio 441; Barnet v. Young, 29 Ohio St. 7.

In Douglas v. Waddle, 1 Ohio 413, 13 Am. Dec. 630, it was held that the accommodation indorsers of promissory notes are cosureties.

In Williams v. Bosson, 11 Ohio 67, the court refused to extend the rule to accommo-and possibly in Vermont,¹ and it is the rule established by statute in Georgia,² and appears to prevail, in the absence of special agreement, in California.³

Accommodation Indorser and Surety Maker.—The same rule as to the absence of cosuretyship where there is no express agreement as to joint liability applies between an accommodation indorser and the surety maker of a note.⁴

5. Holders of Accommodation Paper—a. RIGHTS OF BONA FIDE HOLDERS—(1) General Statement.—When accommodation paper has passed in the regular course of business into the hands of a bona fide holder for value, it acquires all the properties of business paper; that is, paper which, as between the original parties, is founded upon a valuable consideration.⁵

(2) Transferee before Maturity—(a) Generally.—It follows, therefore, that one who has in good faith taken an accommodation bill or note before maturity, for value and in the regular course of business, may enforce it against prior accommodation parties, whether acceptors, drawers, makers, or indorsers, although he knew when he received the instrument that it was accommodation paper.⁶

dation indorsers of a bill of exchange, holding such indorsers to be liable to each other in the order in which they became parties to the instrument.

In Barnet v. Young, 29 Ohio St. 7, it was held that the accommodation drawers and the accommodation acceptors of a bill for the benefit of the payee are not cosureties, nor liable to contribution. In this case the court, by Gilmore, J., after citing Douglas v. Waddle, 1 Ohio 413, 13 Am. Dec. 630, and Williams v. Bosson, 11 Ohio 62, said: "It is to be regretted that the general rules of the commercial law are not applicable alike to, both classes of business paper in this state and that a difference in the mere form of the instrument used should operate a difference in the rights and liabilities of accommodation parties thereto as between themselves. Still, the distinction is clearly established in the cases above cited, and it would be unwise now to attempt to break it down."

1. Vermont.—Pitkin v. Flanagan, 23 Vt. 160, 56 Am. Dec. 61, lays down the rule that successive accommodation indorsers are to be treated as cosureties; but this case would seem to have been overruled by the doctrines laid down in the subsequent cases. Farmers', etc., Bank v. Rathbone, 26 Vt. 19, 58 Am. Dec. 200; Keith v. Goodwin, 31 Vt. 268, 73 Am. Dec. 345; Briggs v. Boyd, 37 Vt. 534.

2. Georgia.—Freeman v. Cherry, 46 Ga. 14; Hull v. Myers, 90 Ga. 674.

In Stiles v. Eastman, 1 Ga. 205, it was held that accommodation indorsers are not cosureties, nor liable to contribute. By section 2123 of the Georgia Code of 1868 (section 2151 of the present code) it was enacted that "the form of the contract is immaterial, provided the fact of suretyship exists; hence an accommodation indorser is considered merely as a surety." And it was held in Freeman v. Cherry, 46 Ga. 14, followed in Hull v. Myers, 90 Ga. 674, that this provision was intended to change the rule of law announced in Stiles v. Eastman, 1 Ga. 205, and that it rendered cosureties liable to contribution.

Want of Consideration no Defense, except against Accommodated Parties.—In British N. A. Bank v. Ellis, 6 Sawy. (U. S.) 96, Deady, D. J., said: "A party who makes or indorses a note without consideration, and for the purpose of thereby lending his credit to another, is an accommodation maker or indorser, and cannot make the defense of a want of consideration against any one except the accommodated party. The note is supposed to be taken by third persons upon the credit given to him, and he is expected to pay it. * * * It would not be inconsistent with this defense if the defendants indorsed these notes without consideration for the accommodation of the makers or payee or its indorsee, and, therefore, they may be liable thereon, notwithstanding such want of consideration. The plea, to be a good defense, must meet this phase of the case by denying directly that the defendants were accommodation indorsers, or by stating facts inconsistent therewith."

Accommodation Guarantor.—A guarantor of a promissory note for the accommodation of the holder is liable, under the Iowa statute, to the same extent as an accommodation indorser to a third person to whom the note has in good faith, for a valuable consideration, been transferred, though at the time of taking the note such person had knowledge of the fact that such indorsement or guaranty was without consideration. Jones v. Berryhill, 25 Iowa 290.

Payee of Note or Bill.—The rule protects the payee of a promissory note or bill of exchange taking it with knowledge that it is accommodation paper as between prior parties. Spurgin v. McPheeters, 42 Ind. 527; Israel v. Ayer, 2 S. Car. 344.

The Fact that the Accommodation was Procured by Fraudulent Representations does not affect the rights of an innocent holder against the accommodation party. Humphrey v. Clark, 27 Conn. 383; Von Windisch v. Klaus, lows: The accommodation party, when sued by a subsequent bona fide holder for value who took the paper with knowledge of the real relation to it of such accommodation party, cannot set up as a defense the want of consideration as to himself. Thus expressed, a distinction between accommodation paper and ordinary business paper becomes apparent. The general rule with regard to commercial paper is, that the defendant sued thereon may defend on the ground of want of consideration not only against immediate parties, but against remote parties, who took with knowledge that it was open to this defense.¹ But the party for whose accommodation a bill or note has been drawn, accepted, made, or indorsed, and against whom the defense of want of consideration would be complete, may pass to his transferee for value with knowledge of the nature of the instrument, a perfect title.²

(3) Transferee after Maturity.—(a) Generally.—As a general rule the transferee of overdue commercial paper takes it subject to the equities which attach to the instrument, and succeeds only to the title of his transferor. Thus, where the failure or want of consideration could have been shown as against the transferor it may be shown against his transferee who took the paper after maturity.³ How far this general rule is applicable to the rights of a transferee of overdue accommodation paper, is a matter upon which the courts are not in accord.

(b) Purchaser from Holder for Value.—There is no doubt that if he who holds accommodation paper at maturity can recover thereon, then his right of recovery may be thereafter transferred to another.⁴ The conflict of authority

Understanding that the Maker is not Liable.—Where, at the time the note is discounted, there is a distinct understanding between the maker and the payee, which is stated to the discounting bank, that the maker should incur no liability, he will not be held liable to the bank which has discounted the note. Such paper is not mere accommodation paper, and is, under the circumstances, unenforceable against the maker. Garfield Nat. Bank v. Colwell, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 169; Daggett v. Whiting, 35 Conn. 366. See Corcoran v. Hodges, 2 Cranch (C. C.) 452; Thompson v. Galloway, 5 W. N. C. (Pa.) 383.

But, by what seems to be the better doctrine, such a defense on the part of the acceptor of a bill, or the maker of a note, could not be proved when lying in parol, on the ground that it would violate the rule that parol evidence is inadmissible to vary the terms of a written contract. Davis v. Randall, 115 Mass. 547, 15 Am. Rep. 146; Wright v. Morse, 9 Gray (Mass.) 337, 69 Am. Dec. 291; Abrey v. Crux, L. R. 5 C. P. 37. See Cowles v. Townsend, 31 Ala. 133.

Understanding must be Known to Bank.—Where the defense of an agreement that a particular party should not be liable upon the instrument is admissible, it must appear that the holder had knowledge thereof. Thus, allegations in an answer by the maker of a promissory note, that the note was an accommodation note given to the payee at the request of the bank by which it was discounted, and that the note was given on the distinct understanding that the payee should take it up at maturity, but not stating that such understanding was had with the bank, or that the bank engaged with the maker that he should not incur any liability on the note, do not constitute a defense in an action brought by the bank against the maker. Higgins v. O'Donnell, 68 Hun (N. Y.) 100.

Recovery not Dependent on Accommodation Character of Paper.—In Chester v. Dow, 41 N. Y. 279, Woodruff, J., said: "If the note be not paid at maturity, the contract [with the accommodation indorser] is broken, and if he who then holds it can recover thereon, then his right of recovery may be transferred to another; and the recovery of the latter will be, not because the accommodation indorser undertook that the note should be paid to begins where the paper not yet negotiated by the accommodated party is in his hands at maturity, and is afterwards issued by him.¹

(c) Transferee from Accommodated Party after Maturity—(aa) ENGLISH RULE—Way Enforce Instrument.—It is a well-established rule in England, and in some of the states of the Union, that a transferee of accommodation paper after maturity acquires greater rights than his transferor, and, if he is a holder for value, may enforce the paper against the accommodation party, although he received it with notice from the party accommodated.²

him, or should be paid at some date after it was due, but because a valid cause of action existing in favor of the holder at maturity has been transferred to him."

Limitation of Right.—In such cases it seems that the transferee can recover no more upon the paper than his transferor could have recovered. Dubuque First Nat. Bank v. Werst, 52 Iowa 684.

Growth of the Doctrine in England.—In Tinson v. Francis, 1 Camb. 19, a nisi prius case before Lord Ellenborough in 1807, it was held that the holder of accommodation paper acquired after maturity stands in the same position as the holder of overdue business paper. This decision has been, however, overruled by a series of authorities commencing the following year and uniform to this time. See the cases just preceding.

The first of these cases was Charles v. Marsden, 1 Taunt. 224, decided in 1808 by the Court of Common Pleas. In this case Sir James Mansfield, C.J., said: "He [the holder] receives the bill from the proper hand which was entitled to have possession of it, the person to whom it was payable. It is not necessarily to be inferred because it was an accommodation bill that there was an agreement not to negotiate it after it became due, but if there was such an agreement it was the defendant's own fault that the bill was outstanding, for, even supposing that the drawer had undertaken to provide for the payment when the bill became due, the acceptor had a right to require that it should be given up." In the same case Lawrence, J., said. "In the present case it is to be supposed that the party persuades a friend to accept a bill for him because he cannot lend him money. Would there be any objection if, with the knowledge of the circumstance that this is an accommodation bill, some person should advance money upon it before it was due? Then, what is the objection to his furnishing the money on it after it is due? for there is no reason why a bill may not be negotiated after it is due unless there was an agreement for the purpose of restraining it."

The authority of Charles v. Marsden, 1 Taunt. 224, was followed in Sturtevant v. Ford, 4 M. & G. 101, 43 E. C. L. 61, rather, apparently, upon the doctrine of stare decisis than from assent to the reasoning of the court therein.

In In re Overend, L. R. 6 Eq. 358, the authorities are cited and examined by Malins, V.C., who shows that Charles v. Marsden, 1 Taunt. 224, has always been followed. It is sometimes stated that the effect of the cases of Lazarus v. Cowie, 3 Q. B. 459, and Jewell v. Parr, 13 C. B. 909, 76 E. C. L. 909, 16 C. B. 684, 81 E. C. L. 684, has been to overrule the doctrine of Charles v. Marsden. An examination will show that these cases turn upon a different point, and in no way deprive the transferee of overdue accommodation paper of the right to recover thereon.

In Charles v. Marsden, 1 Taunt. 224, and the cases which follow it, the question was as to the power of an accommodation party to issue a bill or note after its maturity.

In Lazarus v. Cowie, 3 Q. B. 459, and Jewell v. Parr, 13 C. B. 909, 76 E. C. L. 909, 16 C. B. 684, 81 E. C. L. 684, the question was as to the power of such a party to reissue after maturity a bill already paid by him. See infra, this title, Extinguishment.

United States Authorities.—In Miller v. Larned, 103 Ill. 562, it was held that where a certain note was made by H. payable to W., for the purpose of enabling S., who was not a party to the instrument, to raise money thereon, the note was accommodation paper, and that S. having pledged the note to raise money, and paid the debt for which the instrument was pledged after the note had become due, might yet pledge the note again for a fresh debt, inasmuch as the rule that as against an assignee of business paper taken after maturity the maker may defend as successfully as against the original payee, * * * does not apply to accommodation paper.

In Renwick v. Williams, 2 Md. 356, it was held that one who receives an accommodation bill indorsed by the acceptor to him after maturity, but who had no knowledge of the character of the note when he received it, might recover thereon. The court, though

Agreement not to Negotiate after Maturity.—But if there be an agreement express or implied not to negotiate the instrument after maturity, the transferee after maturity cannot recover, and the accommodation character of the paper is itself evidence for the jury of such an agreement.¹

(bb) UNITED STATES RULE—Cannot Enforce Instrument.—The courts of many of the states of the Union have, however, taken a different view of the matter, and have assimilated overdue accommodation paper to overdue business paper. These authorities hold that by the very terms of the instrument the accommodation party lends his credit for a limited time only, that is to say, until the maturity of the instrument; that a person taking the paper after maturity takes with knowledge of this fact; therefore he takes only his transferrer's title, and with no other or greater rights than the transferrer of ordinary business paper in similar circumstances.² The reasoning of these cases seems unanswerable, and the authorities are certainly tending to the doctrine therein announced.³ But, as stated above, in some of the states the English doctrine citing Charles v. Marsden, 1 Taunt. 224, and other English authorities, grounded its decision expressly upon the fact that the plaintiff took without notice.

In Salem First Nat. Bank v. Grant, 71 Me. 374, it was held that the payee of an accommodation note made for his benefit might transfer it after maturity as collateral security for a loan, and that in such a case the maker would have no defense against the holder without some equity in the maker other than the accommodation character of the paper. But in Cummings v. Little, 45 Me. 183, it was stated broadly that the indorsee of a dishonored accommodation note takes it subject to the equities existing between the original parties.

In Seyfert v. Edison, 45 N. J. L. 393, the defendant failed to prove that the note was received after maturity, but the court, by Beasley, C.J., said that the fact that the note came to the plaintiff after dishonor would not have helped the defense, since there was nothing in the terms of the agreement under which the payee took this accommodation that prohibited him from its use after the pay day of the instrument.

1. Parr v. Jewell, 16 C. B. 684, 81 E. C. L. 684.

Suggestions that this would be a sufficient defense are found in the opinion of Lawrence, J., in Charles v. Marsden, 1 Taunt. 224, and in the opinion of Erskine, J., in Sturtevant v. Ford, 4 M. & G. 101, 43 E. C. L. 61; Caruthers v. West, 11 Q. B. 143, 63 E. C. L. 143, is not in conflict. This case arose upon a demurrer to the plea, and the plea which set up an agreement not to negotiate after maturity was held bad, but only upon the ground that there was nothing therein inconsistent with the plaintiff's being a bona fide holder by taking after maturity from one who had become a bona fide holder for value before maturity.

Rhode Island.—Bacon v. Harris, 15 R. I. 599.

Virginia.—Cottrell v. Watkins, 89 Va. 801 (disapproving Davis v. Miller, 14 Gratt. (Va.) 1).

The same view has apparently been taken in other courts where the question has not been directly adjudicated. See Wheeler v. Barret, 20 Mo. 573; Britton v. Bishop, 11 Vt. 70.

Alabama.—In Glasscock v. Smith, 25 Ala. 474, it is laid down that one taking overdue accommodation paper takes it subject to defense against the accommodation party; and in Battle v. Weems, 44 Ala. 105, it was held that where the plaintiff acquired a bill after maturity which had been drawn for the accommodation of the acceptor, and where at the maturity thereof the acceptor was indebted to the drawer in a larger sum than the amount due on the bill, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover.

But in Connerly v. Planters', etc., Ins. Co., 66 Ala. 442, the court seems inclined to revert to the English doctrine that, in the absence of agreement, accommodation notes may be negotiated by the party accommodated after maturity. The English and old New York cases are cited, but no allusion is made to the earlier Alabama authorities.

It should be noted, however, that in Connerly v. Planters', etc., Ins. Co., 66 Ala. 442, favorable to the rights of the transferee after maturity obtains.¹

b. WHO IS BONA FIDE HOLDER—(1) General Rule.—In general, the inquiry as to who is a bona fide holder of accommodation paper is to be determined by the same rule and upon the same principles as the like question in regard to a holder of ordinary business paper.² But the rights of the pledgee of accommodation paper, taken as collateral security for pre-existing debts, demand separate attention.

(2) Pledgee—(a) For Antecedent Debt.—One who takes an accommodation bill or note, given without restriction as to the manner of using it, as collateral security for a pre-existing debt, is entitled to the rights of a holder for value to the extent of the debt for which the paper was pledged, or to the face value thereof.³ This has been held even in some states wherein the there seems to have been no evidence that the accommodation notes in suit were transferred after maturity, so that the remarks of the courts on this subject were apparently unnecessary.

1. See the subdivision immediately preceding.

2. See the title BILLS AND NOTES.

Total Want of Consideration.—Of course one who has received accommodation paper from the party accommodated, without any consideration, is not a holder for value and cannot recover. Millis v. Barber, 1 M. & W. 425.

S. procured M. to make, and J. to indorse, a promissory note for his, S.'s, accommodation; S. then delivered said note to P., who thereupon handed S. a certain sum of money in his hands belonging to S.; P. sued M. and J. upon the note. It was held that as P. had notice of the purpose for which the note was made and indorsed, and as he parted with nothing upon the faith of the transfer to him, he was not entitled to recover, and that his rights were no greater than those of one who borrows a promissory note, as against the lender. Powers v. French, 1 Hun (N. Y.) 582.

Right of Accommodation Party to become Holder.—Undoubtedly an accommodation indorser may become a holder of the instrument by taking it for value from a prior holder before maturity or even after maturity. Sleigh v. Sleigh, 5 Exch. 514; Piney v. McGregory, 102 Mass. 186; Fowler v. Strickland, 107 Mass. 552. See supra, this title, Rights of Accommodation Party after Payment; Accommodation Indorsers; Successive Accommodation Parties.

It has been doubted whether the accommodation maker of a note discounting it for the payee, the party accommodated, becomes entitled to an action thereon against the payee as his indorsee; but in the absence of fraud he may discount the instrument, and the payee will, in equity, be bound to repay him. Owens v. Miller, 29 Md. 144.

Whether Money Advanced upon a Note, a Question for the Jury.—Where a sum is advanced as a balance after the settlement of a prior debt upon several notes, one of which is an accommodation note,—given not to pay an antecedent debt, but to raise money,—it is a proper question for the jury whether any part of the money so advanced, and if so, how much, was advanced upon the accommodation note. Hubbard v. Farrington (Supreme Ct.), 5 N. Y. Supp. 103.

Facts Sufficient to Show Plaintiff not a Bona Fide Holder.—Where it appeared that the cashier of the plaintiff's bank discounted two bills of exchange for the drawer upon the faith of an acceptance by the defendant; that at the time of making the discount the cashier had notice that the defendant's acceptance was for the accommodation of the drawer, and that the drawer had become insolvent since the date of the acceptance; that at the time of the discount, although the drawer was indebted to the bank in an amount exceeding the value of the notes discounted, he received a large consideration from the bank for the transfer of the paper to it; that there was no proof of any authority given to the cashier to discount paper; and that his act in discounting the notes in suit was not ratified by the directors of the bank until after the defendant had informed the cashier of the equities between himself and the drawer,—it was held that the plaintiff was not a bona fide holder and could not recover against the defendant. *Boggs v. mere transfer of negotiable paper as collateral security for an antecedent debt does not render the transferee a holder for value.¹ But other states wherein this doctrine prevails do not regard such a pledgee of accommodation paper as an exception to the general rule.²

(b) Of Diverted Paper.—Even those courts which regard the pledgee of accommodation paper as an exception, hold that if the paper has been diverted from its intended purpose and pledged for an antecedent debt, the pledgee is not to be considered as entitled to the privileges of a holder for value, unless some new consideration has passed.³

What Sufficient Consideration.—The surrender of other collateral security is a sufficient consideration. Park Bank v. Watson, 42 N. Y. 490. See Depeau v. Waddington, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 220, 36 Am. Dec. 216; Goodwin v. Conklin, 85 N. Y. 21. So also is the discontinuance of valid legal proceedings. Boyd v. Cummings, 17 N. Y. 101.

Misapplication.—If one not a party to the bill or note is intrusted with it, indorsed in blank, for the purpose of getting it discounted for the benefit of the maker and payee, and fraudulently appropriates it to his own use by pledging it as security for an existing debt, the maker may set up the want of con-

c. WHEN CHARGEABLE WITH NOTICE OF ACCOMMODATION CHARACTER OF INSTRUMENT—How Far Notice of Accommodation Character Affects Rights.—It has been shown that in general the notice of the fact that the instrument is accommodation paper, or that some of the parties thereto are accommodation parties, does not affect the right of the holder to recover thereon,¹ but this is not always the case. Thus, knowledge of its true character, according to the better doctrine, limits the rights of a transferee after maturity of accommodation paper, and such knowledge may be decisive of the rights to recover upon accommodation paper of a partnership or corporation, or accommodation paper made or indorsed by an agent, or fraudulently put in circulation or diverted from its intended purpose; or in some jurisdictions it may obligate the holder to treat the accommodation party in certain respects as a surety.²

Presumptive Notice.—It is of importance therefore to note that there are certain facts from which notice that the instrument is an accommodation bill or note will be implied.

Indorsed Note in Hands of Maker.—Thus the fact that a promissory note is put into circulation by the maker is notice to the transferee that whatever indorsements were upon the instrument were made for the maker's benefit and not in the ordinary course of business, for in the ordinary course of business the instrument would have passed from the maker to the payee or indorser.³

sideration and the fraudulent diversion as a defense against the holder. Royer v. Keystone Nat. Bank, 83 Pa. St. 248; Carpenter v. Republic Nat. Bank, 106 Pa. St. 170. See Comstock v. Hier, 73 N. Y. 269, 29 Am. Rep. 142.

Paper Procured by Fraudulent Representations.—The defense that the paper was procured from the maker by fraudulent representations may be set up to defeat a recovery by the pledgee of accommodation paper. Cummings v. Boyd, 83 Pa. St. 372; Maynard v. Philadelphia Sixth Nat. Bank, 98 Pa. St. 250. See Tinsdale v. Murray, 9 Daly (N. Y.) 446; Hart v. Palmer, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 523.

Diverted Paper in Payment of Antecedent Debt.—The rule stated in the text applies in New York, even when diverted paper is received in payment of an antecedent debt. Moore v. Ryder, 65 N. Y. 438. In this case Earl, C., said: "In case the holder of diverted paper has not parted with any value, or incurred any binding obligation, or changed his position to his detriment on the faith thereof, he cannot recover thereon against the party defrauded or wronged."

Successive Indorsers.—The same rule is applicable to successive indorsers, and if a note is presented for discount for his own benefit by any person whose name appears thereon previous to the last indorsement, the transaction on its face imports that the indorsement was for accommodation. Mauldin v. Mobile Branch Bank, 2 Ala. 502; Riverside Bank v. Totten (Supreme Ct.), 33 N. Y. St. Rep. 845; Moorehead v. Gilmore, 77 Pa. St. 118, 18 Am. Rep. 435. See *Perry v. Note on Firm by Partner.—It has been held that the fact that a note made by a partner in favor of his firm is, in the hands of the maker, indorsed by the firm, is not conclusive of the accommodation character of the in-

Bill Negotiated by Acceptor or Drawer.—Upon the same principle a bill of exchange being in the hands of the acceptor is evidence to charge the transferee with notice that it was drawn or indorsed for the accommodation of the acceptor.¹ And the fact that a bill accepted or indorsed is put in circulation by the drawer is notice of its accommodation character.²

Irregular Indorsement.—Where one who indorses a note above the payee is liable as an indorser, one who receives the instrument so indorsed from the payee is chargeable with notice that the irregular indorsement was for the accommodation of the maker.³

d. BURDEN OF PROOF—General Rule.—The general rule in regard to commercial paper is, that when the plaintiff has shown a prima facie title he is presumed to be a bona fide holder for value, and the burden is upon the defendant to show the contrary.⁴

Not Shifted by Evidence of Accommodation.—The burden of proof is in no way changed when the defendant has shown that the paper sued upon is accommodation paper, and therefore without consideration as between the original parties.⁵

dorsement, but the question of the character of the paper is for the jury. Wait v. Thayer, 118 Mass. 473. See Redlon v. Churchill, 73 Me. 146.

Note Given by Maker for a Third Person.—Where an indorsed note is given by one of the makers, not for his own benefit, but to take up the note of third parties, the inference does not arise that it is accommodation paper, but the natural presumption is that such maker acts as an agent for the real debtors for whose benefit the old note is to be taken up. Austin v. Vandermark, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 259.

Bill Payable at the House of the Drawer.—The fact that a bill of exchange is made payable at the house of the drawer has been held to charge the holder with notice that it is accommodation paper, since why should the drawer "make the bill payable at his own house, unless he was to provide for it at maturity?" Sharp v. Bailey, 9 B. & C. 44, 17 E. C. L. 329.

Possession by One both Drawer and Payee.—Where the same person is both the drawer and the payee of a bill of exchange, possession by him of the instrument after acceptance is no notice that the bill is accommodation paper, since it is in the natural course of business that as payee he should hold the bill. Columbus Ins., etc., Co. v. First Nat. Bank (Miss., 1894), 15 So. Rep. 138. See also Wait v. Thayer, 118 Mass. 473; Chemical Nat. Bank v. Colwell, 16 Daly (N. Y.) 29.

that such an indorsement is prima facie for the accommodation of the payee, but it may be shown that the indorser's intention was to become surety or guarantor for the maker. Clarke v. Smith, 2 Cal. 605. See Brady v. Reynolds, 13 Cal. 31.

In Millis v. Barber, 1 M. & W. 425, Lord Abinger said: "There is a substantial distinction [between bills given for accommodation only, and cases of fraud], inasmuch as in the former case it is to be presumed that money has been obtained upon the bill. If a man comes into court without any suspicion of fraud, but only as the holder of an accommodation bill, it may fairly be presumed that he is a holder for value. The proof of its being an accommodation bill is no evidence of the want of consideration in the holder. If the defendant says: 'I lent my name to the drawer for the purpose of his raising money upon the bill,' the probability is that money was obtained upon the bill. Unless, therefore, the bill be connected with some fraud, and a suspicion of fraud be raised from its being shown that something has been done with it of an illegal nature, so that it has been clandestinely taken away, or has been lost or stolen (in which cases the holder must show that he gave value for it), the onus probandi is cast upon the defendant."

Former English Rule.—Formerly the rule was otherwise, and proof by the defendant that a bill was originally without consideration threw the onus upon the plaintiff to prove

Paper Fraudulently Circulated.—But when the defendant has shown, in addition, that the instrument was fraudulently put into circulation, the burden is shifted, and the holder must show that he received the instrument for a good consideration and without notice.¹

Paper Diverted.—According to the better authority, simple diversion does not shift the burden of proof to the holder,² but the rule seems to be otherwise in New York.³

c. AMOUNT OF RECOVERY AGAINST ACCOMMODATION ACCEPTOR OR MAKER.—The person paying full value for accommodation paper may recover the full value thereof of the accommodation maker or acceptor, although he took it with knowledge of its true character.⁴ But the courts are not in agreement as to the rights of a holder who has taken paper at less than its face value, or who has upon the security of the paper advanced a sum less than its face value.

Pledges.—It is well settled that where the holder of accommodation paper has received it as security for a debt he can recover thereon in an action against the accommodation maker or acceptor only the amount of the debt for which the instrument was pledged, unless he is accountable to some other person for the surplus.⁵

Where Part Payment of the Debt has been Made.—When part payment of the debt for which the accommodation paper has been pledged has been received by the pledgee he can recover against the accommodation party the only balance unpaid. Rutledge v. Townsend, 38 Ala. 706.

Transferees of Entire Interest.—The rule that the holder's right of recovery against accommodation makers or acceptors is limited to the amount of the consideration which he has given for the instrument is applied in some states to the case of transferees who have purchased the entire interest in the paper for a valuable consideration.¹ But by the better doctrine such a purchaser of accommodation paper is entitled to recover the face value of the instrument, although he gave a less sum therefor.²

amount of the bill, although he cannot recover dividends in excess of the debt due to him by the drawer. Ex p. Bloxham, 6 Ves. Jr. 600 (reversing 5 Ves. Jr. 448); Ex p. Newton, 16 Ch. Div. 330.

Explanation of the Rule.—In Stoddard v. Kimball, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 469, Shaw, C. J., said: "In general, the holder of an indorsed note will be entitled to recover the whole amount of the face of the note, because the presumption of fact, in the absence of counter proof, is, that he gave the full value for it, or that he took it from some other holder for value, to collect the amount, receive a certain part to his own use, and account to the party from whom he took it for the surplus. Having taken it to secure a pre-existing debt, of a less amount, he is a holder for value in his own right, only to the amount of the debt due him. If therefore it appears in proof that the plaintiff is not accountable to any third person for any surplus, then there is no reason why he should recover any more than the balance of the debt, for which he is a bona fide holder for value. Here it appears that the plaintiff received this note of the maker, for whose accommodation the defendant indorsed it. It being obvious that the plaintiff can recover nothing as trustee for the party from whom he received it, he is liable over to nobody for the surplus, and therefore can have judgment only for the amount due to himself, for his own use and in his own right, which is so much of the note as may be necessary to satisfy the balance of the debt, for the security of which he received it."

Rule Applies in Favor of One Indorsing to Accommodate the Payee.—Where a note, valid in its inception and taken by the payee for full value, is indorsed by him, and is subsequently indorsed by a third person for the accommodation of the payee (the holder at that time) without any consideration, and is then sold to the plaintiff at a discount greater than the legal rate, the plaintiff can recover from such accommodation indorser only the amount paid by him for the note, with interest and fees of protest. Cook v. Clark, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 213. But see Ingalls v. Lee, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 647.

Paper Purchased as Business Paper. in reliance on the representation of the parties to the instrument, entitles the purchaser to recover the face value without reference to the consideration paid. Burrall v. De Groot, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 379.

Paper Fraudulently Diverted.—Where one has received accommodation paper fraudulently diverted, but without notice, he is limited in his recovery to the value which he has given for the instrument. Nickerson v. Ruger, 76 N. Y. 284; Ives v. Jacobs, 21 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. City Ct.) 151; Beckhaus v. Commercial Nat. Bank (Pa., 1888), 12 Atl. Rep. 72. See Huff v. Wagner, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 215.

Huff v. Wagner, 63 Barb. (N. Y.) 215, was a case of notes obtained by false and fraudulent representations, but the court throughout proceeds upon the assumption that the rule applicable in such a case is the same as that applicable in the case of accommodation paper. To establish this, however, the English cases cited in the last note supra are relied upon without noticing that in those cases the notes sued upon were, in fact, pledged.

2. Fowler v. Strickland, 107 Mass. 552; Moore v. Baird, 30 Pa. St. 138; Gaul v. Willis, 26 Pa. St. 259; Burpee v. Smoot, 4 W. N. C. (Pa.) 186. See *Tucker v. Reason of the Rule.—The ground for this view of the law was thus explained by Strong, J., in Moore v. Baird, 30 Pa. St. 138: "He who lends his own promissory note for the accommodation of another lends his credit without any restriction as to the manner of its use. As between the maker and the payee there is an available defense, but the maker cannot complain of a subsequent holder when called upon to perform all he has promised. * * * In Gaul v. Willis, 26 Pa. St. 259, a suit indeed by the second indorsee against the maker, the holder was allowed to recover against the maker of an accommodation note the entire amount according to its tenor, though the discount at each negotiation had exceeded six per cent. He was regarded as not the less a bona fide holder for value, because he purchased for less than upon the face of the note appeared to be due. What has the maker to do with that? He has lent his credit for the sum named in the note. Shall one who has received it as collateral, and is not therefore a holder for value at all, be permitted to recover, and a recovery be denied to him who is a holder for value, but happens to have purchased for less than the face of the paper? Such is not the law."

GENERALLY.—As between the party accommodated and the accommodation party, whatever may be the obligations which the latter assumes toward third persons, the relations are those of principal and surety;¹ but this suretyship does not, in the absence of special enactment, enable the accommodation party to avail himself before payment of remedies provided by statute in favor of sureties against their principals.²

b. SUBROGATION TO CREDITOR'S SECURITIES.—It follows from the relation of suretyship that an accommodation party paying the instrument at maturity is entitled to be subrogated to all the rights and securities against the party accommodated, possessed by the holder of the paper who has received payment.³

(Tenn.) 425; Van Alstyne v. Sorley, 32 Tex. 518.

Nor is an accommodation indorser entitled to the benefit of a statute allowing a summary judgment in favor of a surety against the principal on motion. Stodder v. Cardwell, 20 Ala. 223.

But under the present Code of Alabama accommodation parties to bills of exchange are expressly brought within the benefit of the statute providing for summary judgments against principals or between sureties. Alabama Code 1886, § 3149.

And an accommodation indorser has been held to have the right, which every surety has upon general equitable principles, to come into equity after the debt has matured, and compel the principal to pay and the creditor to receive payment, and he may also in equity compel the creditor to proceed against the principal debtor for the collection of his demand upon giving security and indemnifying the creditor against delay and expenses. Thompson v. Taylor, 72 N. Y. 32, 11 Hun (N. Y.) 274.

S.) 520; McNutt v. Wilcox, 1 Freem. Ch. (Miss.) 116.

Subrogation of Creditor to Securities of Accommodation Indorser.—The principle of equity that the creditor is entitled to the benefit of all the securities which the principal debtor has given to his sureties for their indemnity, applies generally to securities taken by accommodation indorsers, Newburgh Nat. Bank v. Bigler, 83 N. Y. 51, 18 Hun (N. Y.) 400; but it does not apply in favor of the holder of a note as against the accommodation indorsers who have been discharged by the laches of the holder, because the holder can only claim by subrogation, and the indorsers who have not been damaged are under no liability. Hopewell v. Cumberland Bank, 10 Leigh (Va.) 214. See Jones v. Quinpiack Bank, 29 Conn. 25.

Subrogation to Judgment.—Where judgment has been obtained by the holder against both maker and accommodation indorser of a note, the latter may pay the judgment and become subrogated in equity to the rights of the holder under the judgment against the maker. Lenox v. Prout, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 520.

And where separate judgments have been obtained against maker and indorser, and after execution against the maker has been returned "no property found," and the accommodation indorser has paid the note, he may go into chancery and subject the equitable assets of the maker to the satisfaction of the judgment, or he may resort to equity

Payment Essential.—But the accommodation party is not entitled to subrogation until he has actually paid the instrument.¹

Security Held by Accommodation Party for Indemnity.—A security taken from the party accommodated, by a subsequent accommodation party, to provide for his own indemnity, will not inure to the benefit of a prior accommodation party when he has upon default of the accommodated party paid the instrument.²

to cause conveyances of real estate by the drawer in fraud of his creditors to be set aside. Lyon v. Bolling, 9 Ala. 463. See Brahan v. Ragland, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 259. So where upon payment the accommodation indorser takes an assignment of a judgment against the maker of the note who is the party accommodated. Clason v. Morris, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 524.

But whatever the remedies of the accommodation party in equity, a court of law has no power to permit an accommodation indorser of a note who has paid the instrument to issue execution against prior parties upon a judgment obtained against the maker and all indorsers. Ontario Bank v. Walker, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 652. But compare Connely v. Bourg, 16 La. Ann. 108.

Collateral Security in the Hands of Holder no Defense.—A made a note for the accommodation of B in favor of C. At maturity C, having paid the note, sued A. It was no defense to A that C held a mortgage from B to secure the note. Mosser v. Criswell, 150 Pa. St. 409; Lord v. Ocean Bank, 20 Pa. St. 384, 59 Am. Dec. 728. See Lee Bank v. Kitching, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y. Super. Ct.) 435; Brick v. Freehold Nat. Banking Co., 37 N. J. L. 307.

Securities Available to Accommodation Party without Payment.—In some jurisdictions, however, the authorities go further in favor of the rights of the accommodation party, holding that when he issued upon the instrument he is entitled to be credited with the amounts of any securities in the hands of the holder taken by the latter from the principal debtor. Duncan v. North & South Wales Bank, L. R. 6 Ch. Cas. 1; Bradford v. Hubbard, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 155; Goodwin v. Massachusetts, etc., Loan, etc., Co., 152 Mass. 189; Molson's Bank v. Heilig, 25 Ont. Rep. 505.

A bill of exchange was accepted by the defendant and indorsed by the plaintiff for the accommodation of the drawer. The latter failed, and made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors before the bill matured. The plaintiff subsequently took up the bill as indorser. The assignment provided for indemnifying the plaintiff against all indorsements made by him on account of the drawer; there were funds in the hands of the assignees to which he could resort for payment. It was held that the plaintiffs could not maintain an action on the bill against the acceptors, but must resort to the funds in the hands of the assignees for payment. Bradford v. Hubbard, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 155. In this case Parker, C. J., said: "If the holder is secured or indemnified by the drawer there is no reason to allow him to recover of the acceptor, and thus drive the acceptor to an action against the drawer.

* * * There is no reason in compelling the defendants to pay the plaintiff in order to release that portion of the funds for other creditors and oblige the defendants to come in among the unpreferred creditors to obtain probably a small part, and perhaps nothing, of their debt so created."

Where the holder of several notes made by A. and indorsed by different parties held a mortgage from A. to secure his general indebtedness, it was held, in an action by the holder against the indorser of one of the notes, that the defendant was entitled to have credited upon the note a pro rata share of the security. Molson's Bank v. Heilig, 25 Ont. Rep. 503.

Collateral Immediately Available to Holder.—Even in jurisdictions holding the doctrine that securities in the hands of the holder are not available to the accommodation party in general until payment by the latter, it has been held that where the securities are of such a nature that they can be applied by the creditor to the payment of the instrument in exoneration of the accommodation party without the settlement of any dispute—as by merely applying a deposit to the payment of the bill or note—the accommodation party is entitled to have them so applied, the court proceeding upon the principle of avoiding a clearly needless circuitry of action. Riverside Bank v. Totten (Supreme Ct.), 33 N. Y. St. Rep. 845; Koehler v. Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank, 51 Hun (N. Y.) 418.

Taking Note of Accommodation Party in Payment.—Where a promissory note was secured by a mortgage and was not paid at maturity, and the payee transferred the note and mortgage to an accommodation indorser of the note and received the note of the indorser in full payment, it was held that this was a sufficient payment by the indorser to enable him to foreclose the mortgage against the maker. Humphreys v. Vertner, 1 Freem. Ch. (Miss.) 251.

2. Post v. Tradesmen's Bank, 28 Conn. 420; McCune v. Belt, 45 Mo. 174; Gomez v. Lazarus, 1 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 205.

Accommodation Indorser may Provide for His Own Indemnity.—In Gomez v. Lazarus, 1 Dev. Eq. (N. Car.) 205, Henderson, C. J., said: "The cosurety who attempts at the time, or after the obligation is created, privately to provide for himself from the funds of the common principal, acts contrary to good faith, as he thereby diminishes the funds on which they all rely for their common safety. And, besides, it would tend to weaken his exertions to the end in which all have an interest. But to for successive accommodation parties are not cosureties.¹

c. SUBROGATION TO DEFENSES AGAINST HOLDER.—It is sometimes stated, as a general principle of the law of suretyship, that the surety may take advantage of any defenses which would be available to his principal, and the same rule has been said in some of the cases to apply to the defenses available to an accommodation indorser upon a bill or note.²

Defenses Strictly Personal.—But this statement is too broad. There are defenses strictly personal which the acceptor or maker might set up in an action against himself, but of which an accommodation indorser could not take advantage.

Want of Capacity in the Maker or Drawer.—Thus the want of capacity of the maker or drawer to enter into the contract is no defense to an accommodation indorser, for his indorsement is a warranty of the capacity of prior parties.³

Defenses Available to the Accommodation Acceptor—Failure of Consideration.—The total or partial failure of the consideration for the transfer of the instrument which could be set up by the maker of a promissory note is available as a defense to an accommodation indorser thereof.⁴

Usury.—An accommodation indorser may avail himself of the defense of usury when the instrument was usuriously discounted by the maker.⁵

Incapacity of Plaintiff to Sue Maker.—Where the holder cannot sue the maker of a note who is the partner of the holder, because the instrument passed between them in a matter which grew out of the partnership relations, the accommodation indorser is entitled to set up this defense in an action by the holder against him upon his indorsement.⁶

Set-off.—How far a surety is entitled to avail himself of a set-off which extend this to a prior against a posterior surety is connecting together those whose situations are different, and inferring similar rights from dissimilar obligations. It is restricting too much that right of self-preference, of self-security, which all human laws permit, if we do not infringe upon those of others; and it is not considered an infringement of them to procure for ourselves a satisfaction or security for our debts, although we may leave our debtor without the means of satisfying his other creditors, whose debts may be as meritorious as our own."

A More Accurate Statement is that the accommodation party may avail himself of all defenses not personal to the party accommodated to which the latter is entitled. Johnson v. Marshall, 4 Rob. (La.) 157.

3. Coverture.—The accommodation indorser of the note of a married woman cannot set up the defense of coverture. Edmunds v. Rose, 51 N. J. L. 547. See also the title SURETYSHIP.

4. Where a note is given on account of certain goods which the plaintiff agrees to sell to the maker of the note, it is a good defense to the accommodation indorser of the instrument that the goods have not been delivered, or that only a small portion of the goods have been delivered, and that the amount so delivered has been paid for. Sawyer v. Chambers, 44 Barb. (N. Y.) 44, 43 Barb. (N. Y.) 622.

Where a note is delivered by A (the party for whose accommodation it is indorsed) to B, partly in payment of a debt for a smaller amount due from A to B, and partly upon the condition that the excess of the note above the debt shall be adjusted by B's delivering up a certain order for merchandise held by him on C, and for the rest by payments from B to A, and B fails to make the payments according to his agreement, his failure may be taken advantage of by the accommodation indorser when sued upon the note. Gunnis v. Weigley, 114 Pa. St. 191.

A ship, forfeited under the laws of the United States, having been condemned and sold, was bought by the defendants, acting for her owners. The defendants gave their note for the purchase money to the plaintiff, with an accommodation indorser. The forfeiture being afterwards remitted by law, the defendants refused payment. It was held that no recovery could be had either against the makers or the accommodation indorser of the note. Brown v. Fort, 1 Martin (La.) 34.

5. Weimer v. Shelton, 7 Mo. 237.

See the title USURY.

Evidence.—In an action against the indorser of a note indorsed for the accommodation of the maker, when the defense is that it was usuriously discounted at its inception, the purchaser, having bought it from a third person after it was so indorsed, may show that the seller, by authority of the indorser, represented it to be business paper, and that it was purchased in reliance upon the truth of such representations. Benedict v. Caffé, 5 Duer (N. Y.) 226. See Ahern v. Goodspeed, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 263.

might be asserted by his principal, is a question upon which the authorities are not in agreement;¹ and the same conflict of opinions is found as to the right of an accommodation indorser to avail himself of a set-off in favor of the acceptor or maker.²

2. As to Third Parties—a. HOLDERS WITHOUT NOTICE.—There is no question that, as to persons who take accommodation paper without knowledge of its true character the accommodation party is bound by his apparent standing upon the face of the instrument and cannot claim the privileges of a surety for the real debtor,³ and in no case does mere knowledge of the accommodation character of the paper prevent the holder from recovering from prior parties according to their position on the instrument.⁴ So far the authorities are agreed, but there is a wide diversity of opinion upon the question whether a holder who takes a bill or note with knowledge that some of the parties thereto have signed merely for accommodation, or who, while the bill is in his hands, acquires this knowledge, must treat such accommodation parties as sureties for the parties accommodated.

b.* HOLDERS WITH NOTICE—(1) Generally—Mere Inaction.—Even as to the rights of accommodation parties to be treated as sureties by third persons who have taken the paper with knowledge of its character, certain points are settled, and mere inaction upon the creditor's part will not release an accommodation party.⁵

Holder may Select Whom to Sue.—Nor can the holder be compelled to proceed against the party accommodated in exoneration of the accommodation party, for he has a right to select the persons among the prior parties to the instrument against whom he will proceed.⁶

May Complain only of Affirmative Action.—It is then, in any case, only affirmative action upon the part of the holder, depriving, either presumptively or in fact,⁷ the accommodation party of his rights against the party accommodated, of which the accommodation party may complain, and this only when the action which he claims has released him was taken without his consent,⁸ and volun-

2. Set-off Held not Available.—In New York the doctrine prevails that a set-off in favor of the principal is not available to the surety, and the same rule governs the rights of an accommodation indorser. Gillespie v. Torrance, 25 N. Y. 306.

So in other states it has been held that such a set-off is not available to the transferee of even overdue accommodation paper. Williams v. Banks, 11 Md. 198; *Barker v. Rights against Accommodation Parties Reserved.—Dealings by the holders of notes indorsed for accommodation, with the makers

tarily upon the part of the holder.¹

(2) Discharge by Dealings with Principal—(a) English Doctrine—(aa) AT LAW.—The English rule in courts of law before the common-law procedure act was that the accommodation maker or acceptor, although known to the holder to be such, was to be regarded as the principal debtor, and therefore an extension of time granted to the drawer or indorser for whose benefit the instrument was made or accepted would not discharge the accommodation maker or acceptor.² So a release or composition with the drawer or payee of of the notes—as by giving time to the makers—do not release the accommodation indorsers, for this is regarded as conditional upon the assent of the latter. Newburgh Nat. Bank v. Bigler, 83 N. Y. 66.

1. Defendant, a resident of New York, made his promissory note for the accommodation of the payee, a Massachusetts corporation, which was indorsed and transferred by the latter to a firm in that state. Said corporation was adjudged to be insolvent by a court of insolvency of said state. Plaintiff, then the holder of the note, with the knowledge that defendant was accommodation maker, proved its claim on said note. The corporation paid into court a percentage upon its indebtedness, as directed by judgment of said court, upon which payment, pursuant to said judgment and laws of said state, it was discharged from all debts proved or provable against it. Plaintiff accepted the percentage, signing a receipt in full of the liability of the corporation. In an action upon the note it was held that while, as between the maker and payee of the note, the latter was principal and the former was surety, the action of the plaintiff was not a voluntary discharge of the principal, nor did it in any way impair the rights of the surety; and so, that plaintiff was entitled to recover the balance. *Springfield Third Nat. B. 201, 84 E. C. L. 201. But compare Laxton v. Peat, 2 Campb. 185; Collott v. Haigh, 3 Campb. 281; Adams v. Gregg, 2 Stark. 531.

Origin of the Doctrine.—The leading case upon this subject is Fentum v. Pocock, 5 Taunt. 192. This was an action by an indorsee against the acceptor of a bill drawn by one Beazley. The defense was that the plaintiff had taken a cognovit from Beazley, payable at a future date, without defendant's privity or consent; that the defendant was an accommodation acceptor, and that this was known to the plaintiff when he took the cognovit. In delivering the opinion of the court Sir James Mansfield, C.J. (not, of course, Lord Mansfield, as stated by Mr. Daniel (see 2 Daniel Negotiable Instr., § 1333), disapproving Laxton v. Peat, 2 Campb. 185, and Collott v. Haigh, 3 Campb. 281, in which cases a doctrine favorable to defendant had been laid down by Lord Ellenborough sitting at nisi prius, said: "One might find here a very important distinction between this case and the case decided by Lord Ellenborough—namely, that here the person taking the bill did not at the time when he took it know that it was an accommodation bill; and if he did not then know it, what does it signify what came to his knowledge afterwards if he took the bill for a valuable consideration? But it is better not to rest this case upon that foundation, for, as it appears to me, if the holder had known in the clearest manner at the time of his taking the bill that it was merely an accommodation bill, it would make no manner of difference, for he who accepts the bill, whether for value or to serve a friend, makes himself in all respects liable as acceptor, and nothing can discharge him but payment or release."

In Strong v. Foster, 17 C. B. 201, 84 E. C. L. 201, Willes, J., said: "A person who signs a note as a principal debtor must in proceedings upon the note undergo all the liabilities of a principal debtor, although as between himself and the party at whose instance he signs it he is in fact a surety only, and that fact was known to the creditor at the time the note was handed over. This is laid down in the treatises on bills, and the cases of Fentum v. Pocock, 5 Taunt. 192, and the Bank of Ireland v. Beresford, 6 Dow. 234, are referred to. * * * In Ex p. Glendenning, Buck. 517, Lord Eldon did express a doubt, founded upon the practice in bankruptcy, that accommodation parties are allowed to prove as sureties against the estates of their principals; but in truth, when you look at the distinction in those cases—that there the proof is not upon the bill or note, but upon the contract to indemnify in consideration of accepting or making it—they will be found to be entirely consistent with Fentum v. Pocock, 5 Taunt. 192."

Promise by Acceptor to Pay.—Especially does the doctrine apply where the bill is duly presented to the accommodation acceptor at maturity, and he promises payment. Kerrison v. Cooke, 3 Campb. 362.

When an Extension of Time Defense at Law.—It seems that an accommodation maker may raise at law the defense that time has been given to the party accommodated, when he can show that the original contract between the plaintiff and defendant was that of creditor and surety—that is, that he was not only in fact a surety as to the principal, but also that he was accepted as such by the creditor. See Manley v. Boycott, 2 El. & Bl. 46, 75 E.

a bill or note did not discharge an accommodation acceptor or maker.¹ But even in the English courts of law an extension of time to an acceptor who was the party accommodated released the accommodation drawer.²

(bb) IN EQUITY.—In courts of equity, however, the rule is otherwise. There the real relation of the parties to the note or bill determines their rights in all cases where the holder has knowledge of that relation.³ The same rule prevails now in courts of law under statutes empowering such courts to take cognizance of equitable defenses.⁴ Thus, one who has accepted a bill for accommodation merely will be discharged by the holder, with knowledge of the true relation between the parties, giving time to the person who is in fact the principal debtor without the consent of the acceptor, and this though the holder acquires knowledge that the acceptance is for accommodation after the transfer of the instrument to him.⁵

(b) United States Authorities—Accommodation Indorser Discharged.—It is generally held that giving time to the maker or acceptor will discharge an accommodation indorser.⁶

In Strong v. Foster, 17 C. B. 201, 84 E. C. L. 201, the release of the accommodation party by dealings with knowledge with the accommodated party was set up as an equitable defense, and the court seems to be of the opinion that the rule at law and in equity was the same, but the case was decided upon the ground that there was no evidence of suretyship or of such dealing as would discharge the surety. See the comments of Coleridge, J., in Pooley v. Harradine, 7 El. & Bl. 431, 90 E. C. L. 431, and of Crompton, J., in Ewin v. Lancaster, 6 B. & S. 571, 118 E. C. L. 571.

Notice need not be Express.—Where the defendant was sued as acceptor by the indorsee of a bill of exchange, and pleaded as a defense that he was an accommodation acceptor, and as such surety for P., the indorser of the bill, whereof the plaintiffs had notice; and that the plaintiff had discharged him by giving time to P. by a composition deed; and it appeared that the plaintiffs when they executed the composition deed had various bills of P. in their hands, and knew that some of the parties to such bills were not primarily liable to P. thereon (although they did not know that the defendant was of that number), and entered into the deed, making stipulations with regard to such parties and taking their chances as to who they should turn out to be, it was held that if the effect of the deed was to alter the position of the parties who should turn out to be sureties, it was as wilfully done and as inequitable on the part of the plaintiffs as if they had had express notice, and that the defense was made out. Bailey v. Edwards, 4 B. & S. 761, 116 E. C. L. 761.

Agreement for Suretyship between Parties Originally Principals.—It seems that where A and B were originally both principal debtors, and afterwards, by agreement known to the holder, A becomes the principal and B the surety, B cannot claim a discharge by reason of an extension of time given to A. Swire v. Redman, 1 Q. B. Div. 536.

6. Giving Time to Maker or Acceptor.—A general rule regulating the obligations of parties to bills and notes is that the acceptor of a bill, or the maker of a note, is the principal debtor, and that the other parties are sureties. Clarke v. Devlin, 3 B. & P. 363; Perry v. Armstrong, 39 N. H. 583. See the title BILLS AND NOTES.

How far this principle is applicable to discharge an indorser when time has been given to his acceptor or maker, is a matter of dispute. See the title BILLS AND NOTES.

But giving time to the maker of a note has been held to release the accommodation indorser. Hereford v. Chase, 1 Rob. (La.) 212; Gustine v. Louisiana Union Bank, 10 Rob. (La.) 412; Globe Mut. Ins. Co. v. Carson, 31 Mo. 218; Pomeroy v. Tanner, 70 N. Y. 547; Myers v. Welles, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 463.

Accommodation indorsers are to be considered as sureties. Alley v. Gavin, 40 Ind. 446.

An accommodation indorser is released where the holder recovers judgment against the maker and issues execution thereon,

Accommodation Acceptor and Maker—Conflict.—But in many states the rule established in English courts of law, that an accommodation acceptor or maker, even as to third persons, taking with knowledge of the relation, is not entitled to the privileges of a surety, has been followed.¹ Some courts, on the other hand, have adopted the principle that the real relation of the parties is controlling.²

which is levied, and afterwards releases the levy. Priest v. Watson, 75 Mo. 310, 42 Am. Rep. 409.

Mere Forbearance to Sue.—An accommodation indorser or drawer after his liability is once fixed is not discharged by a mere passive neglect on the part of the holder to proceed against the party accommodated. Summerhill v. Tapp, 52 Ala. 227; Ætna Nat. Bank v. Hollister, 55 Conn. 189; Kerr v. Baker, Walk. (Miss.) 140; Clark v. Barrett, 19 Mo. 39; Miller v. Mellier, 59 Mo. 388; Osborne v. Lawson, 26 Mo. App. 556; Beveridge v. Richmond, 14 Mo. App. 405; English v. Seibert, 49 Mo. App. 563; Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Landis, 50 Mo. App. 116; Trimble v. Thorne, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 152, 8 Am. Dec. 302; State Bank v. Smith, 85 Hun (N. Y.) 201; Terrel v. Townsend, 6 Tex. 149. See Ross v. Jones, 22 Wall. (U. S.) 576.

Giving Time to Prior Indorser.—Giving time to a prior indorser, the party accommodated, releases a subsequent accommodation indorser. Walters v. Swallow, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 446.

1. Accommodation Acceptor not Discharged by Indulgence to Drawer.—An accommodation acceptor is not discharged by time given to the drawer by the holder, with knowledge of the relation. Cronise v. Kellogg, 20 Ill. 11; Anderson v. Anderson, 4 Dana (Ky.) 352; Howard Banking Co. v. Welchman, 6 Bosw. (N. Y.) 280. See Howlett v. Fitzgibbon (City Ct.), 16 N. Y. St. Rep. 804; White v. Hopkins, 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 99, 37 Am. Dec. 542; Van Alstyne v. Sorley, 32 Tex. 518. Compare Smith v. Traders' Nat. Bank, 74 Tex. 457. See Lambert v. Sandford, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 137, 18 Am. Dec. 149. But compare Lacy v. Lofton, 26 Ind. 324.

And, a fortiori, an accommodation acceptor is not discharged by mere failure to proceed against the drawer and indorser. Wilson v. Isbell, 45 Ala. 142.

Accommodation Maker not Discharged by Time to Indorser.—So an accommodation maker of a note is not discharged by an extension of time given with the knowledge of the indorser, the party accommodated. Clopper v. Union Bank, 7 Har. & J. (Md.) 92, 16 Am. Dec. 294; Montgomery County Bank v. Walker, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 229, 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 382; Lewis v. Hanchman, 2 Pa. St. 416; Love v. Brown, 38 Pa. St. 307; Philadelphia Bank v. Wilson, 5 Clark (Pa.) 461; Farmers', etc., Bank v. Rathbone, 26 Vt. 19, 58 Am. Dec. 200. See Powell v. Waters, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 176; Hansbrough v. Gray, 3 Gratt. (Va.) 340.

A release to an indorser does not discharge an accommodation maker, especially when the latter consents thereto. Seymour v. Minturn, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 169, 8 Am. Dec. 380.

Time to Indorser no Discharge of Payee.—

Giving time to an indorser will not release the accommodation payee. Murray v. Judah, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 484.

2. Accommodation Acceptor or Maker Discharged as Surety.—An accommodation maker or acceptor is discharged by an extension of time granted to the indorser with knowledge of the relationship. In re Goodwin, 5 Dill. (U. S.) 140; Adle v. Metoyer, 1 La. Ann. 254; Canadian Bank v. Coumbe, 47 Mich. 358; Meggett v. Baum, 57 Miss. 22; American Bank v. Baker, 4 Met. (Mass.) 164; Westerfelt v. Frech, 33 N. J. Eq. 451.

An accommodation maker or acceptor is discharged to the extent of securities surrendered by the holder. Guild v. Butler, 127 Mass. 386. See Goodwin v. Massachusetts Loan, etc., Co., 152 Mass. 189; Shelton v. Hurd, 7 R. I. 403; Otis v. Von Storch, 15 R. I. 41; Smith v. Traders' Nat. Bank, 74 Tex. 457. But compare Van Alstyne v. Sorley, 32 Tex. 518. But not by a simple transfer of the security to a third party. Wilbur v. Williams, 16 R. I. 242.

Drawer not Discharged by Release of Accommodation Acceptor.—The release of an accommodation acceptor will not discharge the drawer, since the latter is the real principal. Sargent v. Appleton, 6 Mass. 85, 4 Am. Dec. 90; Watt v. Rice, 1 La. Ann. 280; Parks v. Ingram, 22 N. H. 283, 55 Am. Dec. 153. See Collott v. Haigh, 3 Campb. 281.

Indiana.—The cases in Indiana seem irreconcilable. In Lambert v. Sandford, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 137, 18 Am. Dec. 149, it was ruled, following Fentum v. Pocock, 5 Taunt. 192, and disapproving Laxton v. Peat, 2 Campb. 185, that time given by the holder to the drawer of a bill, with knowledge that it had been accepted for accommodation, would not discharge the drawer. The court would seem in this case to have committed itself definitely to the doctrine that an accommodation party is not a surety as to the subsequent parties.

But in Lacy v. Lofton, 26 Ind. 324, the same court held, without a reference to the former case, that the accommodation drawer of a bill is a surety of the payee for whose accommodation he drew the instrument, within the meaning of a statute providing for the remedies of sureties against their principal, and that such a drawer might have the question of suretyship tried in an action upon the instrument, the effect being that the property of the real principal should be exhausted before levying upon that of the surety. This case goes very far in recognizing prior accommodation parties as sureties, and should probably be regarded as overruling Lambert v. Sandford, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 137, 18 Am. Dec. 149.

New York.—The cases cited in the last note

Accommodation Comaker Discharged.—It is certainly the general rule that a maker or drawer who, in fact, is as to his comakers or codrawers but a surety, is relieved by time given to the maker with knowledge of the relation.¹

Different Grounds for the Rule.—Not only are the authorities not in accord upon the subject under discussion, but the reasoning by which the courts have arrived at their various conclusions is involved in considerable confusion.²

show that the common-law courts in New York approved the doctrine of Fentum v. Pocock, 5 Taunt. 192, and held the defense of suretyship as to the accommodation party inadmissible. Under the Code of Civil Procedure the rule seems different. An accommodation maker is discharged by time given to his comaker. (See cases cited in the following notes.) And it would seem from the reasoning of the Court of Appeals in Hubbard v. Gurney, 64 N. Y. 458, that the same rule should be applied, although the parties were successively interested instead of co-ordinately liable. In that case Church, C. J., said: "Under the code, equitable defenses are permitted in actions at law, and this would seem to obviate the difficulty previously supposed to exist both in setting up the defense and in receiving any evidence which in a court of equity is admissible to sustain it." And he proceeds to notice and approve the course of the English law courts under similar circumstances. See also Flour City Nat. Bank v. McKay, 86 Hun (N. Y.) 15, 33 N. Y. Supp. 365; Newburgh Nat. Bank v. Bigler, 83 N. Y. 51; State Bank v. Smith, 85 Hun (N. Y.) 201.

1. Accommodation Maker Released by Time to Comaker.—Where a promissory note or bill of exchange is made by two or more persons, one of whom signs for accommodation merely, the latter is released by time given or security released to the former.

2. Reason for the Difference between the Rules at Law and in Equity.—An examination of the cases collected in the notes to this and the preceding sections, upon the subject of the difference between the rule at law and that in equity, as to the discharge of an accommodation party by dealings with the party accommodated, will reveal a great amount of confusion and some untenable reasoning on the part of the courts. "The subject," in the words of Beasley, C. J., in Anthony v. Fritts, 45 N. J. L. 1, "belongs to the vexed questions of the law, for the decisions relating to the matter are much in conflict."

Theory that the Defense Varies by Parol a Written Contract.—It has frequently been said that the reason why the defense is inadmissible in law is that parol evidence is not allowed to alter a written contract. See remarks of Crompton, J., in Ewin v. Lancaster, 6 B. & S. 571, 118 E. C. L. 571. But this objection would be as available a defense in equity as at law, since the rules of evidence are the same in either case, and the ground upon which such a defense is admitted in equity is that parol evidence introduced to show the relations of the parties does not vary the written contract. See supra, this title, Parol Evidence to Prove Character of Instrument. See 2 Ames' Cases, Bills and Notes, 83, note.

Chief Justice Beasley, in Anthony v. Fritts, 45 N. J. L. 1, said: "It will be observed that this theory has nothing to do with the question which is so much discussed in the cases on this subject in the courts of this country, whether or not testimony showing that, in point of fact, the party was a surety, although he did not contract as such, is admissible, for the conclusion arrived at proceeds from the hypothesis that, accepting the incident of

(3) Discharge by Breach of Condition—(a) Generally.—It is a general rule that a surety has a right to choose the terms upon which he will become liable, and to stand strictly upon those terms, so that any failure to comply with the conditions upon which he signs discharges him.¹ This rule is applied to accommodation parties. Thus an accommodation indorser who signs upon condition that the payee to whom the note is to be passed will perform certain acts is released by the payee's failure to comply with the conditions.² This principle, modified to a certain extent by the law merchant, is the basis of the law of diversion which will now be considered.

(b) Diversion—(aa) USE OF ACCOMMODATION PAPER GENERALLY—Prima Facie Unrestricted.—Accommodation paper is, in general, a loan of the credit of the accommodation party to the party accommodated, to the extent of the value of the note or bill, and this loan of credit is prima facie without restriction as to the manner of its use.³ Thus the accommodated party has, in general, authority to suretyship, such incident, as it does not qualify the contract, has no effect whatever in a court of common law."

Yet cases are found sanctioning the view here combated. As to showing the relation of comakers or codrawers, or admitting that such a relation may be shown between those who are equally liable, expressing the view that it is inadmissible as between parties successively liable, see supra, this title, Parol Evidence to Prove Character of Instrument.

Defense not Enforceable at Law, because a Mere Equity.—The better view is that the defense is a mere collateral equity, enforceable in courts of chancery, to prevent fraud. Thus, in Davies v. Stainbank, 6 De G. M. & G. 679, Lord Justice Turner said: "It is, in the eye of this court, a fraud in a creditor to proceed at law against a surety after he has agreed with the principal debtor to enlarge the time for payment of the debt; and this court relieves against the fraud."

In Anthony v. Fritts, 45 N. J. L. 1, C. J. Beasley observed: "This contract being, as respects the defendant, of primary obligation, cannot be converted into one of secondary obligation; but nevertheless, in the view of a court of equity, it was not conscionable for the plaintiff to increase the hardship of the defendant's position, as, in point of fact, he was the surety of the principal debtor. But this right of the surety to have his status respected does not pertain to his contract as an implied incident, but as a mere equity, which it is irregular to enforce in a court of common law, so long as it is important to preserve the distinction between the procedures of a legal and those of an equitable forum."

Defense Admissible at Law.—But the weight of authority in the United States refuses to admit that the defense is a strictly equitable one, and regards it as equally admissible in courts of law. Thus, in Union Bank v. Crine, 33 Fed. Rep. 809, Shipman, Cir. J., said: "Although the defense upon the alleged facts is borrowed from a court of equity and is, in that sense, an equitable one, I do not regard it as a defense which can be administered only by a court of equity upon the ground that the relief which is sought must be granted by an injunction or by some other remedy which a court of equity only can furnish, or that the defense contains matter which can be considered only at equity. If the sole defendant is not liable to pay the notes, there is no difficulty in an examination by a court of law, and it is not necessary to resort to the form or mode of relief peculiar to a court of equity. There is quite a large class of cases pertaining to the discharge of sureties, upon the principle of which cases this defense rests, in which courts of law take cognizance of defenses which had their origin in the courts of equity, but which are administered by courts of law, without disregarding inherent distinctions between the two courts." See also Heath v. Derry Bank, 44 N. H. 174, where the authorities are extensively collected, and the views of the different courts discriminated.

2. Discharge of Conditional Accommodation Indorser.—Where A indorsed B's note to C for the accommodation of B, upon the condition that C would carry out a certain contract by which C agreed to give B the exclusive agency for certain goods for a certain territory, it was held to be a complete release of A that C violated the contract by appointing other agents for the goods within the territory covered by the contract, and, although B himself, if sued upon the note, could set up a breach of the contract only in reduction of damages upon the note, the validity of which would not be affected, yet A's defense is independent, and is not founded upon any principle of subrogation to such defenses as B might have against C. Fay v. Jenks, 93 Mich. 130. See also supra, this title, Subrogation to Defenses against Holder.

use the paper in payment of an existing debt, to sell or discount it, or, if more to his interest, to pledge it as collateral security for money advanced at the time, or before advanced, or on a running account between the parties for money advanced before, or at the time, or afterwards.¹

When Use Limited.—But it frequently happens that the accommodation party lends his credit for a certain purpose only, or imposes certain conditions limiting the manner in which his credit may be used.² When paper upon which such conditions have been placed is used or transferred in violation of the limitations placed upon it, it is said in a general way to be diverted, and the misappropriation is called a diversion. More accurately, the terms "divert" and "diversion" are used of only such a misapplication of the paper as, by affecting the rights of the accommodation party, renders the instrument invalid as against him in the hands of a holder with notice.

(66) WHAT AMOUNTS TO A DIVERSION—Variation in Method of Use Immaterial.—Where accommodation paper effects the substantial purpose for which it was designed, although the result is not produced in the precise manner contemplated, there is no diversion, unless there is fraud, or unless the interest of the accommodated party is thereby prejudiced.³ Thus it has been held no diversion that a note indorsed to be discounted at a particular bank is discounted elsewhere,⁴ Presumption against Restriction.—The presumption is that there is no restriction upon the use of the paper. Dawson v. Goodyear, 43 Conn. 548; Montross v. Clark, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 115; Loveridge v. Hill, 15 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 190; Lenheim v. Wilmarding, 55 Pa. St. 73.

Texas.—Cisco First Nat. Bank v. Wood (Tex. App., 1894), 28 S. W. Rep. 384.

Interest in Application of Proceeds.—If an accommodation indorser has no interest in the way in which the proceeds are to be used, it is no defense that he was told that the note was to be discounted at a bank, though it was in fact used, and was intended to be used, in paying an antecedent debt. Wheeler v. Allen, 59 How. Pr. (N. Y. C. Pl.) 118. See Graf v. Smith (Supreme Ct.), 16 N. Y. Supp. 894; Quinn v. Hard, 43 Vt. 375.

In Tinsdale v. Murray, 9 Daly (N. Y.) 446, Van Hoesen, J., stated the result of the New York cases as follows: "The lender of accommodation paper who has no interest in the use of its proceeds cannot complain that it has been diverted simply because it was not discounted by the person who he was led to believe would cash it, or because it was used in paying an antecedent debt, though the accommodation indorser expected it would be used to raise money. * * * Where the accommodation indorser is interested in the use to be made of the proceeds, it is a diversion of the note to use it in any way which will deprive him of the benefit of those proceeds."

Knowledge Immaterial.—A note indorsed for the accommodation of the maker and intended to be discounted at a particular bank was not discounted (the bank refusing to discount it) by A. It was held that the indorser was liable. Powell v. Waters, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 176. In this case Spencer, C.J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "It was entirely immaterial whether the first note was discounted at the bank at Newburgh or elsewhere; it did not alter or increase the responsibility of the indorser. * * * If the plaintiffs knew when they received the note that it was intended to be discounted at the bank of Newburgh, and had been refused, it would not affect them or establish any fraud." See also Duel v. Spence, 1 Abb. App. Dec. (N. Y.) 559. But compare Benjamin v. Rogers, 126 N. Y. 60, where the court distinguishes Powell v. Waters, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 176, on the ground that there was no evidence that A was acquainted with the circumstances.

Note "Negotiable and Payable at" a Particular Bank.—The rule applies when the note is made by its terms "negotiable and payable at" a particular bank, although the bank is not the payee. Ray v. Banks, 6 Jones (N. Car.) 118; Parker v. McDowell, 95 N. Car. 219, 59 Am. Rep. 235. See Reed v. Trentman, 53 Ind. 438.

When the Bank is the Payee—Authorities Conflicting.—The cases are not in accord as to the effect of making the bank at which it is intended to discount the paper a payee of the instrument. The weight of authority is to the effect that even in such cases, in the absence of a distinct agreement that the instrument is to be negotiated at the bank and not elsewhere, an action may be maintained against an accommodation indorser by a third person who has received the instrument before due for value. Dunn v. Weston, 71 Me. 270, 36 Am. Rep. 310; Rutland Bank v. Buck, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 66; Chenango Bank v. Hyde, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 567; Utica Bank v. Ganson, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 314; Hunt v. Aldrich, 27 N. H. 31. See Cross v. Rowe, 22 N. H. 77.

Such an action, it has been held, may be maintained in the name of the holder as the payee, or the instrument may be declared upon as payable to the bearer. Hunt v. Aldrich, 27 N. H. 31; Elliot v. Abbot, 12 N. H. 549. Or a suit may be maintained in the name of the bank. Newbury Bank v. Rand, 38 N. H. 166; Chenango Bank v. Hyde, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 567; Utica Bank v. Ganson, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 314; Burlington Bank v. Beach, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 62. See Elliot v. Abbot, 12 N. H. 549.

On the other hand, it has been held that where a note is made payable to a bank or is negotiable and payable at a particular bank, payable to the cashier thereof, it carries upon its face clear evidence that it was never intended to become binding or to have a legal inception unless discounted at the bank mentioned, and consequently it cannot be transferred to a private individual so as to bind accommodation parties. Farmers', etc., Bank v. Ross, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 315; Conway v. U. S. Bank, 6 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 128; Manufacturers' Bank v. Cole, 39 Me. 188; Prescott v. Brinsley, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 233; Adams Bank v. Jones, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 574; Dewey v. Cochran, 4 Jones (N. Car.) 184; Southerland v. Whitaker, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 5; Clinton Bank v. Ayres, 16 Ohio 282; Knox County Bank v. Lloyd, 18 Ohio St. 353. See Sherwin v. Brigham, 39 Ohio St. 140; Allen v. Ayres, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 298.

In delivering the opinion of the court in Southerland v. Whitaker, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 5, Pearson, J., said: "It was said on the argument: 'Property is frequently sold on time, the purchasers to give notes with sureties negotiable and payable at bank; this is done to meet the requirement of the bank charters, and to enable the seller to realize the money before the notes mature. Can it be that if the bank refuses to discount the note, he has no remedy against the sureties?' There is an obvious distinction between that case and ours. There the note is made payable to the seller; the intent that it is to become a note and have validity from the time it is written; and its being made afterwards negotiable and payable at bank is a collateral circumstance, introduced for the accommodation of the seller and not intended to affect the validity of the note. Here the intention is that the paper shall not be a note or have validity unless it is discounted; in other words, in our case it is made a condition precedent to the existence of the note, and is not a mere collateral circumstance."

Consent of Accommodation Party.—Where the accommodation party consents that the paper be discounted elsewhere, he is bound. Manufacturers' Bank v. Cole, 39 Me. 188.

Surety Holding Accommodation Note for His Own Indemnity.—Where the plaintiff, the accommodation indorser of a draft, agreed to pay the same if the maker would procure for him a note for a certain amount indorsed by the defendant, and the maker procured the defendant to indorse, notifying him that the note was to be discounted at the bank of U., and delivered the note to the plaintiff, who agreed to discount it at the bank of U., but upon the refusal of the bank held the note at maturity, and after the note had been protested sued the defendant, the plaintiff was held not entitled to recover. Kasson v. Smith, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 437; Allen v. Ayres, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 298. But see Spencer v. Ballou, 18 N. Y. 327.

1. Jackson v. Jersey City First Nat. Bank, 42 N. J. L. 177. See supra, this title, Pledge.

Note Given for Deposit with Creditor, Used to Raise Money.—Where A, as accommodation maker, signed the note with B to enable B to deposit it with C as security for a certain debt, and B, instead of so depositing it, procured C to indorse it, and then delivered it to D as security for a loan which he applied

Misuse of Proceeds.—And where the paper is given without restriction as to its use, but upon an agreement that the proceeds shall be used in a certain way, it is no diversion that the funds are used in a different way.¹

Liability of Accommodation Party Increased.—But where the liability of the accommodation party is in any way extended by the instrument being perverted from its intended purpose, there is a legal diversion,² as for instance, where one liable upon certain notes which he has indorsed for the maker's accommodation indorses new notes to take up the old, and the new notes are perverted by the maker, who uses them as collateral security for another debt.³

Immaterial Condition of Accommodation Party Binding.—And where it is established that a party who lends his credit to another by an accommodation signature to his debt to C, it was held in an action by C against A that there was no diversion, and that A was liable. Morris v. Morton, 14 Neb. 358.

Instrument Given to Raise Money, Transferred Directly to Creditor.—Where a note was given by the makers to raise money, which was ultimately to be applied to the payment of a certain mortgage, they cannot complain that the note instead of being so used was transferred directly to the mortgagee in satisfaction pro tanto of his debt. Cisco First Nat. Bank v. Wood (Tex. App., 1894), 28 S. W. Rep. 384. See Perry v. Armstrong, 39 N. H. 583.

Where a bill was accepted for the accommodation of the drawers, to enable them by using it as collateral to raise money to pay certain creditors, and the drawers transferred it to the said creditors as security for the debt and for further advances, there was no diversion. Leach v. Lewis, 1 McArthur (D. C.) 112.

But see Maitland v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 40 Md. 540, 17 Am. Rep. 620, as to pledging accommodation paper for an amount greater than the debt, for the purpose of securing money for which it was given.

Used as Collateral Security.—It has been held no diversion as against an accommodation party who has no interest in the proceeds of the instrument, that a note given to raise money was used as collateral security for the payment of an existing debt of the party accommodated. Fetters v. Muncie Nat. Bank, 34 Ind. 251, 7 Am. Rep. 225; Newbury Bank v. Rand, 38 N. H. 166; Rutland Bank v. Buck, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 66; Chenango Bank v. Hyde, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 567; Purchase v. Mattison, 6 Duer (N. Y.) 587; DeZeng v. Fyfe, 1 Bosw. (N. Y.) 335; Moore v. Ward, 1 Hilt. (N. Y.) 337; Burlington Bank v. Beech, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 62.

But it is very doubtful whether this would not be held a diversion if the party taking the instrument as collateral was clearly fixed with notice of the limitation attached to the use of the note. Benjamin v. Rogers, 126 N. Y. 60; U. S. Nat. Bank v. Ewing, 131 N. Y. 506. In some states such a use is held to be a diversion. Altoona Second Nat. Bank v. Dunn, 151 Pa. St. 228. See Royer v. Keystone Nat. Bank, 83 Pa. St. 248; Thompson v. Poston, 1 Duv. (Ky.) 389. See also the last note supra.

Pledging a Note Intended for Use as Collateral, for a larger amount than that agreed on with the accommodation party, is a diversion. Maitland v. Citizens' Nat. Bank, 40 Md. 540, 17 Am. Rep. 620.

1. Misuse of Proceeds.—Moreland v. Citizens' Sav. Bank (Ky., 1895), 30 S. W. Rep. 637; Dunn v. Weston, 71 Me. 270, 36 Am. Rep. 310; Brooks v. Hey, 23 Hun (N. Y.) 372; Gray v. Kentucky Bank, 29 Pa. St. 365; Mishler v. Reed, 76 Pa. St. 76.

In Moreland v. Citizens' Sav. Bank (Ky., 1895), 30 S. W. Rep. 637, Paynter, J., said: "Whenever a bill of exchange is made for accommodation, and the purpose was to raise money by its sale, the one who buys and pays for it cannot be held to look to the application of its proceeds."

Accommodation Acceptance without Restriction.

—Proceeds Belong to Holder.—Where the holder of an accommodation acceptance discounts the instrument, and sends the proceeds to the accommodation acceptor, directing him to apply such proceeds to the payment of a note made by the drawer and indorsed by the holder of the acceptance, the acceptor has no right to apply the funds to a general account due to him from the drawer of the acceptance, for the money is the money of the holder, who has a right to direct its application. Patty v. Milne, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 557, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 558.

2. Powell v. Waters, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 176; Wardell v. Howell, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 170; Hidden v. Bishop, 5 R. I. 29; Farmers', etc., Bank v. Hathaway, 36 Vt. 539.

Where one takes an accommodation note upon the condition that he will use it only to prevent insolvency, and after the insolvency the note is issued by the assignee of the party who has received the note upon the conditions stated, to the plaintiff who has notice of the facts, there is such a diversion as prevents a recovery. Stewart v. Moore, 12 Phila. (Pa.) 225.

Burden of Proof.—The burden is upon the plaintiff to show that the defendant has suffered no injury by diversion. Rochester v. Taylor, 23 Barb. (N. Y.) 18.

3. Nickerson v. Ruger, 76 N. Y. 279; Ocean Bank v. Dill, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 577; Wardell v. Howell, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 170; Ives v. Jacobs, 21 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y. City Ct.) 151; Comstock v. Hier, 73 N. Y. 269, 29 Am. Rep. 142; Bowman v. Van Kuren, 29 Wis. 209, 19 Am. Rep. 554.

has attached a condition limiting its use, however seemingly immaterial such condition may be, any violation thereof will amount to a legal diversion.¹

(cc) EFFECT OF DIVERSION—Transferee with Notice.—A transferee of a bill or note who takes it knowing that it has been diverted from the purpose for which it was given cannot maintain an action thereon against the accommodation party.²

1. Farmers', etc., Bank v. Ross, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 315; Manufacturers' Bank v. Cole, 39 Me. 188; Benjamin v. Rogers, 126 N. Y. 60 (reversing 10 N. Y. Supp. 777, distinguishing Powell v. Waters, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 177; Chenango Bank v. Hyde, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 567; Union Bank v. Ganson, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 315; U. S. Nat. Bank v. Ewing, 131 N. Y. 506; Southerland v. Whitaker, 5 Jones (N. Car.) 5; Clinton Bank v. Ayres, 16 Ohio 282.

Right to Impose Immaterial Conditions.—In an action upon a joint and several note it appeared that it was signed by the plaintiff's testator solely for the accommodation of C., one of the makers, to enable him to borrow the amount thereof of P. The latter having refused to make the loan, C. applied to the plaintiffs, who took the note with full knowledge of all the circumstances. The note was held to be diverted as to the plaintiff's testator. Benjamin v. Rogers, 126 N. Y. 60. In laying down the reason for this decision Earl, J., said: "There can be no doubt that if the plaintiff had taken this note without any notice of the special purpose for which it was made he would have been a bona fide holder for value in such a sense that he could recover thereon. But an accommodation maker of a note, or one who becomes surety upon a note, has a right to determine for himself what use shall be made of the note which he signs. He may impose material or immaterial conditions and terms, and no person, as against him, can get title to the note who takes it with full knowledge, in violation of the terms and conditions imposed upon it by him. Here the plaintiff was informed that Calkins had no right, as against the accommodation makers, to negotiate this note to him, and that it was made for the special purpose of borrowing money from the payee therein named. It cannot be said that this limitation was entirely immaterial even. Calkins was a business man, and Crandall may have been willing to sign this note to enable him to raise money to be used in his business, while unwilling to sign it if it was to be used to pay an antecedent debt. There may have been something in his relations with Miss Petit that made it more desirable to him that she should hold the note rather than some other person. He is long since dead, and cannot explain why it was that he was willing to sign the note for the special purpose named, and for no other purpose. Suffice it to say that he did make it for that purpose, and so the plaintiff was notified at the time he took it. As to him, therefore, the note never had any inception, and there can be no recovery against his executor; and we believe that no authority can be found, either in this country or in England, where it has been held that a plaintiff can recover under such circumstances."

Agreement to Negotiate the Instrument in a Certain State.—Where one indorsed a note for accommodation upon the express agreement that it was to be used only in Kentucky, but it was transferred by the maker to a New York bank, there was a legal diversion. U. S. Nat. Bank v. Ewing, 131 N. Y. 506, reversing U. S. Nat. Bank v. Ewing (Supreme Ct.), 14 N. Y. Supp. 662.

Instrument Intended to Pass to a Particular Party.—If a party signs accommodation paper with the understanding that it shall be passed only to a particular individual, it is a diversion to pass the note to any one else. Beers v. Culver, 1 Hill (N. Y.) 589; Perkins v. Ament, 2 Head (Tenn.) 110; Hickerson v. Raiguel, 2 Heisk. (Tenn.) 329. See Sherwin v. Brigham, 39 Ohio St. 137.

See the preceding notes to this section, with regard to instruments intended for discount at a particular bank.

But the fact that a certain person is made payee of the instrument does not of itself establish that it was intended to pass to him alone, Meeker v. Shanks, 112 Ind. 207; Laub v. Rudd, 37 Iowa 617; Perkins v. Ament, 2 Head (Tenn.) 110; nor does the fact that at the time that the accommodation party signed the instrument the party accommodated stated that he wanted to get the note discounted at a particular bank. Montross v. Clark, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 115.

Paper Negotiated to Party Accommodated.—Where the accommodation party supposed that the plaintiff was to be the accommodated party, the fact that the instrument is negotiated to the plaintiff as collateral security for an antecedent debt constitutes a diversion. Yale v. Dart (C. Pl.), 19 N. Y. Supp. 389.
